THE WISCONSIN STATE MEETING.

It is announced by the Secretary that the annual convention of the Wisconsin State Christian Association will be held in Delavan, Walworth Co., October 11th to 13th. The General Secretary of the N. C. A., Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and Past Master Ronayne are invited and will probably attend. Let immediate steps be taken by every local association or reform church to send a delegation; and let the questions to be settled at that meeting be discussed as much as possible beforehand through every available channel.

CONVENTION AT SANDY LAKE, PA.

The Western Pennsylvania Christian Association will hold its first anniversary meeting in the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Sandy Lake, Mercer Co., Pa., commencing on Tuesday, October 31st, at 7 o'clock P. M., and continue over the two following days. Rev. A. M. Milligan [illegible] and Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D.D., [illegible]ttsburgh, and other distinguished speakers will be present and address the Convention.

Free entertainment will be provided for all who come. Let the friends of Christ come up to give help against the Masonic anti-Christ. Let the lovers of republican liberty rally for the overthrow of Masonic despotism. Let the friends of law and order come and plead for impartial justice against the sworn favoritism of the lodge. Gather from all over western Pennsylvania and may the Lord of Hosts be with us

By order of the Executive Committee.
REV. C. F. HAWLEY, Cor. Sec.

Bro. C. B. Remington, Financial Agent for Michigan, writes:

"J. L. Barlow and myself are now wholly engaged on the war path, and do not know the exact time when we shall meet with Masonic argument such as J. P. Stoddard and Hinman have met. Still we are confident that they will have to have a large supply of eggs to make a thorough covering. We should be pleased to hear from our friends of Michigan in regard to lectures, for we want to accomplish all we possibly can before our year is up."

The special fund for sustaining our agent at the Centennial and keeping him supplied with tracts for his work should not be overlooked by our friends. Its importance at this juncture of our reform cannot be over-estimated. Never probably will there be such another opportunity in your lifetime or mine to reach the utter-most parts of the earth at an expense so trifling. Will not friends visiting the Exposition at such greatly reduced rates on the railroads consecrate a tithe of the money thus saved to the Lord in this work, handing their contributions to Bro. Hodge at his stand in the main building or sending direct to the office of the National Christian Association. All such contributions will be promptly reported in the Cynosure and applied as the donor shall direct, either to the expenses of our agent or for tracts. J. P. STODDARD.

Topics of the Time.

It has been widely reported and believed that Gov. Hayes was lately elected member of the "American Alliance," the latest name assumed by the American Protestant Association, alias Patriotic Sons of America, a secret society framed to oppose Jesuitism with jesuitry; and that he had written them a letter of thanks. It will be a source of gratification to thousands to know that the story is denied in a letter from Mr. Hayes' private secretary. The Republican nominee needs no bolstering of that kind to gain votes, or to establish a reputation as an opponent of the wiles of Romanism. And as for secret orders let us hope he has had enough of them whether he is ever elected or not.

The Chicago Tribune publishes a long letter from Hon. Bluford Wilson reviewing the late jail delivery of the whisky ring thieves by order of the President and Attorney General. He considers the pardon of Hesing and Miller, who with Rehm were the political members of the ring, as a grave mistake and shows at length the reason why. It seems well enough established that the prosecution of the ring was a failure in Chicago and we have pointed out the Masonic connection of the government prosecutors and most of the whisky ring as a sufficient explanation of the failure. U. S. Attorney Bangs indeed testified that the effort of the prosecution was only to break up the ring; to punish its members for crime was a consideration which was pocketed and never brought up. Judge Blodgett could hardly restrain his indignation to find Bangs, Dexter and their Masonic coteric interfering with justice by bargaining with the ring for its immunity. It is on the basis of this base bargain that pardons have been granted to all but Rehm; and on the same ground the prosecution of the cases first indicted was wholly given up. This last trade was the broadest force. Emory Storrs, Babcock's counsel in St. Louis and the leading lawyer for the defense here, who worked long and hard at Washington to get these pardons granted, was appointed prosecutor for the government. When these cases, numbering over a score, came up the, defense moved that they be abandoned and Storrs agreed without an "if" or a "but."

Tne blowing up of a sunken rock in the East River, New York, on Sabbath week was the occasion of a great sensation in that city. The reef had been honey-combed in all directions by mining, and fifty thousand pounds of dynamite furnished the tremendous force to crush its strong back to atoms. The United States began the work of excavation in 1869, and the little daughter of Gen. Newton, the engineer in charge, touched the electric key that completed it. The object is to remove a dangerous obstruction to navigation, and some are sanguine enough to believe it will wonderfully affect ocean travel by opening a shorter route. The inhabitants of the upper portion of the city anticipated an earthquake shock, and great damage. They were happily disappointed, not even the window glass being broken, though the blast did its work thoroughly. Great, however, as the rejoicing may be at the completion of this great work, that it was done on the Sabbath was an evil that mars the whole. Scores of thousands crowded to the place, and for the whole population the day of rest was rudely broken into by government authority. The Daily Witness justly says of this crime against the laws of God and of nature: "There is a time foretold, in Scripture when sinners shall call on the mountains and rocks to fall upon them, and there will be great crowds there. There is also a special woe pronounced against him that causeth another to sin. What shall be said then of those who are responsible for causing yesterday's wholesale Sabbath-breaking."

Rev. Mr. Wardner, the Wesleyan evangelist now laboring in Tennessee, writes to the American Wesleyan, "I believe the colored people of the South are the worst lied-to people on the face of the earth, both on politics and religion." He specifies the misrepresentation practiced upon the ignorant and confiding freedmen by some ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church for the purpose of proselyting. He urges reasonably the enlarging of the Wesleyan Methodist work in the South, that its principles may be spread; and referring to the dark winding of the coils of secretism around these people he says: "We want men who can be relied upon, who would not take missionary money to pay their initiation fee into an Odd-fellows lodge."

SKETCHES OF SUMMER TRAVEL.

NEW YORK — TARRYTOWN — PHILADELPHIA.

A pleasant ride from New York of about an hour, by rail, along the eastern bank of the Hudson, brings us to Tarrytown, a place of no particular business importance, but noted for its fine scenery and beautiful building sites. Many men of wealth from the city and elsewhere, have erected on these elegant mansions, some of which, peering above trees on the top of high hills, present a most picturesque appearance, That of Bierstadt, the painter, is conspicuous among them. The Hoe brothers, inventors of the improved printing press, reside in this place; also Mr. Wm. E. Dodge, the great temperance worker; also Mr. Harvey, who was at one time quite active in getting into operation the elevated railway of New York. Mr. Graves, who has made a great fortune in the manufacture of wall paper in New York, has spent vast sums of money in improving his extensive grounds here. An artificial lake, stocked with black and white swans, a deer park, an aviary, a tower 125 feet high, with a winding iron staircase, located on a high point of land, and quite an amount of statuary, are among the attractions his place affords. He has also a fine collection of paintings, and has built a play house for his children which is said to be a marvel in the taste displayed in its construction, and in the completeness of its arrangements. The care and expense of keeping up such an establishment must detract much from the pleasure a few months summer residence affords. But it furnishes quite a pleasant drive for the many people of leisure who spend the season here, and in that way ministers to the public good. Broadway, the principal street of the place, furnishes a drive of indefinite length, being a continuation of Broadway in Troy, and extending on to Broadway, New York—the old stage road.

A ride of about two miles south, partly on this road, to Irvington, and then through "Sleepy Hollow," brings us to "Sunnyside," the Dutch mansion of the late Washington Irving. The building is old and antiquated, but being covered and festooned with trumpet-flower vines of immense growth, presents an attractive but rather desolate appearance. It is at present uninhab-ited, the nieces to whom the property was bequeathed, we are told, finding it too lonely for occupancy. There is a beautiful green lawn and bank on the side fronting the Hudson, and the scenery is very fine. We think this must have been the favorite spot of the gifted author—where his rustic chair was placed, and many happy hours spent during the last years of his life. He died Nov. 28th, 1859, aged 76 years.

But there is another spot in this vicinity, around which very different memories cluster. It is marked by a plain, weather-stained, marble monument, on a ridge of land above the Hudson, near the business part of Tarrytown. Here, in 1780, Major Andre was captured. He was returning on horse-back to New York after his interview with the traitor, Arnold, having in his boots papers from him, that would enable Gen. Clinton, without difficulty, to get possession of West Point, a most important post, the key of communication between the Eastern and Southern States. Thus an event that might have changed the whole face of affairs, and must at any rate have been most disastrous to the American cause, was averted by a kind Providence. One cannot help a feeling of sadness at the tragic fate of the young and gifted Andre, or of contempt at Arnold, who, next to Judas Iscariot, has well earned the approbrious epithet of "traitor." The churches in this place are the Dutch Reformed, Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopal and Catholic. Notwithstanding the surrounding wealth, some of them are not as well supported as their needs require, and there is no special religious interest. The transient nature of the population is an obstacle with which they have to contend. Some noble Christian women are laboring, with some success, to raise the standard of holy living, and their weekly meetings are of great interest. As all things must have an end, so our delightful visit here comes to a close all too soon, and we are off for Philadelphia.

The great Exhibition, with its fine buildings, and tasteful general arrangements, and its flags waving welcome, is soon spread out before us. But to attempt a description is beyond our power. Indeed, to do justice to it, weeks of study would be required and a volume filled. We can only glance at a few things that interested us during our stay, and which some of your readers who have not the privilege of going, may like to hear. One of the things that struck us with surprise, was the vast amount of ore which had been taken from the bowels of the earth in widely separated districts and brought here at an immense expense of time, strength and money. Huge masses of iron, lead, silver, copper and gold ore, plumbago, antimony, gypsum, mica, cinnabar, marble, coal, etc., abounded. It was interesting to look at these in their native state and then observe the transforming hand of man, which, after separating the pure metal from the dross, had wrought out of them articles of utility and beauty. We learned in our school-days that iron was the most useful of all metals, but our ideas on this subject were enlarged exceedingly on a visit to Machinery Hall, where machines of every kind and description, adapted to all ends and purposes, and all supplied with moving power by the great Corliss engine, give ocular demonstration of the variety of uses to which the skill of man has applied this metal. The gold and silver, too, purified from dross, shone forth in the beautiful watches and tea sets, and with pearls, diamonds, and precious stones, glittered in the jewelry so lavishly displayed. In one place the marble lay in its native state, so cold and compact, and in another, not far distant, it was wrought by the hand of the sculptor into almost breathing forms of human beauty. In the Russian department, were huge specimens of the malachite stone, and, near by, slabs of the same, which, highly polished, and presenting a surface of beautifully variegated green, formed the tops and tables of stands, set in gilt frames. One of them was marked $900 and another $1,900. Mantles and other articles were also made from it.

Every variety of wool and cotton from all parts of the earth, could be seen in the raw state, and then the manner of converting these into carpets and clothing, was exhibited, while the finished goods abounded everywhere. The process of silk culture was developed from the hatching of the egg, the metamorphose of the worm in the cocoon to the forming of the thread, and then in the Woman's Department a weaving machine was constantly turning off strips of ribbon, mottoes and neckties. There were stuffed specimens of all the fine fur-coated animals, and the skins of the same dressed and hung up, while in the main building was a splendid display of articles made from them.

We will just allude briefly to a few of the leading articles exhibited by some of the different nations as seen in a walk through the main building. The Orange States have ostrich feathers, birds of every hue, and an enormous elephant tusk. Italy, painting and sculpture, not equal to our expectations. China, fine carving on ivory and wood and curious miniature pagodas and towers and vases. Japan, beautiful gold and lacquer work and embroidery on silk. Norway and Sweden, a great display of iron and shipping, and life-like scenes in the domestic life of the latter, also furs and linen goods. Great Britain, carpets, tiling and stone-ware. Of her colonies Australia is prominent, having within her small enclosure a most interesting display of mineral wealth, hides, fruits, nuts, specimens of wood, and the finest of grain and wool. There were fac-similes of nuggets of gold, one of which weighed 2195 oz., worth $43,900. Maps of the country and adjacent islands were hung round, and we thought the place decidedly dangerous for those liable to Australian fever. Canada has a fine show of minerals and wood. A pyramid covered with gold, represents the amount of gold Great Britain has obtained from her mines in Columbia. France has silks and merinos. Russia sits as a queen among the nations, which is a surprise to those in the habit of looking upon her dominion as a cold, desolate region, destitute of modern improvements. She must be taking strides forward. Her display of furs is magnificent and her silks and gold and silver cloth unrivaled; some of the latter is fifty dollars per yard. Even in light summer goods she excels. Of her malachite articles we have spoken; her amber specimens are beautiful. Germany has a great papal display of cardinals and church dignitaries arranged around the Saviour on the cross. We thought the place unsuitable for such an exhibition. Spain and Portugal have silks, saddles, pottery, glass-ware, jewelry, etc. Brazil has mineral specimens. The United States has the fruit of her mills, rubber work, clothing from Wanamaker's house, Phila., and an elegant display of silver and glass-ware and drugs.

We were glad to find after much hunting, the place devoted to anti-secret publications, where Mr. Hodge is doing so noble a work, and regretted not finding him, that we might bid him God-speed.

We found in the Woman's Pavilion much to admire; exquisite specimens of lace and needle-work, worsted work, flowers and specimens of embroidery and drawings executed by Queen Victoria and her daughters.

But as we are already too long, we will close with a notice of the Kansas house, which we should judge represents a live State, having at least one live woman in it. The inside of the main room is adorned quite artistically with quantities of stalks of corn, wheat and other grain. A fountain dispenses coolness in the center, and tastefully arranged around is a splendid display of native products. There is a great collection of stuffed birds, mineral specimens, silk cocoons, fruit and vegetables, etc. One wing is devoted to Colorado, and one side of this is filled with huge rocks, which form a ground-work for a display of native animals, which have been all killed and stuffed by Mrs. Maxwell, who also arranged this department. There is a panther on a high rock, just ready to pounce upon a stricken deer. Many deer, foxes and other animals are arranged among the rocks, and there is a running rill of water and a small grotto. The lady herself is in the house, but we see only her photograph. We think Kansas is her home. H. W. P.

"Cease Firing!" or the Bishop's Joke.

We give the following story which shows what Indiana may expect if she ceases firing before the presidential election is decided. Bishop Polk, the hero, was probably a Mason, and understood Masonic tricks thoroughly; and perhaps the Indiana colonel did not show the Golden Circle sign. But be this as it may, we would recommend to Indiana regiments not to cease firing, nor to aim obliquely, but to aim directly at the lodge and to continue the fire in spite of high priests or bishops until the enemy lay down their arms.

The story is told by Col. Freemantle, of the English Coldstream Guards, who visited some of the rebel armies during the war, and heard the Bishop narrate his exploit as follows:

I got out of General Polk the story of his celebrated adventure with the——Indiana (Northern) regiment, which resulted in the almost total destruction of that corps. I had often during my travels heard officers and soldiers talking of this extraordinary feat of the "Bishop's." The modest yet graphic manner in which Gen. Polk related this wonderful instance of coolness and bravery was extremely interesting, and I now repeat it, as nearly as I can, in his own words:

"Well, sir, it was at the battle of Perryville, late in the evening—in fact it was almost dark when Liddell's brigade came into action. Shortly after its arrival I observed a body of men whom I believed to be Confederates, standing at an angle to this brigade and firing obliquely at the newly arrived troops. I said, 'Dear me, this is very sad, and must be stopped;' so I turned round, but could find none of my young men, who were absent on different messages; so I determined to ride myself and settle the matter. Having cantered up to the colonel of the regiment which was firing I asked him in angry tones what he meant by shooting his own friends, and I desired him to cease doing so at once. He answered with surprise, 'I don't think there can be any mistake about it, I am sure they are the enemy.' 'Enemy!' I said, 'why I have only just left them myself. Cease firing, sir; what is your name, sir?' 'My name is Colonel ——, of the —— Indiana; and pray, sir, who are you?'

"Then, for the first time, I saw to my astonishment, that he was a Yankee, and that I was in the rear of a regiment of Yankees. Well, I saw there was no hope but to brazen it out; my dark blouse and the increasing obscurity befriended me, so I approached quite close to him and shook my fist in his face, saying, 'I'll soon show you who I am, sir; cease firing, sir, at once.' I then turned my horse and cantered slowly down the line, shouting in an authoritative manner to the Yankees to cease firing; at the same time I experienced a disagreeable sensation, like screwing up my back, and calculating how many bullets would be between my shoulders every moment. I was afraid to increase my pace until I got to a small copse, when I put the spurs in and galloped back to my men. I immediately went up to the nearest colonel, and said to him, 'Colonel, I have reconnoitered those fellows pretty closely and I find there is no mistake who they are; you may get up and go at them.' And I assure you, sir, that the slaughter of that Indiana regiment was the greatest I have ever seen in the war."

How the Lodge Disposes of Private Offences.

It was a Sabbath morning just fifty years and three weeks from the first day of the present week when Nicholas G. Chesebro, of Canadaigua, N. Y., and Master of the Masonic lodge of that place, applied to Jeffrey Chipman, a magistrate of the same town, for a warrant. Chesebro came to the office with a man named Ebenezer C. Kingsley, who made complaint against a certain William Morgan for having taken away a shirt and cravat which he had borrowed of Kingsley — a grave offense surely! The magistrate issued the warrant upon the oath of Kingsley, directing it to Chesebro, who was one of the coroners of Ontario county, N. Y., and handed it to him. Chesebro immediately with a constable named Holloway Hayward and other parties, Henry Howard, Harris Seymour, Moses Roberts and Joseph Scofield, all Freemasons of Canadaigua, left that place for Batavia, a town about forty miles west in the same State. They started about ten o'clock in the morning in an extra stage hired by Chesebro.

The party were joined by four other persons, all Freemasons, at different places, before they reached Batavia. They stopped to take supper at James Ganson's house, in Stafford, six miles east of Batavia. Doctor Samuel S. Butler, of Stafford, was then introduced to some of the party and informed that they had a warrant for Morgan. Doctor Butler went to Batavia the same evening and was requested to inform Nathan Follett, and William Seaver, then Master of the Batavia lodge, that the party were coming. He did so, and on his return met the Canandaigua party about two miles from Batavia, and informed Ganson that Follett had sent to them not to come. The stage turned about, the party that originally started from Canandaigua went into Batavia on foot, and the remainder returned. The next morning early Morgan was arrested and taken to the public house where the party had slept; an extra stage coach was procured and the party left Batavia for Canandaigua with Morgan in their custody. Miller attempted to procure the release of Morgan, just as the carriage was starting, but he was pushed aside and the coach was driven off very fast; Chesebro being on the outside with the driver and urging him to drive fast until they should get out of the county. The driver appeared to feel uneasy about the proceedings, but was pacified by Ganson's assurance that he would save him harmless from all responsibility. Chesebro repeatedly looked back and said they should not take Morgan alive. They arrived at Canandaigua with Morgan the same day, and in the evening took him before the magistrate who issued the warrant, by whom he was examined and discharged; Loton Lawson appearing as a witness on behalf of Morgan. Chesebro then immediately applied to the same magistrate for a warrant against Morgan for a debt of about two dollars, claimed to be due from him to Aaron Ackley, a tavern keeper, which debt, Chesebro alleged, was assigned to him. Judgment was entered against Morgan for two dollars and sixty-nine cents, debt and costs, and an execution immediately issued which was put into the hands of Halloway Hayward, then present. Morgan took off his coat and offered it to the constable to levy upon for the debt. The constable declined receiving it and arrested Morgan and committed him to the jail of Canandaigua the same evening on the execution. He remained in custody in the Canandaigua jail until the evening of the next day.

Immediately after Morgan was committed to jail, Loton Lawson, a farmer residing near Canandaigua, procured a horse and went to Rochester the same night, a distance of twenty-eight miles, and returned the next morning a little after breakfast. He went to bed soon after his return, and informed the innkeeper where he slept that some gentlemen from Rochester would call for him in the course of the day. On the 12th of September Burrage Smith and John Whitney, of Rochester, took the stage from that place in the morning for Canandaigua. They were joined by James Gillis at Victor, ten miles distant from Canandaigua, and all three arrived at the latter place early in the afternoon of the same day. Smith and Whitney called upon Loton Lawson in the evening of the same day, September 12th; Loton Lawson called at the jail a little after dark, and asked for William Morgan. The jailor was absent and Lawson informed the jailor's wife that he wished to pay the debt for which Morgan was confined and take him away. Mrs. Hall (the jailer's wife) declined to accept the amount of the execution on the ground that she did not know the amount, and also refused to permit Lawson to have any private conversation with Morgan. Lawson asked Morgan, however, in the presence of Mrs. Hall, if he would go home with him if he would pay the debt and take him out, to which Morgan answered that he would. Lawson then expressed great anxiety to get Morgan out that night; and pressed Mrs. Hall to receive the amount of the debt; which she still declined.

Lawson went out and returned soon with another person, whom Mrs. Hall cannot identify, and insisted on her receiving the amount of the execution. Mrs. Hall peremptorily refused. He went away and returned again, reiterating his request with the same effect. He went away again and soon returned with Edward Sawyer, who advised Mrs. Hall to receive the amount of the debt and let Morgan go. She still refused. She subsequently consented to discharge Morgan at the request of Nicholas G. Chesebro, who was the real plaintiff in the execution, and took the keys of the prison for the purpose of opening Morgan's cell. Before she opened the cell Lawson gave a single whistle at the front door which brought a man to the jail steps. Morgan's cell was unlocked; he came out and Lawson took him by his arm and went toward the door of the prison hall which was unlocked by a person on the outside, and they went out. Before they left the jail steps Morgan was seized with violence by Lawson and the person who was called there by his whistle. Morgan struggled, and cried "Murder!" once or twice, resisting as much as possible; and in the struggle his hat fell off. Edward Sawyer and Nicholas G. Chesebro were waiting near the jail steps; and when the struggle commenced they followed Morgan and the two men who were with him, and who were going eastwardly from the jail. Chesebro came up with them and stopped Morgan's outcry by thrusting a handkerchief or something similar into his mouth. Sawyer gave a distinct rap upon the curb of a well, at which signal Hiram Hubbard drove up with a two horse carriage, which had been harnessed and was in waiting for the purpose. He overtook the party having Morgan in their possession a few rods east of the jail, when two of them thrust Morgan into the carriage and then got in themselves. The carriage immediately turned around and drove through Canandaigua, Main street, northerly. This was about nine o'clock in the evening and it was a bright, moonlight night. Loton Lawson, Burrage Smith, John Whitney, James Gillis, and probably one or two other persons whose names are not known, either rode in or accompanied the carriage containing Morgan. It would seem that this carriage was accompanied most of the distance by outriders, either on horseback or in some separate conveyance. A sulky, with a man in it, started from Canandaigua just after the carriage drove through the street, for which it appeared to have been waiting for some time; it drove past the carriage about three miles from Canandaigua, and stopped at Victor over night. At Victor the carriage containing Morgan and the party with him drove into Enos Gillis' yard, back of his barn, and out of sight from the road; and the party remained there about an hour and took some refreshment. James Gillis here took a horse from his brother's stable, and it would also seem that one other of the party accompanied or preceded the carriage on horseback when it left Victor. On the morning of the 13th of September, between four and five o'clock, Ezra Platt, a livery stable keeper in Rochester, and a Royal Arch Mason, was called upon for a carriage to go to Lewiston, and requested it to be sent to Ensworth's tavern in the village. Platt has sworn that he did not know who it was that called or who wanted the carriage. He called up Orson Parkhurst, one of his drivers, who is also a Mason, and directed him to prepare the carriage. Platt charged the hire of the carriage, as he has sworn, to the "Grand Chapter, pro tem." He has not yet received his pay for such a singular charge.

Dr. Mackey Weds Freemasonry to Solomon.

BY J. W. RAYNOR.

Editor of Cynosure:—The following quotations from Mackey's Lexicon and Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, show that this vicious secret order claims to have originated with Solomon at the building of the Temple:

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 31: "Freemasonry is in its principles undoubtedly co-eval with the creation, but in its organization as a peculiar institution, such as it now exists we dare not trace it further back than to the building of King Solomon's Temple."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 57: "As the standard or banner of Freemasonry is thus made up of, and derived from the banner of the four leading tribes of Israel, (viz: Judah, Ephraim, Reuben and Dan) the combination of them in the Masonic banner is only intended to indicate the Jewish origin of our institution from Solomon, who was the last King of Israel under whom the twelve tribes were united."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 120: "All Masonic lodges, like their great prototype, the Temple of Jerusalem, are built, or supposed to be built, due East and West, and as the North is esteemed a place of darkness, the East, on the contrary, is considered a place of light."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 161: (Art "Gavel,") "Hence, too, we see the propriety of adopting the gavel as the instrument for maintaining order in the lodge. For, as the lodge is an imitation of the Temple, and each member represents a stone thereof, so, by the influence of the gavel, [i. e., a stone hammer] all the ubolitions of temper, and the indecorum of frivolity are restrained, as the material stones of that building [i. e., the Temple] were by the same instrument, divested of their asperities and imperfections."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 188: "Mt. Moriah on which the Temple of Solomon was built, is symbolically called the Ground Floor of the lodge, and hence it is said that the lodge rests on holy ground."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 317: "I find the connection between the Ancient Mysteries and Freemasonry commencing at the building of King Solomon's Temple."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 381: "The three principal officers of the lodge represent respectively Solomon, Hiram of Tyre, and Hiram Abiff; and in the first three degrees the drama or ritual ceremony has reference to the Temple, as is also the case in some of the higher degrees.

Reform News.

The Illinois Wesleyan Conference and Secretism.

Clinton, Wis., Sept. 25.

The Illinois Annual Conference of the Wesleyan connection convened at Sugar Creek, Wisconsin, on Wednesday, Sept. 20th, and continued until a late hour on Saturday evening, the 23d. Having had the honor of attending and participating in its discussions, I desire to report briefly so much of its action as relates to the special reform in which we are engaged.

It will be remembered that the General Conference at Sycamore, Illinois, on the last day of its session voted to change the rule on secret societies so as to be prohibitory to all secret societies. The long and able discussion on this subject in the General Conference will be remembered by all who heard it. After the adjournment of the General Conference it was discovered that at the time of the final action on this question a quorum was not present, and hence that the action was invalid. Accordingly the Champlain Conference, in order to settle the question, voted that the rule be so changed as to prohibit membership in all secret societies and sent its action to the other annual conferences for their concurrence. The subject was brought before the Ill. Annual Conference in the following manner:

Rev. J. M. Snyder moved that a committee be appointed to whom should be referred the action of the Champlain Conference, and accordingly the Chair appointed Rev. J. M. Snyder, Rev. D. W. Bond and Bro. J. Bradley. This committee made two reports, the majority recommending that no action be taken on the subject at present, and the minority that the Conference dissent from the action of the Champlain Conference on the ground that it is inexpedient and unjust.

A motion being made for the adoption of the majority report, Rev. D. W. Bond made a few remarks favoring a more stringent rule, but advising for the present that no action be taken. H. H. Hinman opposed adopting the report. He thought we ought to stand by the Word of God, and that condemned all secret societies. It was never intended that an organized church should receive to its membership all persons whom we might hope to be Christians, but only such as are consistent Christians. There are Universalists, Roman Catholics, Mormons and Freemasons whom we hope and believe to be Christians, but no one proposes to have a rule that shall take them all into the church. Membership in any seccret society is inconsistent with the principles of the Gospel: 1st. Because it requires conformity to an unknown obligation, which is distinctly prohibited by the spirit and letter of the Word. (Lev. v: 4, 5.) 2d. Because it forbids candor and Christian simplicity and tends to divide the family and the church. 3d. Membership in any secret society is a practical endorsement of all other secret societies.

At this stage Rev. G. P. Riley moved as a substitute for the majority report the action of the Champlain Conference be concurred in, and on the question of its adoption Rev. J. M. Snyder made a long and able address. He thought the action sought for by the Champlain Conference to be improper and wrong; that it originated in a spirit of fanaticism which had ever been the bane of the church; that the rule as it is, prohibiting Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship had worked well; that there is but a little handful of Grangers and Good Templars in the church, and the evil would soon be removed if they had patience, without any change of the rule; but he objected to a change: 1st. Because it violates a fundamental rule in the Wesleyan denomination, which declares that no person shall be deprived of membership who loves the Lord Jesus and obeys his Gospel; that membership in a Good Templar's lodge or in the Grange was not a sin per se, and hence should not be a bar to membership. 2d. That to make a new rule of membership was to make a new church, and to tear down the spiritual temple raised with so much toil and suffering, and pull it down on the heads of those who had reared it. 3d. That it was injudicious and inexpedient. 4th. That it was in bad faith.

Rev. Wm. Pinckney approved the report as it now stood, but for the sake of harmony offered a substitute slightly modifying the action sought for, which was lost; yeas 9, nays 11.

Rev. U. B. Lathrop addressed the Convention in an able and earnest manner. He thought it no breach of faith to change any rule of the church if changed in a legitimate way; for every member joined with the distinct understanding that every rule will be changed if occasion requires. He held that the time had come when we needed a change; there had been new light thrown on this question and it had brought with it new responsibilities, and that the church was to keep step with the onward march of events. He thought membership in these minor societies was wrong because it implied fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, and took away the capacity to reprove them; for every member of the Grange who reproved Freemasonry was like a beer drinker reproving intemperance; his mouth was closed. He thought such members were unequally yoked with unbelievers, and that whatever they might think of these societies they were bound to abstain from them because their connection was an offence to the brethren.

Bro. Wm. Loomis opposed the report. He was a Good Templar and thought it an innocent and useful institution. He thought any change in the rule would greatly injure the church.

Bro. Wood said he had been Dist. Deputy Grand Worthy Chief Templar, and he thought the lodge was doing more for temperance than the church. The first step was to get men into the lodge and then bring them to Christ.

Rev. G. P. Riley thought if this was the case we might dispense with the church and depend on the lodge to save men. He said it had been conceded by those who opposed the report that these minor forms of secretism are an evil which the present rule is calculated to cure and there could be no wrong in prohibiting an evil, and speedily effecting a cure.

Rev. Wm. Spencer spoke earnestly against any change in the rule as inexpedient, unjust and calculated to divide and destroy the church.

Rev. Wm. VanDoren spoke briefly. He said the action proposed was just what the Ill. Annual Conference had one year ago instructed him to vote for, and just what the General Conference had (in substance) unanimously adopted. The rule as it now stands is of doubtful interpretation. and the General Conference had voted unanimously to interpret it as forbidding membership in any secret society, and now we propose to do legally what was resolved to be done in an irregular manner. It was just to all that we should have a rule on this subject of no doubtful character.

Rev. A. R. Brooks, Rev. W. W. Stewart and Rev. J. P. Spaulding spoke briefly giving their reasons for voting in the negative; when the vote being called by yeas and nays thirteen voted in the affirmative and ten in the negative.

I have sketched very imperfectly this most interesting discussion, and would add that a beautiful spirit of brotherly love pervaded the Conference, and that they united in the Lord's Supper on Sabbath after a most excellent sermon by Bro. Snyder, and on Sabbath ensuing ten dear young people came forward for prayers and found the Lord.

Yours for Christ.

"Who is E. Ronayne?"—The Question Answered at Ames, Iowa.

The great event of the season at Ames, has been the three lectures of Mr. E. Ronayne exposing the false pretentions and blasphemy of Masonry. It is now more evident than ever to us all, that, not one man in fifty, in the bar, on the platform, "on the stump," in the pulpit, is fit for his work! That E. Ronayne is master of his subject, all men, friend or foe, must and do admit. No man in Ames, no champion of Masonry here or in the vicinity, could be found to stand for a moment before him, or he would have been produced. For sound argument and unanswerable logic and conclusive debate; for point and power and piercing wit; for readiness and perspicuity; for making points and clinching them by ready proof, he has few if any equals. The howls of Masonry, the low attack on his character under the caption of this article by our city editor, only confirms this. It is the truth that cuts, and rends, and kills! The true question is not, "Who is E. Ronayne?" or what his character, —he is not on trial. Masonry is; and God himself raised up and qualified this man to combat, if not to kill it!

The question is, did he tell the truth about Masonry? Was he master of his subject and his audience? Did the large audience in the Congregational church, kindly lent for the occasion, hang enraptured on his words for hours during three successive nights? Did he clearly show how Jesus Christ was excluded from the rituals and the lodge? How Masonry stole not our money, (a comparatively small matter,) but our Savior,—under false pretenses? How it promoted infidelity, interfered with justice, opening prisons for the escape of the worst criminals when Masons,—"Murder and treason not excepted;"—and especially degraded the Gospel ministry beneath contempt? "What God hates, men come presently to hate too," says an old proverb; and if God hates not Masonry he hates no evil. But that term, "presently," answers the question as to Ronayne, "If Masonry is such a monster evil,such a blasphemy, such a crime against God and man, why did you not leave it sooner?" He did "presently;" he did when he saw the light and found the "Truth!" "He bought the truth and sold it not!" He did as did Martin Luther in leaving Romanism, and Charles G. Finney Masonry. My brother, are you a Mason and a Christian? "Go thou and do likewise!" Don't stay longer than Ronayne! Do you, can you deny that this is "The temple of idols," not of God—"a most unfruitful work of darkness?" Obey the command, "Walk in the light as He is in the light, and ye shall have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ shall cleanse you from all sin!" O see you not how that "accursed thing" rises up as "a middle wall of partition" against fraternal, Christian fellowship, between you and holiness, between you and the "cleansing?"

What does the Divine law require in case of such deception as leads multitudes to take these false Masonic oaths? Let us read it in Lev. v. 4-5: "Or if a soul swear with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing"!! This Ronayne obeys. The next verse enjoins to repair the wrong, "A trespass offering, a lamb or kid of the goats;" Ronayne does much better,—renders his "trespass offering" in the Gospel way; exposing Masonry; doing all that in him lies to repair and undo the great wrong he had done to Christ Jesus, to religion and to manhood, and to the vital principles of all our free, American institutions.

Ronayne more than fulfilled all his friends expected of him; did his work and God's, nobly, bravely and well! Indeed we never saw a braver man; it being universally admitted, that it requires, (which many know by experience,) more true courage to face a sneering crowd, a frowning world, than to face death at the cannon's mouth in the bloody fray. 'Oh," (but says our small, sagacious editor,) "his character is in his face!" We admit it. His was a warrior's face, revealing the glorious scars of many a well-fought battle for the right and the true, a face with a warlike captain's character. And when that small editor, and all who think and speak as he, shall have fought Romanism and Masonry for a quarter of a century, or done something or anything to bless mankind, or save their puny names from speedy oblivion after death, they too will show some character in their faces!

It is not necessary that his friends admire E. Ronayne except in his work, or to extol his signal triumph here, only as it glorifies God and Christ, and rescues souls from the "wiles of the devil," and so reaches out into the great, unknown, endless eternity! His exhortations to our ministry so entrapped, for Jesus' sake, for the sake of perishing souls, for the sake of the largest out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, and the widest spread revival, (thus alone possible,) on the next Lord's day to rise like men and publicly confess their sins and repentance, melted some to tears, sending deep convictions home to many a heart, and were never excelled in fervor and power, by any sermons ever uttered in Ames.

If we employ a man to cut our grain, or remove massive rocks away, do we care for a sweet, smooth, smiling face, or for a face and form expressive of manly, giant strength? Was it not for these alone that our two Masonic brethren here tried to bribe a noble man in Ames for $10, to stand at the church door and prevent all entrance on the second night of the lecture? An offer he proudly spurned and threatened death to any man who would touch Ronayne!

The real crime of Ronayne with the Masons is, that he did his work most effectually; he clinched each assertion by standard Masonic proof, and left no place for evasion, quibble or reply. Crime enough; poor Ronayne!

We may add, that we are happy to record, our editor will have for his reward the formation of a large Anti-masonic club in Ames.

FOOTFALLS AMONG THE WOLVERINES.

DEAR K:—Labor after rest. The footfalls of Father Time have carried us swiftly along through the months of July and August, and nigh through September as well—the months of short evenings and days of sweating toil, for our strong-armed, gallant-hearted and hard-handed yeomany;—and now the time has come when food for the body, for man and beast, having been garnered safely, the hungering mind begins to cry for nutriment, and willingly seeks it from pamphlet, paper, book, pulpit and the platform, with all of which my footfalls are hastening, with that mental food for starving minds and that light for blinded eyes without which the people are perishing.

MILLER SETTLEMENT.

On Sabbath, Aug. 13th, I preached at this place, in the M. E. Church, at 5 P. M., to a large and attentive congregation. On my way to the place I was informed that I was expected to lecture on Monday and Tuesday evenings in a school-house near the house of worship where I was to preach. The pastor, Brockway by name, positively refused to give the use of the meeting-house for my lectures, which he annouuced for the school-house at the close of his morning discourse, or during the services. He assured my friends that all was now "quiet" on his field, and he did not want me there to make a row in his church as I had elsewhere. On hearing of this "quiet," my mind immediately ran out after a suitable text from which to give this "quiet" place a sermon; nor did it have far to go to find one. I had a good time on the the occasion, and so did the people, as I endeavored to "improve" from the following words, Jude 3: "Earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to tne saints." After reading my text, I at once plunged into the middle of things by saying: "My friends, this word 'contend' is a militant word, and means fight;" from which I went on to show them that the Christian life was no such "Miss Nancy" affair, as so many seem to suppose it to be, but a genuine warfare, calling into exercise, and finding enough to do for every power of man's triune nature. I reminded them of Christ's saying, "I came not to send peace on the earth; but a sword;" and that his coming did not conduce much to the world's "quiet," in his own days or since; that the very object of his coming, was to drive the devil out of men's hearts, and thus out of the church, and out of the world; and that this work can never be accomplished by keeping "quiet." They were reminded that during our "late unpleasantness," so long as the cry, "all quiet on the Potomac," was heard in the land, the rebellion gained strength; and, not until there was an "advance all along the line," was there a glimmering of hope for the success of our arms. As in this, so in the spiritual warfare. Nor is the Christian to maintain a merely defensive warfare. He must be aggressive! He must not sit behind his defenses, and await an attack; but he must hunt out his enemy and force him from the field. A warrior kept on the defensive, is practically defeated, &c.

I could see while speaking, that the people were moved, but in what direction I could not tell, whether angry or pleased; but the following night cleared up all doubts. So well pleased were my hearers that it was at length determined I should speak in the meeting house, which I did for two evenings to large and ataentive congregations, who, with the exception of the secretists, were well pleased. On Tuesday morning I started out to call on the pastor, whom I had not seen. But he was sharp; he was already on his way to the county seat. I have since noticed that the gentleman has removed to a new field of labor. Perhaps he will lay that all to my charge. Who knows?

DYE SCHOOL HOUSE.

I spoke here on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16th, to an audience composed largely of Free Methodists, who heard the word gladly, and will doubtless profit thereby. The same week I took a trip to Midland Co., stopping off at Freeland station Saturday, from whence, the next morning, I went with Rev. J. H. Lewis to to attend a W. M. quarterly meeting, under the supervision of Rev. M. Fisk, who received me joyfully, and for whom I preached twice, and on Monday and Tuesday evening, lectured on my specialty. Here the secretists are in large numbers, Masons, grangers, Odd-fellows, &c., and these were fearfully stirred up, the grangers especially. Madam Flora was present, and seemed quite enraged, as I informed the audience of the character of the heathen goddess she represented in the grange. But singularly enough, her anger did not seem at all to go out against those who had revived this shred of heathenism, and trapped her into it; but it all fell on my devoted head, who only warned her of the insult. It was nothing to her or hers, that she was thus made to take the place and name of a vile woman. She was only angry that it should be known. Queer! isn't it?

After my first lecture the craft undertook to close the house (a large school-house), the school-director giving orders to the teacher to lock the house and bring away the key. This becoming known, two elderly gentlemen went and sat in the door at the close of school, and told the teacher he could not lock it, nor did he. The enraged director, declared that the house had been caotured and held by a mob! Two old men, and one of them a cripple!! O tempora! O mores! The real mob will appear in my next.

INTERESTING FACTS FROM FRIENDS IOWA MEETING.

LYNNVILLE, Iowa,
Sept. 18th, 1876.

I would have written to thee sooner, giving a sketch of our yearly meeting &c., had not Bro. Stoddard been there, who I presume has given you all a full report ere this. Nevertheless I will say we had a very interesting yearly meeting. Our morning services were very interesting and instructive to all in attendance. Dr. Dugan Clark, of Ind., gave a series of lectures (they might be termed) on justification and sanctification, giving the pure and true outlines of a holy life, which shows clearly to my mind that no man can be wholly sanctified and belong to a Christ-rejecting institution.

On the revision of our discipline, many important points were freely and harmoniously discussed and changed, among which was that any of our members who now belong, or hereafter may join the Masonic fraternity, and remain adhering Masons, are to be dealt with, and unless they submit to our rule they are to be disowned; and I hope that every overseer will attend strictly and in the fear of God to this all-important point. On temperance they came very near passing a clause that liquors should not be used even for mechanical and medicinal purposes. Many of us were encouraged to labor more earnestly both for the downfall of intemperance and secretism. May God help us is my prayer.

Bro. Stoddard spoke nearly two hours in the yearly meeting house, which was densely crowded on second day at 3:30 o'clock, giving the details of the workings and religion of Masonry. I presume that hundreds that were present never before had the privilege of hearing an Anti-masonic lecture. We believe that now a more widely extended interest on this point will be taken. After Bro. S. was through an Odd-fellow gave some of his experience showing the irresistable power that these orders are trying to gain and tear down our Republican government. Bro. Snell of New Sharon gave some history of the trial of the Morgan abductors and said he sat nineteen days on the jury, was well acquainted with Bruce and some of the other scoundrels who helped him (Morgan) off to Fort Niagara.

Bro. Stoddard gave two very interesting lectures at the U. P. Church in the city of Oskaloosa, in which general good order prevailed, and your humble servant gave out tracts, Cynosures, &c., and sold all the Morgan and Ronayne expositions I had, and think I could have sold a dozen more of each if I had ordered them; other Anti-masonic literature was eagerly sought for. Bro. Vandever of the Iowa Freeman took orders for several books I did not have. Bro. Stoddard got seven or eight subscribers for the Cynosure. So we can say in our hearts, thank God, the work is moving on. More anon,

Center Strafford, N. H., Sept. 24, 1876.

We had a glorious Anti-masonic meeting at Strafford Corner last Friday evening. The house was crowed, the singing excellent, and the attention all that could be asked. The Masons present sweat profusely but kept their jewal, although I begged them to speak if I misstated a single point. Anti-masonic tracts were distributed and books sold as usual. Ronayne's book takes the lead, and those two confirmations in the last Cynosure are just what we need to open the eyes of those who are morally stone blind. S. C. Kimball.

Correspondence.

Our Centennial Letter.

Philadelphia, Sept. 18, 1876.

Through the kindness of Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D.D., editor of the Christian Statesman and his Church, who pay for my entertainment this month, I am now enjoying the comforts of a Christian home at the house of Mrs. Bryan.

When I contrast my remarkably pleasant home with the poor accommodations that thousands here enjoy or have to endure at crowded hotels and boarding houses, I feel like one at home in a cosy parlor when the storm rages without or like one seated in an easy carriage while others are crowded to suffocation in a street car or trying to get a foot hold so as to hang on behind!

Thus far in my experience here I have had, all things considered, fair wind and weather and a pleasant voyage. Possibly a storm may yet arise, but we may safely trust him who overrules all things and can say to the raging billows of men's passions as to the waves of the Sea of Galilee, "Peace, be still." We need not sink if we look to Him from whom our strength cometh. Storms are necessary to purify the atmosphere; so out of the contests of human opinions are frequently evolved the greatest blessings of civil and religious liberty.

What are the Molly Maguires and other secret organizations but exceptional conditions in society? As exceptional as disease to health or malaria to the pure atmosphere, thus exceptional and antagonistic to the best interests of church and State are these secret combinations. A storm like that of yesterday, which uprooted some of the beautiful trees which adorn this city may yet be found necessary to relieve society from these pests. Yet the storm is far better than stagnation, sickness and death. Secrecy is the ally of despotism where it reigns supreme freedom dies.

Rev. Jonas Barnham, Congregationalist, of Farmington Maine, a venerable and faithful servant of Christ, well posted in the past history of Masonry and also Rev. Nathan Callender, gave me words of cheer and the latter left a dollar for the Tract Fund.

A slight of hand trick was played on me by a passer-by. He returned the tracts I handed him with the remark: "I'm posted on that." A Mason thought I, but the bright silver half dollar which was with them changed my opinion.

In proof of what the malaria of secretism can do to paralize freemen and deaden their sense of the value of liberty and justice, I will cite the following: A Freemason on being shown the pamphlet containing the charges made against Judge Whitney before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, for unmasonic conduct in causing the arrest of a brother Mason for murdering a woman at Belvidere, Ill., did not question the fact, but denounced Judge Whitney, and attempted to prove that the lodge had the right to shield its members from punishment for crime. The deluded man seemed surprised that his views of right were indignantly spurned. Another man who examined the same pamphlet, and said he had taken over forty degrees in Masonry, remarked as he walked away: "If any man says that Freemasonry interferes in courts of justice, tell him he lies." By all rules of evidence he would not be considered a disinterested witness. A lawyer from Trinity College, who has studied Freemasonry in the old world, got a copy of Bernard. Tracts are accepted freely, especially in the evening when visitors are on their way out.

Sept. 21st.—There was an inundation of Odd-fellows and New Yorkers yesterday. The grand procession of the I. O. O. F., was a sight intended to make many proselytes to that order. Away with reflection, judgment and common sense, and welcome the happy day when gew-gaws on masculine bipeds shall be admired even as ribbons on girls, and beads on babies! Glorious Centennial! let us rejoice in the charming name of Odd-fellow!

This order forms one of the Grand Divisions of the army of secretists arrayed against the freedom for which our fathers so foolishly left their homes and shed their blood! Alas that these secretists should know not what they do! Civil and religious liberty is endangered and the watchmen are asleep. Let secretism alone for another century and what will the end be? But we are not in despair. We have the Cynosure, and many earnest Christians see the danger, while many now in the ranks of the secret orders themselves, also begin to to realize the child's play or positive wickedness of the various orders and are dropping out of them in large numbers. Not always do we rightly value those kind words which never die, of those who bid us God speed on our way. It gives me pleasure to record the following names of earnest friends of our cause who have called on me lately: Rev. H. N. Bissell, Presbyterian, from Mich., Rev. J. L. Fall, New Paris, Ohio, Messrs Stewart of Tennessee, Bell, of Toledo, Ohio, J. C. Telford of Penna. Mr. Irving of Canada, J. M. Shellebarger of Iowa, E. Acker of Kansas, D. Chesnut of Pittsburgh, Pa., and J. P. Coulter. Thus from all quarters there are those who testify against secretism.

Sept. 23d.—In spite of a heavy rain this forenoon the crowd seems about the same as usual to-day. A man of about thirty claimed that Freemasonry was Christian, and at first pronounced the lodge better than the church, but backed down to "As good.' He however, refused to declare his belief in Christ as a crucified Saviour, yet seemed surprised that I would not acknowledge that he was a Christian. So much for Masonic Christianity. Rev. H. Baldrick and wife, of Varick, N. Y., conferred much pleasure by their hearty words of encouragement. Alexander Wood, a lawyer of Ridgeville, Ind., authorizes you to put his name in the list of seceding Masons. President Finney, though dead yet speaketh. I have almost daily testimony to the effectiveness of his book on Masonry. The same is true of Elder Bernard, Stearns, and others. Rev. O. E. Burch, and Messrs. Fisk, Ritchie, Andrews, Anderson, Spencer and others have given words of cheer, but I must not fill up the Cynosure with these names. In contrast I have received calls from a Masonic elder of the Disciple church in this State, and a Congregationalist who would leave the church rather than the lodge. A young man, a Baptist, had seen no harm in Masonry, and wished to be shown any harm in a Masonic prayer printed in Mackey's Ritual. The difficulty was to show him anything in it that was right. It was not in the name of Christ, nor were the petitions asked, such as Christ would approve of. He left, evidently under conviction, but I fear will not follow them. Thomas Hodge.

Masonry in the Courts.—Io wa Ahead!

That Masonry works in the courts, will hardly be denied, yet to what extent its operations extend, most of the people are not aware; cannot be aware. Its workings are secret and if a few facts do come to light, many, and perhaps most of them never see the light. A few things, however, have been uncovered in this county (Bremer) since the anti-secret movement was inaugurated. which the readers of the Cynosure and the world should know.

About a year ago, the present editor of the Shellrock News (Butler Co.,) was editor of the Waverly Republican, and while editor, did frequently publish articles—of his own writing—against the Anti-masons. In one reply to an article in the Bremer county Independent, by an advocate of Anti-masonry, he very positively denied that part of the Master Mason's oath: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will keep a brother M. M.'s secrets when communicated to me as such, murder and treason only excepted and they left to my on election," and the part of the R. A.M.'s oath, "That I will espouse a companion R. A. M.'s cause so far as to extricate him from any difficulty if in my power,' and to apprise him of all approaching danger if in my power," and called the writer a falsifier, libeller, &c.

Shortly thereafter one of the "brothers," a merchant doing business in the building in which is also the Masonic hall in Waverly, failed in business, and was suspected of fraud, swindling his creditors to a vast amount. Quite an excitement was occasioned, so much so that the leading merchants issued a circular to his eastern creditors stating that he had done things crookedly. Masons were very bitter against him of course, and freely talked over the matter, and I heard it frequently asserted by them that he would go to the penitentiary.

Well, our editor—who was also Worshipful Master, and is now, of this same lodge—goes East. But suddenly the merchant is arrested by the U. S. Marshall, sent here for this purpose. He is searched, and on his person is found a letter of which the following is a copy.

Thomas: No show for settlement. The detective is after you. Burn this when read:

W. V. Lucas.

Ah, how true to his obligation! Yes, an editor, a Worshipful Master, and a member of the Grand Jury of the district! What an opportunity and facility for doing the craft service, and he did it—so he is re-elected W. M. of Tyrrell lodge, A. F. and A. M. Waverly, Iowa! But more than this, he is chosen on the grand jury three times in succession I am informed, and not only this but is chosen on the grand jury of U. S. at Dubuque, where this same merchant is brought for trial. Great heavens, what a farce! But our merchant is yet free, and will doubtless remain so. Well, this Worshipful, editor, grand juror, is now nominated as an elector on the Republican ticket from this district. Masons will vote for him. A great many good men will vote for him; but I know one who will keep clear of him, knowing that just such men rule and run the party and the Government.

Fellow citizens, how do you like the complexion? Here is a man, a Worshipful Master in a lodge, an editor, instructing the rising generation in morals, (?) is a grand juror three terms in succession (contrary to the code of Iowa) is a U. S. District Grand Juror before whom is tried the man who he has "apprised of approaching danger;" who still holds the office of W. M. in the lodge and is an elector and on our ticket as an elector, ready to prosti' tute anything to the "good of the order. Perhaps more anon,

Our Mail.

J W. I ogue, Northfield, Ohio, writes:

As a minister I have always opposed secret societies in public and private. * * I have preached against it in at least one special sermon. * * We exclude from our Church, by discipline, both Masons and Grangers. * * We have a Methodist minister here who is chaplain of the neighboring Masonic lodge. I have no intercourse with him and will have none. I simply hate the whole fraternity of secret societies with a perfect loathing."

Let us always hate sin and love sinners, whoever they are. Pray for them and seek to lead them into the narrow way. Separation of the Church from those who will not follow Christ is Scriptural and hence necessary.

B. Williams, Warren, Ill , writes:

"The light is increasing even here. I showed Ronayne's book recently to a Mason and asked him if he had seen it before. He said, 'No; but it looks familiar!' I said, 'You have been there?' 'Yes; but I am done with them; it is no place for an honest man or a Christian.'"

C. Winter, Goulderville, Vt., writes:

"I am surrounded with secretism of various kinds; quite too many, I think, for the good of Christianity and the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom on earth."

Rev. Isaac Bancroft, Belmont, Lafayette Co., Wis., writes:

"I shall vote the Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket if I can get a chance. Is anything being done for a State ticket for Wisconsin? I have been opposed to secret societies ever since the days of Morgan. I was then a boy of eleven years of age."

Thos. J. Muzzy, Wilton Center, Will Co., Ill., sends three new subscribers and writes:

"Sow thy seed in the morning and in the evening withhold not thy hand. That means he who sows his seed betimes will surely have sheaves to gather in due season. I have been sowing seed one year."

O. C. Stoughton, Maquoketa, Ia., writes:

"We are beginning to take courage here; things have a better outlook. The good work is gaining ground. We are making arrangements to get Mr. Ronayne here. * * One day last week I left sixty copies of the Cynosure at different houses as I was driving through the country."

David Peebler, Sodaville, Linn Co., Oregon, writes:

"We are surrounded in this county with all the lodges from the Masons down to the Grangers, and there are very few to say anything against them. I was glad to see in a late paper that there was one man in Halsey, Oregon, who was not ashamed to raise his voice against the old serpent. If we had one such in every town and station in Oregon I would be glad. If we had a man who would lecture I think there might some good be done. There are a great many in Oregon who are opposed to secrecy but they are timid and indifferent about it just as they were forty years ago on the slavery question."

J. G. Trask, Silver City, ——, writes:

"I am thanking God for your paper every hour in the day. It stands with me next to the Bible. The work of reform can never stop while your God-given sheet is before the nation."

Samuel Martin, Parshallville, Mich., writes:

"I am seventy years old. I lived eighteen miles from Canandaigua when Morgan was taken from that place. I became a voter soon after; went into the Anti masonic ranks and remain there to-day and ever. * * Does a man who takes several degrees of Masonry, by his oath bind himself indirectly to murder his fellow man, if ordered to do so by his superiors?"

In answer to the above question, we say he does. On page 196, Webb's Monitor, Rob. Morris says: "The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy or disobedience. * * Right or wrong his very existence as a Mason hangs upon obedienee to the powers immediately set above him." This will be seen to be the case by reading the Master Mason's oath.

Jas. Bullock, College Springs, Page Co., Iowa, writes:

"Two weeks ago I received a letter from David T. Couch, in Australia. He likes your paper. I will try to obtain some new subscriptions soon, if I have to pay for them myself, that the light may shine into some dark places and to prepare the people for a successful Anti-masonic vote in four years' time. There is no use in trying now because the people are not ready. They are not sufficiently enlightened on the subject, and so we are unprepared to vote the Anti-masonic ticket to any purpose but certain defeat. We should patiently work and wait, and get ready and do the best we can by voting the Republican ticket, and so save our country from utter ruin."

Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss., writes:

"I was informed by a leading character among the grangers that all the candidates of the Democratic party of last year, but three were grangers. The most prominent leaders in political affairs were lawyers who were Masons, and we have the same this year I trust the Lord will direct and bless your efforts for the good of our country. Do not be in the least discouraged whatever may be in any place your apparent lack of success. God will doubtless reward those who labor and sacrifice for the overthrow of the works of the wicked one, whether or not their expectations are fulfilled. You will never know till the day of eternity, the good that you have done. I am still unwavering in my opposition to all secret orders and only wish I could do more to advance the cause of truth and light."

Christ has said, "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed: and hid that shall not be known." Matt. x. 26. We trust the time will soon come when the hood-wink shall be removed from the eyes of the American people, and even Masons themselves be set free from the bondage of the lodge. May the good Lord bless brother Ronayne, and his work.

Protecting Horses from Flies. —A French pharmaceutical chemist has discovered a way to protect horses from attacks of flies, according to a London medical paper. His invention consists in rubbing the horses, especially on the part most subject to attack, with a little concentrated oil of laurel. There is not the slightest danger in its use, and the cost is said to be very small. Another repellent, suggested by the same person, is a solution of sixty grammes (one pound and five ounces avoirdupois) of asafœtida in two glasses of water, and one of vinegar. If horses be well washed with this, not a fly will settle upon them, as the odor of the asafœtida drives the flies away. This drug has no deleterious qualities as an external application, and may be used unhesitatingly.

Taking timothy hay as the standard of comparison, it requires 100 pounds of it to supply a certain amount of nourishment. It is estimated by careful experiment that the same amount of nourishment can be obtained by using the following quantities of other food: Clover hay, 95 lbs; rye straw, 355 lbs; oat straw, 220 lbs; potatoes, 195 lbs; carrots, 280 lbs; beets, 346 lbs; ruta bagas, 262 lbs; wheat, 43 lbs: peas, 44 lbs; beans, 46 lbs; rye, 49 lbs; barley, 51 lbs; corn, 56 lbs; oats, 59 lbs; buckwheat, 64 lbs, and oil cake, 54 lbs.

Warts are not only very troublesome, but disfigure the hands. Our readers will thank us for calling their attention to the following perfect cure, even of the largest, without leaving a scar: "Take a small piece of raw beef, steep it all night in vinegar, cut as much from it as will cover the wart, and tie it on, or, if the excrescence is on the forehead, fasten it on with strips of plaster. It may be removed during the day and put on every night. In one fortnight the wart will die and peal off." The same prescription will cure corns.

I have a recipe to prevent the foraging of rabbits on young fruit trees. I have practiced it for eighteen years and I know it to be a specific. I intended to have given it to the public every winter since I proved it by experiment, but somehow I have hitherto failed until yesterday I was reminded of it again by reading a lengthy, troublesome, and expensive remedy. Mine is simple and easy. First catch a rabbit and kill it. I'll guarantee that it will quit its depredations, but its influence is not done yet. Cut it open and take out the bowels, lungs, liver, etc., and rub them on the young trees as high up as a rabbit can reach; when you get through that, cut a piece of the flesh, a quarter for instance, and rub till you get through. One rabbit is sufficient for 500 trees, and it will last all through the winter. I have rubbed them so in November, and a rabbit will not touch it all through the winter, provided you had no tar or grease previously on them.

While all has not been said that could be said in favor of rye for fall, winter and early spring pasturage, enough has been said to convince the most skeptical that it pays. Rye is a hardy and certain crop, and rarely fails. Rye sown early in the fall will endure the winter frosts better than almost any other grain. Another advantage is that it affords such an early and abundant supply of green food in the spring, when it is so much relished by stock. By having a patch of rye adjoining the feed lot, the cattle may be kept yarded longer, and thus give the grasses in the pasture time to get large and strong enough to afford a good and nutritious bite for the stock, and all danger of injury to them, or injury to the land by tramping of it when too wet, will be avoided. By all means sow some winter rye.

Farmers who design to feed either pigs or cattle for market or home consumption are reminded that a bushel of meal fed before the weather is uncomfortably cold is worth two fed after that time for putting on fat. Now is the time to begin. Feed moderately and regularly, and keep the animals as comfortable as possible and quiet. A hundred pounds of meat will cost a great deal less money. A steer or cow intended for the shambles can digest more food than it is likely to get in the pasture now. There are various sources from which supplementary feed may be procured without the use of grain. Fodder corn, fresh mown rowen, turnips or other roots, may be used to good advantage. If nothing else is available, it is better to begin feeding meal.

Many horses are ruined by harsh treatment when they are colts. Their dispositions are soured, and they come to look on man as a demon and an enemy. Teach the colt by every act that you are his friend. Be kind to him always, and you will gain his confidence to that degree that he will always obey the word when he understands your meaning.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says he has been experimenting with Berkshire swine, having kept them with Suffolks, Yorkshires, and Chester whites, and he is thoroughly convinced that he can make more and better pork and hams with them than with any of the others on the same food.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

CONGREGATIONALISM AND THE LODGE.

A late "letter missive," called a Congregational Council to settle a young minister in a church which is opposed to secret societies. In the letter missive the following clause was inserted: "It is not expected that adhering members of Masonic lodges will be members of the council." As Freemasons were members of Congregational churches and so might be chosen delegates to the council, the above was a wise and necessary Christian precaution, respectful to Anti-masons who do not wish to fraternize with men sworn to conceal the crimes of Freemasons if given them as secrets, and respectful to Freemasons who might be delegated to the council, as it forewarned them that they would be likely to hear sentiments condemning their connection with the lodges, and it would be discourteous to invite Masons to sit in council where their Masonry would be attacked, or themselves censured for being lodgemen.

The history of church actions in this country is full of precedents justifying the said clause in the letter missive. In the slavery struggle while opinion was divided, the presbytery of Cincinnati voted to refuse to receive ministers from slave-holding presbyteries, or their letters, until they had purged themselves of slavery. Old school bodies refused to receive Presbyterian ministers whom they regarded unsound or "New-school" in theology, though their standing in the Presbyterian church was good, and in 1837 an Old-school convention met at Philadelphia and published a list of errors which would exclude New-school ministers from bodies where they had control; and this Old-school action was right and just if the men they excluded held destructive errors. There was no other way in which they could clear themselves of complicity with what they believed to be heresy. Slave-holders and Freemasons have always acted on this principle. A suspicion of abolitionism used to exclude from slavery church-organizations; and, not long since, Freemasons issued a circular enjoining on all the fraternity in Michigan to forsake the ministrations of Congregational ministers in that State until they should repeal certain resolutions against Masonry passed by Grand Traverse Association. And yet of seven Congregational ministers invited to the council above referred to, five are said to have resented the anti-secrecy clause of the letter as an insult, and refused to attend; at the same time, we are told, professing to be hostile to secret societies!

We are utterly at a loss to understand the motives or, indeed, the explanation of such conduct, unless those pastors were intimidated by the Masonic members of their flocks, and wished to retain and conciliate them by a blustering condemnation of that just and proper letter missive; while, at the same time, they quieted their Anti-masonic members by pretending to be opposed to secret societies, concerning which they, doubtless, give no instructions to their people whatever. If this is the case with these brethren, they will meet the fate of the man with his feet in two boats. The Freemasons will despise them, and those who understand the nature of the lodge and loathe it, will also despise them; and worst of all, God will abhor them as hypocrites, pretending a hostility to secret societies which they never evince to their people or give to them the reasons for their hostility.

But when a sister Congregational church, in the exercise of its undoubted, indisputable rights, gives notice that they do not wish to invite or receive Freemasons to their council, which was the only way in the world properly and respectfully to keep them out, these brethren censure and condemn that church, and thus subvert the first principle of Congregationalism, viz.: The independence of the local church.

DR. PATTON'S SPEECH.

We promised to notify our readers if Dr. W. W. Patton, in his Farwell Hall speech, receded from his opposition to "The Bible in Schools." He has receded from some of the most important ideas with which he set out in public life, but seems, like most minds which make such evolutions, incapable of return to reason and the Scripture. Indeed, the only Scripture he quotes, in a speech of five or six closely printed columns, to justify excluding the Bible from schools, is, "My Kingdom is not of this world;" which would exclude the Bible from the world as well as the school room. His speech was a Sunday political lecture, without Scripture-text; and, if rightly reported, without opening prayer. Indeed, a prayer to God to help exclude the Bible from schools, would be a curiosity.

We give a few points of the speech. He says:

"Really, it is somewhat brazen in view of such facts, to face an intelligent public with the declaration that this has always been a Protestant country." This is said of hundreds of such men as Taylor Lewis, L. L. D., the late Bishop McIlvaine, etc., etc.

The "facts" which make it, in his (Patton's) judgment, "brazen" to say that ours "has always been a Protestant country," are:—

1st, The Maryland colony, whose charters given by a Protestant king reversed the main ideas of popery, as that of Massachusetts did ideas of monarchy; 2nd, Florida, first purchased from Spain, and then conquered from Indians and slaves; and 3d, that a handful of French priests and adventurers left saints' names on their missions and trading-posts; which the Americans and English retained, or did not wipe out when they opened the country and established government, where most of the half-breed posterity of the explorers had become savages: "In the face of these facts" he thinks it is "brazen" to say this country has always been Protestant!!

His fundamental principle is thus stated: "The only safe principle is to take the whole subject of religion out of the public schools, and remit it to the church and the family." What "church" and what "family?" we ask; and the government must answer.

Our travellers around the globe, when they came home, tell us they have witnessed child-murder and beast-worship, and joss-worship and fetish have their gods in this country. Putting the the infinite and eternal God on a level with these, is denying Him altogther. For there is no "Infinite and eternal God" on a level with these. To treat truth as a lie, is to treat both as lies, and altogether deny truth.

The truth is, Dr. Patton's idea of complete neutrality between God and Baal is a simple moral and religious absurdity and impossibility. Thus he states it: "We have adopted the principle of civil neutrality as to religious faiths, and the law allows the Christian church, the Jewish synagogue, and the Chinese joss-house to stand side by side." And yet that same law, swears witnesses by the name of God wherever there is a court house. Does the law know no difference between the God of the Bible and the bauble of the Chinaman? Suppose the witness was to ask, "What god's help do I forfeit if I swear falsely? Whom or what did the law makers mean to swear me by in this oath?" Will Dr. Patton pretend that the law means no God in particular; or whatever god turns up? To say so is to stullify himself. But if "So help me god," in our courts means the God of the Bible, then Dr. Patton's "principle of civil neutrality" is fallacious and false. True the law allows the Chinese pagoda to stand untorn down, but from that fact of tolerance to impute indifference to law, between God and idols, is to deny history and insult American common sense.

Indeed the speech itself concedes the impossibility and falseness of his "neutrality," and concedes the whole ground we contend for. Thus he says: "It (the state) properly recognizes the church and the family as having rights and duties in connection with the civil and religious wants of the community." Ha! "recognizes THE CHURCH and FAMILY." That must mean that the state recognizes the church of the Bible, and not of the Koran; the Christian family, and not that of Victoria Woodhull with two husbands, or Brigham Young with twenty wives. And, if so, to put the Bible out of its schools is for that state to deprive children of the means of learning and understanding its institutions. Thus this weak writer contradicts himself; destroys in one sentence the doctrine of his entire speech.

This error consists in confounding "church and state;" that is, religious coercion with religious "recognition," which he concedes and affirms. The state by recognizing, i. e., officially confessing Christ, no more establishes "church and state" or religious coercion than an individual does when he confesses Christ. The children of the one, or the citizens of the other may be infidels if they will. When Lincoln or Grant proclaims a fast or thanksgiving, they recognize, and the state by their official act recognizes the God of the Bible. But it compels no citizen to go without his dinner on fast day, or to eat pumpkin pies on thanksgiving. Blind to this plain distinction, Dr. Patton goes on to dechristianize this country and put it on a level with the pagan nations. And pleased with "the applause frequent and hearty" which his Sunday harangue evoked from Jew, atheist, and weak Christian alike; he has taken ground which he will one day be as silent concerning and ashamed of as he now is of writing concerning licensed prostitution in St. Louis, "Let the experiment proceed."

We observe that the Advance notices this hateful and irreligious Sunday harangue, and utters a feeble protest with an intimation that it may say something more concerning it.—When? and what?

—Prof. H. A. Fischer, who has been sojourning for over a year on the continent of Europe has safely returned with his wife and child to home and friends in America, receiving their warm welcome here and in Wheaton on Friday last. His return puts an end to his interesting foreign letters unless he continues to give us from a rich experience some further glimpses of European manners and history. We are not without hope that other friends now traveling or temporarily residing in Europe will write occasionally for our readers.

—The Advance quotes from the Interior:

"How a man with good solid sense can stand the turgid nonsense of Masonry is a mystery. One would suppose that men capable of taking care of themselves on the street would be ashamed of it. Here we see a coterie of them advertising themselves as "The Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General." A Philadelphia paper announces the arrival in that city of the "Thirty-second Degree Ancient and Accepted Rite and Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, of Chicago." It would be impossible to write words of burlesque and ridicule more ridiculous than what they write of themselves."

This is true and good and worth adding to. Though it be "impossible" to outdo Masons in ridiculing their order, it is not enough that the young men of the nation gain their only ideas of lodge folly from that source.

—Philadelphia and the Centennial Exposition is the end of every journey this season, and so our entertaining "Sketches of Summer Travel" have fitly closed at that point. Our readers are greatly indebted to the talented writer who freely sent the notes of the summer tour for their interest and instruction.

—We add several names to the list of lecturers this week. Brethren Gilley and Carter are clergymen well known in their localities and have intimated their willingness to speak against the great modern idolatry as occasion may serve. Bro. Cooper was recommended for State Lecturer for Missouri, and the following recommendation speaks for itself. These friends will doubtless find everywhere need of their best work in the cause. We hope during the coming season to hear many reverberations from their blows upon the groves of the high places of Masonry:—

MONROE, Iowa, Sep. 26, 1876.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—After having heard a lecture delivered in this place by Dr. James McCleery on the evils of secret orders we must heartily and cheerfully endorse his sentiments. His lecture throughout was mighty, masterly, and exhaustive. He made a perfect digest of his subject; and I wish there were more like him to take the field in defense of right against this great evil.

Respectfully, W. H. SALLADA.
J. B. BENINGTON.

CORRECTION:—The Freewill Baptist General Conference has condemned Masonry and all kindred secret societies six times, not "sixteen" as your types make me say in my last letter. S. C. KIMBALL.

THE CAMPAIGN IN IOWA.

STANFORD, Marshall Co., Iowa, Sept. 28,

DEAR K.—Albion is in a state of fermentation and likely to be purged and purified. Ronayne gave the degrees there with more than usual success in the Seminary Hall. I have spoken to good audiences here the last two evenings. Ronayne has just arrived from Albion, and is to initiate this evening in Friends large church at Bangor. I speak at Liscomb to-morow evening, and spend Sabbath at State Center, speaking twice at Lamoille, on Monday.

The people are waking up wonderfully, and are finding among other things of interest that most, if not all, the nominees for county officers are Masons, and are talking of a convention to nominate on a square issue with the lodge. Several have declared their purpose never again to vote for a lodge man or his apologist, and it will not be long before this county will tremble under the goings of the friends of this reform. Several events have here occurred which have been preparing the honest tax-payers for a new order of things about the county seat. J. P. STODDARD.

Religious Intelligence

—The revival meetings under Moody and Sankey began on Sabbath last. Services were held at 8 A. M and 4 P M. with large audiences. It is estimated that fourteen thousand or more were unable to crowd into the audience room. Mr. Moody spoke with his usual earnestness and was assisted by several of the city pastors.

—The Religious Telescope notices the preparations for departure of several missionaries to Shungay, Africa, the foreign mission station of the United Brethren in Christ: "Rev. Joseph Gomer and wife, who have been in America for the last six months, expect to return to Africa to continue missionary labor there, about the 15th of November. Miss Emily Baker, of Oberlin, Ohio, and Miss A Lizzie Bowman, of Corinth, Michigan, are also under appointment from the Board, and will accompany Mr. and Mrs. Gomer to Africa."

—A granite tombstone, tasteful in design, has just been placed over the grave of Adam Crooks, of beloved memory, in the cemetery of Syracuse. May the sterling integrity and godliness of that good man ever pervade the Wesleyan churches!

—Rev. W. A Bartlett, of the Plymouth Congregational church of this city, has resigned his pastorate, and the usual council having been held finds no disagreement between pastor and people. Ill health is the main reason of the change. Mr. Bartlett expects soon to take charge of the Second Presbyterian church of Indianapolis.

—It is said that during the past year two thousand and forty-three French Catholics in Montreal abjured the Papal religion.

—Mr. Moody says he never saw an infidel that wanted to live in a country where there were no Christians and no Bibles.

—Thirteen students from Yale Seminary, three from Hartford and two from Chicago, have spent their vacations in Nebraska supplying vacant churches, assisting overworked pastors, and working up new fields

—A Waldensian church has been organized in Missouri. It is in connection with the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, —The Southern Methodist church has established a Swede Mission at Austin, Texas, and the membership has been increased in a short time from 5 to 91.

—A mothers' prayer meeting has been organized in connection with the mission church at Santander, Spain. Of the sixteen women who attend it some have suffered severely for their attachment to the Gospel.

—An anonymous friend has offered $5,000 to the Church Missionary Society toward commencing a mission in one of the countries of Central Asia, where no Protestant missionaries are as yet stationed.

News of the Week.

—James Lick, the eccentric and wealthy Californian died in San Francisco on Sabbath morning.

—In both the leading parties it took a deal of wire-pulling to nominate for representative to Congress in this city last week. The Republicans nominated Wm. Aldrich in the 1st District, a prominent Freemason, and the Democratic convention almost ended in a fight.

—The trial of Gen. Babcock, late secretary to Pres. Grant, for complicity in the notorious safe-burglary case in Washington has ended as did the St. Louis whisky trial—in his acquittal by the jury.

—The British ship Lammermuir, bound from Calcutta to Demarara, is reported missing. It is believed she has foundered with all hands and three hundred coolie emigrants.—— The "Davdenong," from Melbourne to Sydney, foundered near Jervis Bay during a hurricane on the 11th inst. Sixty of the crew and passengers were drowned.

—The Servian armistice closed on the 25th ult., as no satisfactory arrangement had been reached the Porte, at the request of the Powers, extended it eight days, but the Servian army re-inforced and re-officered, would not wait, and resumed hostilities. Under Gens. Tchernayeff and Popovich, they simultaneously attacked the Turks on Thursday morning last, and drove them beyond Teshitzo. During the engagement the Servian artillery fired seven caissons of gunpowder in the Turkish ammunition depot. The explosion caused a fearful havoc among the Turks. Gen. Harvatovich made a flank movement, and occupied the heights in the rear of the Turkish position. Other reports are of a contradictory nature.—— The Servian army has proclaimed Prince Milan King of Servia. Russia and Austria will not allow of his accepting the title.

—The latest from Europe gives stronger indications than ever of general war. Russians largely compose the Servian army, and it is believed that their government will formally assume the responsibility of the strife shortly.

The Home Circle

Milton's Prayer of Patience.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father, supreme, to thee.

All merciful One!
When men are farthest, then thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown—
My vision thou hast dimmed that I may see Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shades of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is open to my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine!
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine!

Extravagance and Dishonesty.

In the earlier years of our government, Mr. Adams addressed these words to his countrymen:

"But let us take warning and give it to our children. Whenever vanity and gayety, a love of pomp and dress, furniture, equipage, buildings, great company, expensive diversions and elegant entertainments get the better of the principles and judgments of men and women, there is no knowing where they will stop, nor into what evils, natural, moral, or political, they will lead us."

That was written in our infancy, before Americans got into the way of borrowing evil things from Paris. Let us now see what Mr. Talmage said on this matter in a recent discourse. He now finds the full realization of the habits deplored by Adams, and this is what he says:

"To make a true and noble woman, such as I have described in the Christian home sphere, how many thousand would you want of those people who go in the round of godlessness, fashion and dissipation? Distorting their bodies until in their monstrosity they seem to outdo the dromedary and hippopotamus; going so far toward disgraceful apparel as they dare go so as not to be arrested by the police; their behaviour a sorrow to the good, a carricature of the vicious, and an insult to that God who made women, and not gorgons; tramping on down through a godless and frivolous life to temporal and eternal damnation."

The prophetic words of the dead statesman, and the descriptive words of the living minister fit each other exactly. We are wasting our earnings on riotous living, and whether we are doomed or not to further shame and trouble, depends altogether on whether we have wisdom enough, and Christianity enough to check the growing evil of mad and stupid display. It is not only at Washington that great families are brought down by putting on airs—the evil permeates all society, the maid in the kitchen, the girl in the factory. The clerk on seven dollars a week, and the post carrier on a thousand dollars a year, all are equally afflicted with the contagion of ornament and show.

Families whose incomes are moderate vie with their independent neighbor who is rapidly going through the fortune which he inherited from careful, hard-working ancestors. Imitation is ruining us, and we lack the courage to inquire the end of these frivolous expenditures. The first intimation many get is from their bankers, who refuse them further loans. We have not the power to see ourselves as others see us. It is not bad trade that bankrupts ninety per cent. of our merchants. It is silly expenditure and unproductive lives. The lad steals from his master's till that he may enjoy himself as well as his companion, who gets double his salary. Merchants steal from their creditors, that they may appear as respectable as their neighbors. Politicians steal from the State, that they may attract the attention and excite the admiration of the voters.

The example of the first families of the country a century ago we have despised. Instead of following the economical habits of Washington and Franklin, we have copied the style and expenditure of aristocratic nations, where the people are ground down that the court may be supported in luxury. The lust of the eye, and the pride of life are surrounding us with great dangers. Good things are languishing, while evil things abound in high life and low. We are forgetting that pride precedes a fall. Selected.

When De Tocqueville the celebrated publicist of France, first came to this country he was the guest of Hon. John C. Spencer, then living in Canandaigna, N. Y. The village is delightfully located in the heart of a rich farming country, and was then mainly on one broad, beautiful street, on or near which were all the churches of the village. The inhabitants were mostly of New England origin, and were remarkably a church-going people. De Tocqueville arrived there towards the end of the week; and on Saturday, as the country people came in, in crowds to make their purchases and close up the business of the week, he spoke with surprise of their numbers, and their comfortable and thrifty appearance. On the morning of Sunday, a bright, cool, delightful day, as he looked out after breakfast he was still more surprised to see no one in the streets, and all as quiet and still as if the place had been deserted: and he asked Mr. Spencer, "What does this mean?" "Why," said Mr. S., "it is Sunday." But this was no explanation to the Frenchman, and when he asked still further as to its meaning, Mr. S. Replied: "Wait till the bells ring, and then you will see." At half-past ten o'clock the bells from all the churches rang out their call to divine worship, and soon the broad walks of the street were crowded with people, neatly and comfortably, and many of them expensively dressed, and all quietly thronging their way to the churches. And as again De Tocqueville asked Mr. Spencer as to the meaning of all this, he was told in reply that this was the American way of keeping the holy Sabbath; and that every Sunday the great masses of the people thus laid aside their labor and secular occupations, and went to the house of God, there to be instructed in truth and directed in duty, both for this world and the next. And as De Tocqueville pondered the spectacle, and heard the explanation, he raised his hands, and with deep earnestness said, "Mr. Spencer, France must have your American Sabbath or she is ruined!" —Tyron Edwards, D. D.

The Beauty of Large Families.

I know it is not so fashionable to raise large families as in days gone past; but I hope no mother who reads this will ever have any greater trouble than raising large families, and I hope not one of the readers of your valuable paper will be guilty of the great sin in this direction. We often hear it remarked that there are but few if any children in many of our largest houses. For shame, to let the sunshine of this world fade out in that way! To be sure, a mother with a large family must work harder and have more care than one who has not; but when we get a few spare moments to sit down how sweet to have a pair or two of little arms thrown around our neck, and to hear those lips say, "Mother, I love you!" Are we not paid then, for all the extra steps those little innocents have caused? It is our children that will take our places when we are through and take care of us if we live to be old; and I think we should be very careful of the example we set before them, so we may not be ashamed to have it said as they grow to be men and women, they are walking in our footsteps!

Parents should be united in government of their children, and carry a steady hand, but should not be too strict. I think it a poor plan to fret and scold to children, and some go as far as to call their children fools, and they soon begin to think they are, and no child was ever made brighter in that way.—Lady Correspondent in the Maine Farmer.

Children's Corner

Our Grandmother.

Our grandmother sits in her old arm-chair,
With lines of silver threading her hair;
A smile of peace rests upon her face;
Her room to us seems the brightest place.

An influence, like a strange, sweet spell,
Seems ever around the spot to dwell;
Yet well we know 'tis her presence there
Makes sacred to us her room and chair.

That dear old face, with its lines of care,
Seems now to us more sweet and fair
Than all the beauty of girlhood's prime,
Though very fair ere the hand of time

Had left, as it does upon all, its trace
And with many wrinkles seamed her face,
But we know her love will never grow cold,
Though grandma herself is getting old.

How oft, when a child, I've knelt in prayer
At grandmother's knee, by the old arm chair.
In all the world there never will be
A spot so sacred and sweet to me.

How Girls can Easily Learn to be Housekeepers.

Begin with your own things and your own place. That is what your mother will tell you if you rush to her, enthusiastic with good intentions, and offer to relieve her of half of her housekeeping. Don't draw that little bucket of cold water to have it poured back upon your early zeal. Reform your upper bureau drawer; relieve your closet pegs of their accumulation of garments out of use a month or two ago. Institute a clear and cheerful order, in the midst of which you can daily move; and learn to keep it. Use yourself to the beautiful—which is the right—disposing of things as you handle them; so that it will be a part of your toilet to dress your room and its arrangements while you dress yourself; leaving the draperies you take off as lightly and artistically hung, or as delicately folded and placed, as the skirts you loop carefully to wear, or the ribbon and lace you put with a soft neatness about your throat. Cherish your instincts of taste and fitness in every little thing that you have about you. Let it grow impossible to you to put down so much as a pin-box where it will disturb the orderly and pleasant grouping upon your dressing table; or to stick your pins in your cushion, even, at all sorts of tipsy and uncomfortable inclinations. This will not make you "fussy"—it is the other thing that does that; the not knowing, except by fidgety experiment, what is harmony and the intangible grace of relation. Once get your knowledge beyond study and turn it into fact—which is literally having it at your fingers' ends—and order will breathe about you, and grace evolve from commonest things, and uses and belongings, wherever you may be; and "putting things to rights" will not be separate task-work and trouble, any more than it is in the working of the solar system. It will go on all the time, and with a continual pleasure.

Take upon yourself gradually—for the sake of getting them in hand in like manner, if for no other need—all the cares that belong to your own small territory of home. Get together things for use in these cases. Have your wash-cloths and your sponges for cleaning; your furniture brush and your feather duster; your broom and your whisk and pan; your bottle of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine, and piece of flannel, to preserve the polish, or restore the gloss, where dark wood grows dim or gets spotted. Find out, by following your surely growing sense of thoroughness and niceness, the best and readiest ways of keeping all fresh about you. Invent your own processes; they will come to you. I shall not lay down rules or a system for you. When you have made yourself wholly mistress of what you can learn and do in your own apartment, so that it is easier and more natural for you to do it than to let it alone—so that you don't count the time it takes any more than that which you have to give to your own bathing and hair-dressing—then you have learned enough to keep a whole house, so far as its cleanly ordering is concerned. St. Nicholas for August.

A Boy's Way to Success.

Every boy wishes to be successful; and he thinks if he could only find a sure road to success in any undertaking, he would not hesitate to do it. It is the fear of failure at the last that keeps many from pushing on.

There are three qualities which will ensure success in any walk in life, namely, ability, integrity, and industry; and though, at first sight, it might seem as if the first of these must be a gift and cannot be cultivated, you will find it is a fact that every boy has ability if he only finds out in which line of study or action it lies. Ability is the power of doing a thing well. A boy should learn early that he cannot have ability in every thing; that is, few boys have a great deal of general ability. The first rule should be that "whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well" A boy who does his best in whatever he undertakes, will soon find in what direction his efforts meet with most marked success; and having discovered that, let him bend all his energies to be first in that particularbranch of study or work. Better be a first class carpenter than a fourth-rate lawyer; a good machinist, than a poor doctor.

But many boys cannot judge of their own abilities; and the father, who should study his son's peculiar temperament and characteristics, gives it little thought. Don't give them up; be on the watch to make a good friend; choose your associates among those who aim high, not as to money, or social standing, but as to learning and earnest Christian living. A boy should have, at least, one friend several years his senior, who can guide him as to a choice of what branch of work or study to set his best efforts. He will by earnest endeavor gain ability;but let him guard well his integrity. This is more than truthfulness; it is whole-heartedness. A boy of integrity is like a stout, staunch ship sailing through the ocean, the waves may sway her from side to side, but she remains whole and firm. Boys, make up your minds to be true. If you have deceived, say so to yourself, and say, "By God's help, I'll stop short, from this day. I must earn an honorable name, and I will," and at whatever cost to yourself, be true; let no temptation spring a leak in your heart.

Now, about industry. A boy with good ability and integrity, even if he is rather lazy and shiftless, will perhaps get along; but what opportunities lost, for usefulness! Boys,remember that the most successful men have been the most industrious. It is easy to point out some rich man and say, "He began as a poor boy." Yes; but he worked hard, year in and year out. One word about this industry. Don't let it be simply being industrious to be rich. Aim higher than riches. Store your mind with gleanings from the best writers; cultivate a taste for reading, and let the success at which you aim be the approval of a good conscience. Riches are not to be despised; but it is only when they are united to learning and religion, that they are to be envied.

I wish boys would realize more that every little event of their boyhood is shaping their future character. The boy who is more anxious to understand perfectly what he learns, than to appear to make great progress, who cares more for acquiring knowledge than to shine as a student, will be a man of more ability and integrity than one who cares for the mere surface show.—S. S. Times.

The Drunkard's Daughter.

A Detroiter was sent to the house of correction, for habitual drunkenness. The wife, a hard-working woman, and sorely afflicted in health, managed to provide food and fuel for herself and child until death came to end the struggle. The little girl, hardly eight years old, was all alone in the house when her mother died. The event occurred at dark, and at midnight the child was heard singing in the darkness. A pedestrian who halted, heard her say:

"Mother, won't you wake up and light the lamp? If you will, I will sing some more!"

Suspecting what had happened, he roused some of the neighbors; and as they went in, the child sat in the darkness, holding its mother's cold hand, and singing:

The Lord will lead a little child
And teach me how to pr y.

A dark room, death on the bed, poverty, hunger, and cold, to make her situation more desolate, and yet the child of shadows was not afraid. She said:

"I kept still a long while to let mother sleep. Then I sang all my songs to keep me awake. Then I looked out of the window and didn't move, so that the angels wouldn't be afraid to come and talk to her and make her smile! I wish God had made more daylight for poor folks!"—Detroit Free Press.

LESSON XLIII.—OCTOBER 22, 1876.—SIMON THE SORCERER.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts viii: 7 25. Commit 18 24, Primary Verse, 20.

9 But there was a certain man, called Simon which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that he himself was some great one.

10 To whom they all gave heed from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John.

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost.

18 And when Simon saw that through the laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money,

19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

22 Repent, therefore, of this thy wickedness, and pray God if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

1 Our lesson shows how God can make the wrath of man to praise him. The very steps taken by the enemies of Christianity—their bitter persecution of its professors—resulted in spreading the gospel instead of repressing it. "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought; he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. 2 Sam. 17:14; Ps. 21:11; 33:10, 11; 76:10; Prov. 10.21; 21:30; Acts 4.26, 28; 5:39; 1 Cor. 3:19; Phil. 1:12, 13.

2 Whatever may be the accessories which help to make the gospel effective—whether miracles or music or methods—still let it be remembered that it is the Word of God that is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, and that it is only with that one can ever reach the heart. The Moody and Sankey Meetings.

The arrangements for the meetings to be conducted by Messrs Moody and Sankey, in Chicago, are rapidly approaching completion; a large new building is being erected on Monroe street, between Market and Franklin. The dimensions of the building are a hundred and ninety feet front, from east to west, on Monroe street, by one hundred and sixty feet in depth. It stands on an open space, joining its west wall to a large block of stores, but open on its other three sides, between which and the streets on the east and the south, are wide, unoccupied spaces of ground, wher by great quietness will be enjoyed even in the very heart of the city. To the main floor there are four wide double entrances; two by flights of steps downward from the wide stone pavement on Monroe street, and two from the south side at the ground level. This floor will be seated with four thousand five hundred chairs. A gallery forty feet deep will extend around three sides of the hall, sloping at a convenient angle, and seated with twent -nine hundred chairs. To this gallery there are six entrances by flights of steps twelve feet wide, entirely separate from the entrances to the main floor, thus enabling the great hall to be filled or emptied in about five minutes. The hall will comfortably seat some eight thousand people. The platform extends across the west end of the building; on this will be Mr. Moody's pulpit and Mr. Sankey's organ, a choir of three hundred singers, and seats for three hundred city pastors, ministers, and others. The platform entrance is at the north-west corner of Monroe street The sloping floors of the wide galleries form two ranges of rooms at the level of the street floor, which will be used for offices, inquiry and committee rooms. There will also be a commodious office on the Monroe street side, fitted up for the use of the press. The roof, which is thirty-eight feet high, is supported by heavy posts standing on the ground. The walls are of brick, the fronts are of iron; and it would seem to be impossible to construct a great auditorium, in which convenience and security should be more perfectly attained. The hall is lighted by two rows of windows along the whole length of the north and south sides, sides, and at night it will be well lighted by gas. The whole building will be heated by steam.

The cost of the building, when completed, will be about twenty-one thousand dollars, about one-half of which has already been subscribed; and it is proposed to raise the balance before the meetings begin. Quite a large additional sum will be required to defray the expenses of the meetings for three months, which sum it is hoped will be voluntarily given by those in sympathy with the work.

The meetings will begin on the Lord's day, Oct. 1st. A meeting will be held at 8 a. m. for Christians, and a mass meeting at 4 p. m. During the week two daily meetings will be held; one from 12 to 1 o'clock, conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in Farwell Hall, and one at 8 p. m., in the Tabernacle.

A notable galaxy of Christian workers will be engaged in these meetings. Besides Mr. Moody it is expected that the following gentlemen will bear a laborious part: Maj. D. W. Whittle, whose evangelistic work in the West and South is well known; Geo. C. Needham, the Irish evangelist; Harry Morehouse, C. M. Morton, J. V. Farwell, H. G. Spafford, J. W. Dean and Mr. Inglis. Such a corps of Gospel singers has seldom been united as Sankey, Bliss, Stebbins and Johnson, who are expected to help on the work.

Beside the Chicago meeting it is proposed to hold evangelistic meetings in such cities and larger towns in the West and Northwest as are ready for union evangelistic effort, and where the ministers will join in an invitation, and co-operate with the evangelists in special effort to awaken Christians and reach the unconverted. Special efforts will be made to reach young men in our cities and towns in connection with these evangelistic movements.

Ministers or others wishing further information in regard to the meetings, or the movements of the evangelists connected with them, can communicate with Mr. Thomas K. Cree, at the Y. M. C. A., Chicago.

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.

2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.

3d Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.

5th. Civil Rights.

6th. Arbitration better than war.

7th. The Bible in schools.

8th. Monopolies discountenanced.

9th. A return to specie payments

10th. Maintenance of public credit: protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.

11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6 That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CALIFORNIA STATE TICKET.

Electors: 1st. Dis., J. H. Purdy, San Francisco; 2d Dis., A. Musselman, Sacramento; 3d Dis., John Black, Lake Co.; 4th Dis., J. W. Stetson, Stanislaus Co. At large: Phil Beck, Yolo Co.; M. F. Bishop, Alameda Co.

For Congress: 1st Dis., C. A. Merrill, San Francisco; 2nd Dis., Levi Rodman, Sacramento; 3d Dis., N. W. Harrow, Lake Co.; 4th Dis. J. B. Watts, Stanislaus Co.

For Comptroller: Benjamin Casey, Santa Barbara Co.

To the American Party of California: DEAR FRIENDS:—Our electoral ticket for the State of California is now made out and by the 10th day of October next I will be ready to supply every one with tickets. I want the friends in every election precinct in the State of California, from Siskiyou to San Diego, to write to me and I will send them tickets. If there is only one friend in the precinct, let him be sure and write me for the American ticket, and I will send him one. Then go early to the polls on the morning of the election and have our young American ticket placed in the "ballot box," remembering that it represents God and right, and so wields a mighty power for good. Our country, like Esau, has sold her birthright for a mess of pottage. She is chained and enslaved, but she must be disenchanted and rescued from the despotism of the lodge, king alcohol and the corrupt money power, and placed, regenerated and free, in the front rank of the nations of the earth. The new American cause is not exclusively our cause. It is the cause of God, humanity and country, and our mission is to accomplish this grand and blessed work. Let us rejoice, dear friends, that we have been counted worthy to be partakers in the labors and sufferings, as well as the joys and glories of this grand moral achievement.

JAMES KENNEDY,
Los Gatos, Santa Clara Co., Cal.

REBEL ARMY OFFICERS IN CONGRESS.

In the forty-fourth Congress, just closed, nine Senators of the seventy-four were actually officers in the rebel army; (nearly one-eighth of the whole number).

Of the 292 members of the House of Representatives, 43, (nearly one-sixth) were officers of the rebel army, and one (making 44 in all) a civil officer. Twenty-three of these in addition to their commissions as officers of the rebel army were officers of the Confederate Government, viz: Vice-president, Post-master General, Senators, Representatives, etc.

Fifty-seven soldiers of the Union Army have been sent to the rear, and forty-seven Confederate soldiers occupy as many of their seats.

Facts of this character are the lions which make many patriots like father Preston shudder at the thought of trusting our country in the hands of the Democrats.

Gov. Hayes is said to be in the habit of repeating the Lord's prayer every night and morning in his family, after the reading of a chapter of Scripture. Very good, if true, so far as it goes, whether told for political effect or not; but a man of his gifts of speech, who keeps a family year after year kneeling to hear him go through with that formula, needs exceedingly a forward shove on the subject of prayer.—Telescope.

Unless an elector is elected by a majority vote his only duty as a candidate of course, will be to allow those who wish to vote for him. This is all we can expect will be required of the majority of our electors this fall.

The electors chosen cast their votes for President and Vice-president at the capital of their respective States on the first Wednesday in December in the year of the election. If an elector is unable on account of poor health to leave home the State Electoral College fills the vacancy. A mileage of $3.00 for every twenty miles is allowed electors, so their duties require no private expenditure.

—The Telescope has a very complimentary notice of the American nominee for Governor of Missouri. It can say nothing less of Pres. Allen, who occupies the same position in Illinois, than this of Mr. Beauchamp: "Rev. Wm. Beauchamp, of Avalon, has been nominated by the American party for Governor of Missouri. A purer or more conscientious man could not easily be named."

LOCAL POLITICS.—President Allen of Westfield College, previous to his nomination for Governor of Illinois wrote: "As for State politics, I have had at no time any hesitancy. I have always felt that a good way, at least, if not decidedly the best, would be to press to the polls with our cause in a local way first * * * Illinois is strong enough to poll quite a vote on a State ticket if all friends of our cause could be induced to vote their wishes. I hope there will be in ample season the necessary tickets prepared and circulated everywhere to parties who would possibly use any!

If good men are at once nominated for town officers where there are a dozen friends that can get together for that purpose, we can easily carry at least 1,000 town elections this fall. When we print the electoral and State tickets we wish to print these local nominations also for all who want them, so as to have as near a complete ticket as possible. Send on your orders for tickets as soon as possible and let those who are able send something towards the expense of printing them.

As the tickets for each congressional district must be printed for that district and but few for each district the tickets will cost us about twenty-five cents per 100.

THE INDIANA TICKETS.—The Indiana State election occurs the second Tuesday in October. The nominee for Governor, Samuel Phillips, on that ticket, has declined the nomination, so we have printed and filled all orders for Indiana State tickets with the Governor's name blank, leaving room for putting in the name of any one you choose. The tickets must be mailed to all who wish them IMMEDIATELY. Let all friends in Indiana send orders at once (and if you can spare it 25 cts. per 100) for tickets.

—We hope every patriot in Mass. will assist in making Charles Francis Adams Governor of that State this year. Sam'l Bowles, editor of the Springfield Republican intends to vote for Hayes and Wheeler, but supports Chas. Francis Adams for Governor.

He says:—

"Mr. Adams stands to-day just where he stood last year, an independent then, an independent now. He was not a Republican in a party sense last year; he is not a Democrat in the party sense this year. He is animated by the same principles, he seeks the same ends now as then. Driven, like the rest of us, to a choice of instruments, he chooses Tilden and the Democratic party to secure the same results that some of the rest of us think will be more surely done by Mr. Hayes and the Republicans. It is not absolutely certain which is mistaken; possibly both of us are in a certain sense. But it is an honest and an intelligent difference. If Mr. Adams is the more mistaken, it does not follow that he would not make a better Governor of Massachusetts than Gov. Rice,—that he and the influences that would come in with, and go out from him at the State-House would not be better than the influences now dominant there: and whether he is not the best instrument that the honest, reform-seeking people of Massachusetts can possibly find for putting down the dominant and domineering Butlerism and Loringism in the local Republican party—whether we shall ever have a better opportunity than his candidacy presents for revolutionizing and reforming the politics and politicians of Massachusetts. Because we prefer Gov. Hayes for President and mean to vote for him and hope to elect him, is that any reason why we should not prefer and seek to elect Charles Francis Adams Governor of Massachusetts.

The Chicago Tribune replies: "Of course not, Samuel. It is a free country."

We certainly hope that he will be elected by an overwhelming majority.

"The ballot has not yet failed us, and never will as long as patriotism, loyalty, and integrity are the ruling elements in the land. On the ballot we rely for the vindication of our work and the purity of our motives. It is the true reformer that brings about improvement without revolution and corrects all wrongs without exciting rebellion or revolt.

There is a weapon surer yet
And stronger than the bayonet,
A weapon that comes down as still
As snow flakes fall upon the sod;
But executes a freeman's will
As lightning does the will of God."

OUR POLITICAL POSITION.—We publish this week widely differing views concerning co-operation with the American Party in regard to voting for presidential candidates. With those who will not vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick we see the Red Sea before us, mountains on either side and the enemy behind us. We have however as we believe enquired of the Lord and understand His answer to be, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

God sent home a brave ten thousand, from Gideon's army, who perhaps, correspond to those who vote this year for Hayes and Wheeler. Nevertheless the three hundred were obliged to remain humbly doing the work given them by their Great Master. The articles published this week are written by strong and intelligent thinkers and if our readers do not believe with us, that the "American Party men" have the best of the argument we will rejoice to see them concientiously and bravely following their own convictions of duty. Convictions established after carefully looking at both sides of the question, and a sincere appeal to God through Christ for wisdom, must not be trifled with.

THE VOTER'S DUTY AT THE BALLOT BOX.

BY HON. SETH M. GATES.

"Do right and leave results with God" is the first sentence in the reply to Father Preston's reasons why Anti-masons should vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

That dictum has a very familiar sound, and to all those persons who have first got it well settled in their minds that it is right of them to cast their votes for the third or fourth party, anti-secret or temperance ticket—it is supposed to have a very certain meaning, and to end all controversy.

To anybody else, however, this phrase "do right and leave results with God" settles nothing, has not a whit of force as a reply or argument. The very point to be settled is, "what is right, and what is duty" in such a case.

What is the duty of a well-informed, conscientious Christian voter, when he comes to discharge his obligations to his God, his country, to his fellow men at the ballot box?

Is it to fix his mind's eye upon any one evil or sin which may exist in the community, or the government, and determine that he will ignore all else, and will cast his vote in view of that one thing alone—even though it be a great evil like secretism or intemperance? or is it manifestly the duty of every conscientious Christian voter, after a careful review and consideration of all the varied great important interests that cluster around the exercise of the elective franchise, so to cast his vote as to do the most good, and to prevent the most evil in his power?

If there be in truth and in fact, as Father Preston thinks, and as I think, and as I doubt not a very great majority of the Anti-masonic voters of this nation think, questions and issues to be determined this fall of greater present importance than secretism or intemperance (bad and important as they both are); questions and issues involving the dearest civil and political rights—yea, the lives and destinies of several millions of our fellow beings;—questions and issues involving virtually the loss of nearly all that has been gained over slavery and treason since 1860; then I hold that God, and right, and duty, all require Father Preston and me and every other friend of his race, and of right rule, so to cast his vote this fall as to shield and save these suffering, persecuted and oppressed millions, and to save our country. There is an opportunity for us to do infinitely more good by casting our votes in that way, than any sane man can hope to accomplish by throwing away his vote for anti-secret candidates, just to make a demonstration, and for whose election he has not the remotest possible hope or expectation.

I wish to dissent most emphatically also from the assertion, the reasoning, and the ethics of that sentence which says, that "if we vote our principles (an anti-secret ticket) and Tilden and Hendricks are elected we should not be in the remotest degree responsible for the misrule of the Democratic party." I believe that God not only holds a man accountable for what good it is in his power to do, but also for neglecting or refusing to prevent all the wrong and evil it is his power to prevent. He is not so poor a logician, I apprehend, as to fail to perceive that in such a crisis as this country is in just now, the person who casts votes for forlorn candidates of whose election he knows perfectly well when he casts his vote, there is no possible hope whatever; is doing by indirection what he may shrink from doing directly by an open ballot—electing the wrong and bad ticket. It is in his power to prevent its election and he prevents it not. He consents to its election.

One might as well say he would not be "in the remotest degree responsible" who should stand directly by and see a villian murder his neighbor, and not lift a hand to protect or defend that neighbor, while he cried to him for help. God will hold a man responsible for neglecting or refusing to prevent it, as certainly and as rigidly as he will for the perpetuation of wrong and evil by his own hand.

Pilate did little more than this. He refused to give his vote in favor of one he had five times pronounced innocent, and just stood by and let the copperhead Jews work their will upon the Master—declared he was not "in the remotest degree responsible" for results, and yet all the water in Jerusalem was insufficient to cleanse his hands of the guilt of his non-interference! He had the power to acquit, but declined to exercise it. One manly vote, or veto would have made a hero of him, and yet his endeavor to shirk all responsibility, while he allowed the wicked conspiracy against the innocent and oppressed to triumph, made him everlastingly infamous. I do not say these cases are exactly parallel. They are sufficiently so for an instructive illustration and warning.

Does any one say these are the views and arguments of the partisan, the politicians? They are never ready for anti-secret or temperance organizations and tickets?

No, this is not true of me. I am not opposed to temperance or Anti-masonic agitation, organization, or voting. I have near fifty years labored faithfully and successfully in exposing the evils of secret, oath-bound societies, in organizing an Anti-masonic party, first in my own town, then in my county and State. I was myself twice elected supervisor of my own town, and then a member of the Legislature, as an Anti-mason, and by a distinctive well organized Anti-masonic party. So was Millard Fillmore, and Francis Granger, and George W. Patterson, and William H. Seward, and almost the entire membership of Western New York. We began at home and worked outward and upward; but I confess I greatly doubt the wisdom of that policy which gets up and presses the support of a hopeless national and State ticket for the sake of showing our strength, menacing the other parties, or making a spectacular demonstration, before half a dozen towns in as many States are able to vote a Masonic path-master or supervisor out of office, or an Anti-masonic one in.

In the days I speak of, and in this region, Anti-masonry was very properly the great issue before the people. There was just then nothing else to be compared with it in importance. Now, though, a very important one, it is not the greatest present issue. The question of human rights, slavery, its extension, its abolition, secession, a terrific internal war, emancipation, and the rights of the freedmen, peace and reconstruction measures of the most vital importance have supervened, and the last great crowning battle in regard to the right final settlement of them comes off in November, and I think Father Preston is eminently right in saying to the 250,000 Anti-masonic voters he mentions, that our duty cannot and does not require us so to act and so to vote this fall as to "jeopardize the lives of thousands of our fellow-men, and to deprive five millions of our fellow citizens of all their civil and political rights under the Constitution."

If I vote for Hayes this fall, as I intend to, and it should turn out, as I hope it may not, that he once joined the Odd-fellows, and has never renounced the order, I am not afraid that God is so blind as not to know that I vote not for, but despite his Odd-fellowship, and because I have full confidence that he will honestly support and carry out measures and principles of government of the utmost importance to its perpetuity and the welfare of the people, and which must be endangered by the success of the treacherous Confederate and copperhead party opposed to him.

In conclusion let me recommend to the favorable consideration of my Anti-masonic friends a rule for voting which I adopted as long ago as 1839, and by which I have endeavored to be governed ever since as an Anti-mason, an abolitionist, and a Republican. "So to cast my vote as to promote the greatest good in my power, to be determined upon a view of all the great moral, political, and religious interests which are involved in the exercise of the elective franchise, each one maintaining its relative importance, and no one being allowed to swallow up all the rest." No party allegiance shall swerve me from that rule.

The Voter's Duty at the Ballot Box.

BY REV. H. D. FREEMAN, DOWNER'S GROVE, ILL.

Jesus says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." So we see that he puts principle which his word utters before heaven and earth in point of importance. I think, therefore, we may safely prefer an enlightened conscience, where important principles are involved, to any of the supposed or imagined interests, or even lives of any number of men. I would therefore rather vote for right principles than to attempt to benefit men by wrong principles in violation of conscience, or even to save the lives of any number. On this principle God refuses corrupt men a place in heaven. Let us do right if the heavens fall. I will further add, I would rather vote in harmony with God's law than to attempt to save a nation from national disaster by unrighteous voting, or save millions of human lives by disobedience to the will of God, as indicated by an enlightened conscience; but voting right, which is voting God's will, never did and never will result in national disaster, nor will it result in the destruction of human life. Voting wrong cannot save, but voting right can.

The Voter's Duty at the Ballot Box.

BY J. S. PERRY, THOMPSON, CONN.

Dear Father Preston says that from 1,500 to 4,500 persons have been killed in the last ten years, and not one white man has been punished for those murders. Rum has killed 60,000 a year, or 660,000 since the war. Now if it is right to save 4,500 is it not right to save 60,000 a year? We are often told that if Tilden is elected, we shall have to pay some 500,000,000 or 600,000,000 dollars rebel debt. If it is right to save this sum, it must be right to save the one thousand million dollars that rum costs the nation per year. And I think the best way to do it is to vote for a Christian man who is pledged to prohibition; and if we do not elect him this year, we shall have planted the seed that if Christians do their duty will bring forth the fruit of prohibition.

What Shall We Do?

BY JAS. KENNEDY, LOS GATOS, CAL.

Shall we go forward in the power and strength of the living God? Or shall we falter and turn back like Bunyan's Pliable? Shall we abandon both our cause and our principles? Or shall we nail our colors to the masthead and "stand by the ship?" Let us take warning by Lot's wife, and by the Hebrews that "longed for the fleshpots of Egypt." What does our Lord and Master say on this all-important subject? "He that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back, is not fit for the kingdom of heaven." This settles the question forever. The Lord needs volunteers for his great army of reform, but he has no need for either cowards or policy men who would run with the saints or work for the devil, according to circumstances. It is moral heroes that he wants. Men that cannot be lured from their loyalty to Jesus and the truth. There is a large class of men who daily pray, "Thy kingdom come, they will be done on earth as it is in heaven," who rise from their knees and join the enemy, and oppose the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, voting for his enemies by giving their suffrage to wicked men who lend themselves to the lodge, to the saloon-keepers, to the rum-power, and to men who betray their constituents and wink at the massacre of innocent loyal colored men by the secret lodges, except on Presidential campaign occasions like the present, when they need their help to ride into power. This class of men lack consistency, for they try to build up with their prayers what they daily tear down with their own hands.

Brother Preston says: "I freely admit that political organization and action in opposition to these oath-bound combinations is right and proper and necessary." Then, according to his own decision, it would be wrong, improper, and unnecessary to abandon our organization and vote for unprincipled, time-serving men and parties.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10 00 pays for 20 000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st. 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,

CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Those who wish to circulate Antimasonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from.

The first thing is to be sure that we are right. Then let no sophistry or false reasoning lure us from the truth and the right. To do evil that good may come is always dangerous and unsafe, and will be sure to lead us to ultimate ruin. Our duty as Christian men and women is to do right at all times and under all circumstances, and leave the results with our Father in Heaven. In regard to the Republican party, they had no principles of their own. They were simply grafted on to the old Liberty party. The non-extension of slavery was the issue when they came into power. They were not abolitionists. They were not opposed to slavery in the States where it then existed. They hated the colored man and they hate him yet, and still keep up the old fiendish spirit of caste and color. They never did anything for him except what they were forced to do from necessity. They were not "governed by moral considerations" in their treatment of him. His emancipation was a military necessity. They armed him from necessity. They made him a citizen from necessity, and they clothed him with the right of suffrage from necessity. And now they only protect and save him from murder and butchery by the secret bandits of the South when they need his help to lift them into power. They have not protected him in the past, and we have no guaranty that they will protect him in the future. They offered to sell him into eternal slavery to the Southern Confederacy, and gave them one hundred days in which to accept the offer, and seal the poor slaves' doom forever. But glory to God, he put a hook into the mouths of the slave-holders and held them firm till the last grains of sand ran through the hour-glass. Can it be possible that we could be induced to turn back from our exalted and advanced moral position and abaudon our organization and platform of principles to vote for such a party of time-serving men? No, my dear brethren, let us be faithful and honest and incorruptible, and stand fast by truth and right both now and forever. Let us be of good cheer and take courage. There is a brighter day close at hand. The glory of the Lord is soon to be revealed in the utter destruction of the rum power and the beast of secrecy. History is rapidly repeating itself. "The American Party" sustains now the same relation to the two great political parties of the day that the Liberty party sustained to the Whig and Democratic parties of 1844. The conflict raged with redoubled fierceness from year to year until the Whig party was destroyed and the Democratic became triumphant. The Liberty party was then young and vigorous, and full of life and truth and stood face to face with and ready to grapple with the slave-power. The defeated Whigs and the best men of the North now rushed to the standard of freedom and right held aloft by the Liberty party. From that hour the conflict became fiercer and fiercer to the day that Richmond fell and Lee surrendered. The American party is now in the field, "God's mighty host." Young, spotless, vigorous and dauntless, full of life and truth, and armed with "the sword of the Spirit," and ready to take part in the coming terrible conflict that will shake this mighty Republic from ocean to ocean, and from British America to the Rio Grande. Let us have faith and courage. Let us work and pray, for the time is at hand. One of the great political parties of this Republic must destroy the other before the great beast of secrecy and its ally, the rum power, fall, and the American party triumphantly take the helm of this great Republic then redeemed, disenthralled and saved.

CONNECTICUT STATE MEETING.

The next meeting of the Connecticut Christian Association will be held in Willimantic, commencing Tuesday, Oct. 24th, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

CONVENTION AT SANDY LAKE, PA.

The Western Pennsylvania Christian Association will hold its first anniversary meeting in the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Sandy Lake, Mercer Co., Pa, commencing on Tuesday, October 31st, at 7 o'clock P. M., and continue over the two following days. Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., and Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D.D., of Pittsburgh, and other distinguished speakers will be present and address the Convention.

Free entertainment will be provided for all who come. Let the friends of Christ come up to give help against the Masonic anti-Christ. Let the lovers of republican liberty rally for the overthrow of Masonic despotism. Let the friends of law and order come and plead for impartial justice against the sworn favoritism of the lodge. Gather from all over western Pennsylvania and may the Lord of Hosts be with us.

By order of the Executive Committee.
REV. C. F. HAWLEY, Cor. Sec.

Bro. C. B. Remington, Financial Agent for Michigan, writes:

"J. L. Barlow and myself are now wholly engaged on the war path, and do not know the exact time when we shall meet with Masonic argument such as J. P. Stoddard and Hinman have met. Still we are confident that they will have to have a large supply of eggs to make a thorough covering. We should be pleased to hear from our friends of Michigan in regard to lectures, for we want to accomplish all we possibly can before our year is up."

The special fund for sustaining our agent at the Centennial and keeping him supplied with tracts for his work should not be overlooked by our friends. Its importance at this juncture of our reform cannot be over-estimated. Never probably will there be such another opportunity in your lifetime or mine to reach the uttermost parts of the earth at an expense so trifling. Will not friends visiting the Exposition at such greatly reduced rates on the railroads consecrate a tithe of the money thus saved to the Lord in this work, handing their contributions to Bro. Hodge at his stand in the main building or sending direct to the office of the National Christian Association. All such contributions will be promptly reported in the Cynosure and applied as the donor shall direct, either to the expenses of our agent or for tracts. J. P. STODDARD.

—Rev. A. H. Springstein's address is changed from Pontiac to Sarinac, Ionia county, Mich. Friends writing to him please notice.

—Past Master Ronayne after a series of meetings at Oskaloosa and Maquoketa, Iowa, last week, is now attending the Wisconsin State meeting at Delavan. From thence he visits Morrison, Ill., and will also spend some time in Jasper and Cedar counties, Iowa. In consequence of pressing engagements in Iowa he will not be able to visit Ohio and other points East till after the election.

Topics of the Time.

The revival meetings were continued in this city during last week in Farwell Hall at noon, and in the great Tabernacle in the evening, with continually increasing power. The work began where it should, with professing Christians—it might properly be said with luke-warm, back-slidden Christians, of whom the churches are full. The special meetings for prayer and confession were increasing in numbers and interest and on Friday noon fifteen hundred such arose for prayers. The work of grace had really begun, and Mr. Moody in the evening might have looked upon the situation with hopeful courage. The great hall was filled and the services begun with the usual singing and prayer when a telegram came announcing the death of his brother in Northfield, Conn. A hurried consultation was held and he determined to take the train then waiting, and for a few days leave the work, now in its critical period, in the hands of his tried and faithful co-workers. Upon Major Whittle the mantle seemed to fall, and the whole ordering of this interruption shows the hand of that holy Lord God, whose is all the glory of the great salvation. He would prove the work, try its temper, sound it, know its depth and genuineness; and, perhaps, too, he would bring forward just now one who has been signally blessed in his labors among cold-hearted professors. And his grace has been made manifest, whose is and shall be all the glory. The morning and afternoon meetings on the Lord's day were, as some said, the best yet of this Gospel feast. Major Whittle spoke to about eight thousand in the afternoon from Isaiah lv. 4: "Behold I have given him for a witness to the people;" and his words were "with demonstration of the Spirit, and with power." To-day will be widely observed in the city and a large part of the North-west in fasting and prayer.

In connection with the usual reticence of the late Illinois Grand Lodge we read in the Voice of Masonry that "the feeling is becoming general among the craft that the occasions for Masonic parade and display should be reduced to a minimum. Secret societies of every name and character are springing up with marvelous rapidity, the members of which seem to delight to display their ceremonies in public as often as opportunity can be made, but let not the Masonic fraternity partake of this spirit." So Masonic zeal in practicing Masonic principles demonstrates to these deluded men themselves the danger and folly into which they run. Surely "the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them."

Hon. Wm. E. Dodge protested in a letter against the violation of the Sabbath by the late explosion in New York, and Gen. Newton, superintendent of the work, snubbed him as no gentleman; besides, he curtly answered the Protestant societies that remonstrated. It appears that he is a papist, however, which accounts for his disrespect for the day. The N. Y. Witness says: It was well for his theory of the necessity of breaking the Sabbath that high water occurred in the afternoon. Had it occurred in the forenoon (canonical hours) the alleged necessity would doubtless have had to endure a postponement till Monday.

It has been announced in Rome that the "Black Pope," or "General" of the Jesuits, Peter John Beckr, is to be made Cardinal at the express desire of Pio Nino himself. Along with this news it is said that the new Cardinal has been thus promoted in order that he may succeed to the papal chair. While the great age of the Jesuit makes this improbable, there is great significance in the rumor and in the proposed promotion. The Romish church has in years past, rejected the Jesuits as it now does the Freemasons and with tenfold less reason.

Why may we not expect the hostility, more apparent than real, between the Romish and the Masonic system to be permanent?

How much the papists love our common schools is seen in Florida where it is said the Catholic children have been driven from the schools by the threats of the priests. The same has been done in one or two cases in New Jersey. These subordinates are more honest and open in carrying out the Romanist policy toward American institutions than their Bishops.

LEVI COFFIN.

BY DR. J. A. BINGHAM.

And who does not know him? World-wide his reputation! Three thousand three hundred fugitives from bondage passed through his hands, and were housed, fed, clothed and forwarded safely to the Queen's dominions in Canada during the days of American slavery.

By his visits and help among the contrabands along the Mississippi and elsewhere during the war of the rebellion many thousands obtained relief and many were saved from starvation.

His visit to Europe in 1864 resulted in the most extended sympathy for the freedmen, and the contribution of more than one hundred thousand dollars in money and clothing, which was expended among them at that time, and the opening of many hearts of sympathy in their behalf, which has poured a stream of benevolence toward them through the American Missionary Association and other channels, which has continued to flow ever since.

Well may we, as American philanthropists, be proud of the citizen who should receive, when his mission to London was finished, and he about to return home, words of cheer like the following from the men whose names are here annexed:

"Long may it be told that Levi Coffin, in the darkest days of slavery assisted to rescue three thousand three hundred bondsmen from their abject and degraded condition, and placed them in the serene and joyous atmosphere of freedom. And now, thou Apostle of Liberty, we bid thee farewell! Thou hast secured the blessing of him that was ready to perish, and consequently the favor of Him who said: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my little ones, ye have done it unto me.'

"We remain, dear and honored friend, on behalf of the Freedman's Aid Society of London, T. Fowell Buxton, Ch'n; Sam'l Gurney, M. P.; William Allen; Fred Thompkins; Samuel Garrett; F. W. Chesson; John Curwe, Honorary Secretaries, London, June 1876."

Friend Coffin has written a book. It should have been written ten years ago. Then such scenes were fresh. Now they have passed away, and the public mind is quieted on the subject of slavery. But this book revives in all their vividness facts and hair breadth escapes that should never be allowed to lose their thrilling interest. Here is a department of our country's history that ought to be perpetuated if only to secure to coming generations a wholesome national humility for past wickedness. Uncle Levi, as he is called by the ex-slaves he has liberated, has done well to write this book. It is entitled, "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin, the reputed President of the Underground Railroad, being a brief history of the labors of a lifetime in behalf of the slave, with the stories of numerous fugitives who gained their freedom through his instrumentality, and many other incidents. 712 pages; price $2.00.

From incidents here recorded it is believed a large share were drawn upon by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, rendering her "Uncle Tom's Cabin" so interesting and popular. The case of Eliza Harris is one of the stories, no less truthful than interesting, furnished by Uncle Levi, who received and forwarded her to Canada soon after her miraculous escape (See p. 147.):

"From the fact that Eliza Harris was sheltered several days at our house, it was generally believed among those acquainted with the circumstances, that I and my wife were the veritable Simeon and Rachel Halliday, the Quaker couple alluded to in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'

"Eliza said she had as good a master and mistress and as comfortable a 'home' as a slave could have, but she learned that her child was to be sold. She had buried two and was doubly attached to this one."

Extract from her story:

"She watched her oppportunity, and when darkness had settled down and all the family had retired to sleep she started with her child and walked straight toward the Ohio river. It had been frozen over, but the ice had broken. What could she do! She halted! She lingered! Next day at dusk she saw two hunters in full pursuit. She determined to cross or perish in the attempt. Clasping her child in her arms she darted toward the river followed by her pursuers. No fear or thought of danger entered her mind, for she had rather be drowned than captured and separated from her child. Clasping her babe to her bosom, she sprang on to the first cake of ice, then from that to another. Sometimes the cake she was on would sink beneath her weight; then she would slide her child on to the next cake, pull herself on with her hands and so continue her hazardous journey. Wet and cold she made her way from one cake to another, feeling sure that the Lord preserved and upheld her. And so he did. She reached the Ohio side exhausted and almost breathless. A man who had been standing on the bank watching her progress with amazement, expecting every moment to see her go down, assisted her up the bank. After she had recovered strength a little he directed her to a house on the hill where she was kindly received, nourished and conducted to Uncle Levi's depot from which none were ever re-captured."

One thing more with regard to Uncle Levi. He is a true reformer. His principles lead him all the way through. Not a one-sided reformer; he follows Christ, not stopping with one advance movement. Slavery is overthrown, but secret abominations infest the world. Uncle Levi is ever with those that labor for God and humanity.

Editor Christian Cynosure.

Dear Sir:—My letter published in your issue of the 27th of April last, under the caption "A New Emancipation needed," was the signal for a combined and most determined attack on the part of the lodges and their abettors here on the writer. Your humble correspondent was assailed with a bitterness and vindictiveness that I have never known equalled; a bitterness and vindictiveness that gives the lie direct and in the strongest possible form to the professions of charity and benevolence on the part of the order. And, when at last they (the Masons) could do no better they reported that I was a Mason in the "old country" and came here to expose the system. This is an unmitigated, a wilful, deliberate, downright lie, and the men who carried it and put it into circulation knew what it was and who was the father of it. I am anxious to give this Masonic lie the most emphatic and widest possible denial. It astounded me at first. I could not understand it; and thought they were only betraying their cause by circulating it; but after reading "Judge Whitney's Defense" I found they were willing to do even this, if thereby they could invest me Masonically with what is known as "the black shirt." I pray God to forgive them and lay not this sin to their charge. A state of warfare, however, cannot last forever. The storm is now over in this immediate vicinity, although the waves still roll high at a distance, and bid fair to roll on with undiminished volume and force till they pass the boundaries of the State. Here, however, in the very center of all this commotion we are at length in the enjoyment of peace. Under these circumstances I am happy to be able to report that I have not suffered, as yet, in life, limb, or even to any great extent in reputation. From the better class of Masons I apprehend no danger, indeed I believe that to a man this class all wish us God speed. The other class, the poor, silly dupes of Masonry, who know not their best friends, whose intellects have been darkened and muddled, their consciences seared, and their hearts hardened by oaths and obligations of which "a common cannibal" might well be ashamed; men more to be pitied than blamed. These men, if not restrained by a higher power, may still strike it is true, but it will be in the dark. All active, open opposition is at an end, and our noble little anti-secrecy band remain masters of the field. That band is increasing in numbers, in intelligence, in zeal, efficiency for work, and I doubt not their labors will ultimately be crowned with abundant success.

We hope to be able to send you next time a much larger list of subscribers, and by and by an order for more books. Thankful for what has been achieved in the past, we expect a still larger measure of success in the future. With light and truth and love as the weapons of our warfare we cannot fail, for ours is in reality the cause of Him who "hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written King of Kings and Lord of Lords;" and though to the eyes of some of our numbers may appear few, and our strength finite, yet in reality that strength is the strength of Omnipotence, and instead of being few in numbers, "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." All things are working together for our good The very opposition we have encountered has helped us greatly. To you Mr. Editor, and every earnest, honest, conscientious laborer in this reform, I would like to say: "Be strong and of good courage, for their rock is not as our rock," even Masons themselves being judges.

Let me in conclusion guard any who may be in danger of doing so, against supposing that because I am a stranger and foreigner, I can have no interest in the onward and upward, the material and moral advancement of these United States. It is not so. I have many, very many relatives and friends in this country, both North and South. For their sake, for the sake of the country at large, I long to see that monster evil, secretism, abolished; that evil that I have been forced to regard as the "sum of all villainies." No one can be brought into conflict with it as I have been without hating it, and loving those qualities which it would if it could, banish from among men.

"I love an open countenance, a kind and noble face,
The index of an honest heart that loves the human race;
A brow on which a smile is throned like sunlight on a flower,
As open as the regal skies with beams of love and power.'

I long to see the negro raised to a higher intellectual, and especially a higher moral platform than he at present occupies. I long also to see the country re-united, and as a consequence of that reunion, great, glorious and free,—great, glorious and free beyond the dreams of even her greatest and her wisest patriots with every wrong thing righted, with every difference re-adjusted, and no rivalry between the sections North and South, East and West, but the honorable one of doing most good! There is a great improvement in this respect during this Centennial year, as well there may be. Witness, amid very many examples that might be adduced, "The Voice of the Silence," a poem read by Mr. Winter,—blessings on his clear head and on his kindly heart!—at the reunion of the army of the Potomac, Philadelphia, June 6, 1876:

Once more in perfect love, O Lord, our alienod hearts unite
And clasp across the broken sword the hands that used to smite!
And since beside Potomac's wave there's nothing left but peace;
Be filled at last the open grave and let the sorrow cease.
Sweet from the pitying northern pines their loving whisper glows,
And sweetly where the orange shines the palm tree woes the rose;
Oh! let that tender music rain o'er all the years to be,
And Thy great blessing make us one—and make us one with Thee!"

Yours respectfully,

J. H. Hanna.

Can a Quaker be a Freemason.

A correspondent of the Monthly Record for the last month (Eighth month, 1876) inquires, whether there is anything in Freemasonry to prevent a Friend from becoming a Freemason? To obtain an answer to this question, we know of no better course to pursue than to ascertain what opinion has been formed of Masonry by men of Christian character who have been intimately acquainted with it. Amongst these very few can be entitled to greater confidence and respect than the late well known and much loved Charles G. Finney. When a young man, he became a Mason; passed through "three degrees," and became a "Master Mason." After coming under deep religious conviction, he found himself "converted from Freemasonry to Christ," and then, as he records his impressions, "Its oaths appeared to me to be monstrously profane and barbarous."

This and other similar expressions occur in a book written by C. G. Finney upon Masonry, many years after he had, as a requirement of duty, withdrawn entirely from it. In addition to his own personal knowledge, he gives in his book the testimony of several others, of more extensive acquaintance with the order, whose entire credibility he accepts and attests. He does not charge all those who are Masons with discreditable motives or un-Christian characters; but admits that "many good men are Masons, being strangely blinded to the enormities of the system." But he testifies that "all Masons above the first two degrees have solemnly sworn to conceal each other's crimes, murder and treason alone excepted * * * If these oaths are kept inviolate, the course of justice must be effectively obstructed. If they are not kept, Master Masons are guilty of false swearing, and that continually."

Need more be said to prove that a Friend cannot rightly be a Mason? Let us cite Finney's evidence still farther: "It seems to me clear as noonday, that it is an anti-Christian institution." Such was the common conviction of a large number of members of different religious denominations, who, about fifty years ago, after the alleged putting to death of one of their number (Morgan) who had renounced the order and revealed its secrets, left Masonry by thousands at a time. Forty-five thousand, as C. G. Finney asserted, abandoned the order within a few years.

The very best claim made on behalf of Masonry by its advocates is, that it promotes mutual beneficence amongst its members. In this, and this alone, it approaches Christianity; but in the narrowness of its limited benevolence, it falls short. To our judgement, a practical evil connected with it is, that, being essentially without recognition of Christianity, or any religion unless it be "natural" religion, or some vague reference to that of the Old Testament,—its tendency is to substitute the Christian religion, with some, at least, of its votaries. Moreover, the fact that all who enter the portals of any secret association must do so blindly, as regards the kind and extent of the obligations they are to submit to, should alone suffice, in our judgment, to deter those whose consciences forbid them to yield unreserved allegiance to any authority, to any will whatever, except that which is Divine.—Friends Review.

The Prisoner of Fort Niagara.

It is but a single month more than fifty years since William Morgan was seized upon the jail steps of Canandaigua, N. Y., thrust into a close carriage and driven away never to be seen again among his fellowmen. After driving all night the carriage containing Morgan and the party with him drove into the city of Rochester, and the horses were watered at the public reservoir near the center of the city. Hubbard, the driver, afterward testified that one individual alighted from the carriage here, and was absent about fifteen minutes, when the same person returned, as he supposed. The carriage then drove north, about three miles from Rochester, where the ridge road turns off from the river road. It stopped at the tavern at the intersection of the two roads a short time, with the intention of feeding. For some reason this intention was abandoned, and Hubbard drove the carriage about half a mile from the tavern, on the ridge road, and set down the whole party in the road, at a distance from any house, and near a piece of wood. The curtains of the carriage, so far as it had been seen by daylight, were closed. After Hubbard had set his party down, he returned, with the curtains of his carriage rolled up. Soon after the carriage left the tavern, going west, Edward Doyle, of Rochester, rode up on a horse belonging to Ezra Platt, and inquired if such a carriage had passed, and which way it went. Being informed, he followed after it. Platt's carriage, driven by Orson Parkhurst, with some individuals in it, soon drove on the same road. It took up the party that Hubbard had left in the road, or a portion of them, with Morgan, and drove west. Edward Doyle, on horseback, and four or five persons in Hubbard's carriage, returned to Rochester.

A gentleman of Clarkson had engaged a pair of horses of Silas Walbridge of that place, to put before a carriage. The carriage driven by Parkhurst drove up to Clarkson about nine o'clock in the morning, with the curtains and windows closed, though it was a warm day. This is about fifteen miles west of the place where Parkhurst took in his party. Upon its arival in the street of Clarkson, the gentleman who had engaged Walbridge's horses told him that he should not want them, and immediately got into his sulky and drove about two and a half miles further west, and engaged a pair of horses of one Captain Isaac Allen, a farmer. The carriage did not stop in Clarkson, but drove on to Allen's. Upon its arrival Allen's horses were taken out of the orchard where they had been drawing apples, and were harnessed to the carriage which Parkhurst drove, in exchange for the horses which he had before driven; and Parkhurst mounted the box again and drove on west. When the carriage arrived at Gaines, about fifteen miles west of Clarkson, Elihu Mather, residing at that place, took the horses of his brother, James Mather, and followed the carriage which had passed west through the village. He overtook it at some distance from the village, where the horses were exchanged in the street at a distance from any house. When the exchange was effected, Elihu Mather himself got upon the box, and drove the carriage west, while Parkhurst returned east with Allen's horses.

The stage which had left Rochester early the same morning, arrived at Murdoch's tavern before the carriage containing Morgan passed. A gentleman of high standing, of Rochester, was one of the passengers in the stage; when the stage arrived at Murdoch's tavern, this gentleman called the man aside who then had charge of the tavern, and asked him if he was a Royal Arch Mason; being answered in the negative, he asked for writing materials, with which he wrote a note, and despatched a boy with it to Jeremiah Brown, residing in that vicinity. Jeremiah Brown came to the tavern soon after, and held a conversation with him. When the stage went on Brown and the gentleman went on in it. Soon after Brown returned to the tavern with two horses, riding one and leading the other. When the carriage containing Morgan came along, which was soon after, Elihu Mather, who was then driving it, beckoned to Brown after the carriage had passed the house a short distance, and Brown went up to him, and appeared to hold some conversation with him. The carriage drove on. Brown took his horses and followed on after it; but it would seem he left his horses and got on to the carriage himself. Burrage Smith had followed the Morgan carriage in a sulky, but he had not overtaken it when the carriage arrived at Murdoch's. The carriage stopped at evening at the tavern of Solomon C. Wright, in New Fane, in Niagara county, where the road turns off to Lockport, and about three miles distant therefrom. It was here driven into the barn and the doors closed, and the party remained at this place some time to procure refreshments, and to make arrangements for relieving those who had traveled in the carriage with Morgan all day, and the whole of the previous night, and who must necessarily have been greatly fatigued.

Burrage Smith went to Lockport in his sulkey, and, together with Jared Darrow, called upon Eli Bruce, the sheriff of Niagara county, and informed them that Morgan was in their possession, and was going to Canada; and requested Bruce's assistance in getting him along. Bruce and some others went to Wright's, where several persons were assembled. Bruce and David Hague got into the carriage with Morgan; Elihu Mather drove, and Jeremiah Brown was on the box with him, and they left Wright's about ten o'clock in the evening. The persons who came there with Morgan probably most of them went to Lockport that night, and went into Lewiston the next day in a stage coach. At Molyneux's tavern, six miles distant, they stopped; and Bruce procured Molyneux's horses in exchange for Mather's. An individual accompanied the carriage on horseback. Brown then drove, and they reached Lewiston, fourteen miles distant from Molyneux's somewhat after midnight. The carriage was driven around to a back street, and unharnessed. Samuel Burton, one of the proprietors of the stage line at Lewiston, was called upon for assistance. He called up Croydon Fox, one of his drivers, and directed him to harness a carriage. He did so, and drove up to the tavern. Bruce got upon the box with him, and, by his direction, Fox drove around to the back street, where the other carriage was unharnessed; when Morgan was taken out of the one carriage and put into the carriage which Fox drove. Bruce and Hague got in with him, and Fox, by Bruce's direction, drove to Youngstown. They called at the house of Colonel William King, at Youngstown, and stopped. Bruce alighted and called up King, who came out with Bruce, and both got into the carriage. Fox drove on towards the fort, by Bruce's direction; and when arrived at the burying ground near the fort, he was told to stop. He did so; when the persons having Morgan in charge got out, together with Morgan, and all four walked off arm in arm, towards the fort; and Fox was told he might return. Morgan was hoodwinked and bound at this time. It appears that arrangements had been previously made for the reception of Morgan upon the Canada side of the river, with persons residing upon that side. After the party left the carriage they went to the ferry-house, and Colonel King called up Edward Giddins, who then kept the ferry. All of them crossed the river together with Giddins and landed nearly opposite to the fort at some distance from any dwelling. Mr. Giddins and David Hague remained at the boat with Morgan, while Colonel King and sheriff Bruce went into the village of Niagara to see the Masons with whom it had been arranged to receive their victim. They were absent about two hours, and returned with two other men, one of whom was Edward McBride, then a member of the parliament of Upper Canada. After some conference it was determined to bring Morgan back again, inasmuch as the arrangements for the reception in Canada were not yet complete. This event had probably been anticipated, as both Giddins and the keeper of the fort had been requested, two or three days previous, to prepare the magazine for the reception of Morgan; which they had accordingly done, by removing the principal part of of the public property from it. After the refusal of the Canada Masons to receive Morgan, the same persons who had taken him across the river, re-crossed with him, and placed him in the magazine, which had been so prepared for his reception and locked him in. This was sometime before day dawn, on the morning of the 14th of September, 1826. Morgan was left in charge of Edward Giddins. The fort was unoccupied by troops, and indeed was entirely deserted, except by Giddins and the keeper, and their respective families.

Dr. Mackey Weds Freemasonry to Solomon.

BY REV. J. W. RAYNOR.

Morris' Dict., p. 445, "Art. Solomon": "From the hour of his first communion with God upon Gibeon, to the closing chapter of Ecclesiastes, every act of his life is more or less intimately incorporated into the lectures of Masonry, the Blue Lodge degrees, the Mark Master, Past Master and Most Excellent Master, the Council degrees, and many of the degrees of the Scotch system." See also Mackey's Lexicon, p. 445.

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 460: Our lodges, supported by wisdom, strength, and beauty, find in these columns, another analogy to their great prototype, the Temple of Jerusalem."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 467: "The room in which a chapter of Royal Arch Masons meets, is called the Tabernacle, and is a representation of that temporary tabernacle which was erected by Zerubbabel near the ruins of the old temple while the Jews, under his direction, were constructing the new one."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 496: Art. "Traveling Freemasons,") "Like their ancestors, who were engaged in the erection of the magnificent Temple of Jerusalem, they devoted themselves to labor for the House of the Lord, Masonry was then, as it had been before and has been ever since, intimately connected with religion."

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 520: "Our ancestors worked at the construction of the Temple at Jerusalem." Mackey's Lexicon, p. 450: "At the Temple of Solomon, true Freemasonry borrowed its present organization," p. 443, (Art. Solomon,) "King of Israel, and First Grand Master of Masonry."

Is Popularity a Safe Standard?

BY ENOCH HONEYWELL.

If you will go back with me through the last 2,000 years and look at its mammoth crimes, you will then know that it is no safe guide, but has always been polluted with follies and cruelties.

Scribes and Pharisees in their day were the standard of Jewish morals and the leaders of the obsequious multitudes, yet, because of their outside show and inside corruption, Christ pronounced a woe upon them as hypocrites. Can you believe that secret oath-bound lodges are less worthy of that woe than those Pharisees were? Again he says to the people, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees ye can in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." Neither can we if we serve as adjuncts or volunteer as lackeys to popular crimes.

Four hundred years ago Portugal began the slave trade. Then one horse bought sixteen slaves; and although the traffic was the very summum bonum' of piracy, yet half the nations of the earth were soon drawn into that accursed trade. They, like the sycophants of Masonry, sold their conscience—if not their salvation—to fill, or to save their pockets, and to float lazily down stream with the unthinking multitude; for this pet of Satan had then become popular.

Forty years ago, when slavery ruled America, the man that opposed it was called an idiot or an incendiary; he was mobbed, tarred, and egged; and some were shot! But the nation to-day is enjoying the blessed results of that persevering and Christian labor. The voter for the liberty paray was very unpopular; he was accused of wasting his vote; but the accuser soon found that it was seed planted in good ground; final success, through Lincoln, has made that voter a hero. So will Antimasons be esteemed when Masonry dies, as die it must.

Seventy years ago the man who offered no grog to his visitor was, by time-servers, called a niggard. The man or the woman who couldn't or wouldn't play cards was thought stupid.

Our Legislators had to legalize gambling—as they yet do groggerics and clans, in order to retain popular favor; for the thoughtless multitudes float with the popular current, right or wrong; nor do they either look up or look down into their own hearts to see which way they are going. They set conscience, self-respect, bold manhood, and the safety of heaven, all at defiance, rather than leave that rotten ship of popularity; though they know that that ship is drifting them and their country to shame and loss.

All those popular sins of olden times seemed in their respective periods of mad carcer, just as innocent as do the midnight orgies of the present day. Paul was perhaps as innocent in holding the clothes of a mob while Stephen was stoned, as those who let Masonry hide its heathen records under the corner-stones of their public houses, and hold them there, as Paul did the clothes, safe for coming ages to read, to thus find what kind of a fungus growth the nineteenth century was defiled with. As innocent too as those who now vote oath-bound clansmen or their adjuncts into the pulpit, the legislature, or the Presidential chair. Those who love to be dandled in the lap of popularity will still continue to hold fond dalliance with "walking smoke-stacks" and play the spaniel to such crimes, such men, and such measures as I will here relate a case of.

Sixty-one years ago I myself both saw and heard a Kentuckian, while taking a gang of slaves to market, make the following Satanic boast: He said; "I cut three hands full of green beech whips, withered them in the fire, and wore them out on her back, —[his slave]—and I made the blood and mutton fly nicely." And the hearers seemed to sanction the heroic exploit; for whipping women (in the South) was then popular. The devil is proud of such popularity. I saw that slave. She was sold in Natchez, Miss. Davis and Stockton were the slave drivers.

One hundred years ago a British law put men and women in stocks, and then called out the neighboring children to insult and pelt them with filthy missiles. Thus the children were trained, much as a puppy is for lugging pigs; and to about the same moral character.

Roman Catholics once claimed that they were God's vicegerents while stealing men from Africa and making them, first slaves, then Catholics; thus forcing them to a Popish heaven. Masonry claims (by threatening to cut throats and tear out vitals) to fit its members for the "Grand Lodge above." And the Ku-klux say they accept none into their lodge but the moral and PIOUS!! Thus all such secret bandits and their adherents seem to be as safe as it is possible for their "Thrice Illustrious Grand Master" Lucifer to make them. One of the best Presidents our nation ever had was assassinated as part of a programme hatched, hovered, and nurtured in a secret den in Washington City. Yet 5,000 such dens are now protected, feared, favored, and fellowshipped all over our nation.

The above cases are or have been samples of popularity for the last 2,000 years; and the devil is not yet chained. Friend, "Choose ye this day whom you will serve." If Baal, serve him, for his laws are very popular But if God, obey his laws and make yourself and your country happy.

God's true workers in every age have protested against popular sins in high places; and they do yet. Such are the salt of the earth. Reader, are you a reformer? If so let me say to you that I have copied off sixty-three clauses from the Bible showing that we shall be "judged according to the deeds done in the body." Yet while pipe and lodge are cursing the world around you, unthinking millions who will be thus judged, give their silent approval of these popular sins; and thus become "particeps criminis" in them, by refusing to raise a hand or a word in defence of God's violated laws. I hope you are not one of those idlers; but such crouching to fashionable crimes is as common now as it was in the palmiest days of rampant slavery.

Reform News.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman spoke in Milton, Wis., on last Tuesday. He then visited Baraboo, in Sauk Co., returning to Delevan to the State Convention on the 11th.

—The General Secretary also expects to be at the Wisconsin meeting, and Mr. Ronayne will also be there. A full report may be expected in next issue.

The Missouri Christian Association.

The Christian Association for the State of Missouri met, pursuant to the call of the Executive Committee, in annual convention at Chillicothe, on Thursday, August 31, 1876. The Association was called to order by Nicholas Murray, Esq., one of the vice-presidents.

A committee on permanent organization was opened and when this committee reported the organization was completed as follows:

Rev. James Herbert, President.
E. W. Carpenter, Secretary.
E. G. Cooper, Assistant Secretary.
G. W. Needles, Corresponding Secretary.

J. P. Stoddard, General Agent of the N. C. A., Edmond Ronayne of Chicago, and M. R. Britten of Wisconsin, were invited to advisory seats. Committees on Constitution and Publications were appointed.

Upon the report of Committee on Constitution the following preamble and constitution was adopted:

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS, All secret associations, especially the oath-bound, tend to originate and promote distrust, caste, corruption and class hostility; and

WHEREAS, The oaths and penalties by which Freemasonry binds its members to secrecy and mutual succor are far more terrible, and therefore more potent than any known to "civil law," there is no guarantee for equal justice in the courts of the life, liberty, character or property of any citizen, not a Mason, where his opponent and his judge, his lawyer, a witness, or a juror is a Mason; and

WHEREAS, The Masonic system, its rites, oaths, laws, penalties and morality, all are borrowed from ancient heathenism and are contrary to Christian morality; and

WHEREAS, Its organic despotism, with its "head center" more absolute than Herod, is more attractive to bad men than to good, and the bad more naturally aspire to and control it, while the good swindled into it are snared by its foresworn oaths; and

WHEREAS, It thus becomes an anti-republican training school to our young men, with its titles of nobility, hostile to free speech, subsidizing or awing into silence most of the pulpits and the press; armed and drilled, and grasping for power, already counts its annual revenue by millions, holds most of the offices of every grade and department, usurps the prerogatives of the government and people, in dedicating their public buildings, and holds its own laws superior to the civil laws, executing its own death penalties when it dares, on conscientious members, who, like Morgan, expose it; and

WHEREAS, Self-defense and protection against such secret combinations so potent for evil is an imperative duty to ourselves, our families, our country, and the God of nations; therefore,

We, the undersigned citizens of the State of Missouri, for reasons above recited and others not herein named, associate ourselves under the following

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1. This Association shall be called the State Christian Association of Missouri, and shall be auxiliary to the National Christian Association.

ART. 2. The object of this Association shall be to enlighten the public mind respecting the evils set forth in the preamble of this Constitution, and to seek by all lawful means to remove them from both church and state.

ART. 3. The officers of this Association shall be a president, vice-president, corresponding and recording secretaries, treasurer and an executive committee of three, who shall perform the duties usually attached to their respective offices until their successors are elected.

ART. 4. The President, Secretaries and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Executive Committee, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum at any meeting.

ART. 5th. This Association shall meet annually at the call of the Executive Committee.

ART. 6th. Any person in sympathy with the object of this Association may become a member by signing this constitution.

Art. 7. This Constitution may be altered or amended at any meeting of the Association, two-thirds of the members present concurring, provided notice of the proposed change has been given at least one day previous.

ON PUBLICATIONS.

The following paper was adopted:

Resolved, That we hail as a favorable omen to our reform the large increase of tracts, books and publications which have been put in circulation of late, and rejoice in the increased number of testimonies coming from pulpits of different denominations, against the evils of secretism.

Resolved: That we recognize as the State organ, the American Freeman, a fearless, faithful, and reliable defender of our principles, and heartily endorse it as worthy the patronage of every friend of the cause throughout the State, and pledge hearty co-operation in extending its circulation.

Resolved: That we are under obligation to several Christian journals of the day for timely and able articles upon this great subject, and that we feel under special obligation to the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the National Christian Association, and as such we do most heartily endorse it and recommend it to all friends of this movement throughout the country.

Rev. E. G. Cooper was employed as a State Lecturer, and it was resolved by the convention that the State Executive Committee use their best endeavors to organize each county by appointing a central committee of three therein who shall notify the State Lecturer of times and places of meetings in their respective counties. By vote of the Convention the names of A. W. Geeslin, Josiah Beauchamp and Milton Glendenning were added to the list of official members of the Association to increase the Executive Committee.

Amid prayers and much hopefulness and good feeling the Convention adjourned. E. W. CARPENTER, Recording Secretary.

THE IOWA MEETINGS.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, Oct. 4, 1876.

DEAR K.—I am waiting the arrival of a train to convey me to State Center, and will drop you a line simply to say that my labors here are measurably satisfactory, and that this whole region is ready to be canvassed and worked up in our reform work. I have spoken eleven times since coming to this county besides assisting at initiations on two different evenings with Bro. Ronayne. I find much indifference or timidity here on the part of professed and real friends, but less than in many localities. There are also a number of active workers who will not be suppressed. At Albion there is an efficient corps, including A. C. Moffatt, Drs. Lewis and Richey, S. Tripp and Bro. Fulcomer; at Liscomb, Mr. Tripp; at Stanford. Levi Marshall; at LaMoille, Stephen Jackson, Jessie Pemberton and Abner Wickersham; State Center, S. P. Read, Mr. Say and Rev. Blakley, and Jos. McCleery of Marshalltown, who can be reckoned among our true friends and active helpers. There are calls for work coming from numerous points in the county and a willingness shown on the part of the people to bear their proportion of the expenses necessary to a thorough canvass of the whole county. I regret that I cannot remain longer to follow up the work now so promising; but after doing what I can the present week I must leave it for the time being to attend the Wisconsin State meeting at Delevan, and then D. V. the meeting of Western Pennsylvania on the 31st. I am glad to be able to add three names to the club of ten subscribers I sent you on Saturday last, and hope to secure at the least another club before leaving the county. I am to meet the friends at Albion on Friday P. M., for the purpose of organizing a local association. In great haste and with devout thanksgiving to God for his mercies, I am your brother,

J. P. STODDARD.

P. S. No eggs in the bill of fare thus far. J. P. S.

LOCAL ORGANIZATION IN CHAUTAUQUA CO., N. Y.

CLYMER, N. Y.

ED. CYNOSURE:—We have organized a town society in the interests of our reform, here in Clymer, with a noble man B. F. Chadwick Esq., as President; A. Wickwire, a seceding Master Mason as Vice President; and E. Ellis as our Secretary and Treasurer—all of them noble men. We purpose soon to call a meeting and enroll the workers who will help us push the battle on. If some political man, or one that could give his time to the work, could be employed in this town, at least twenty-five votes might be polled for Walker and Kirkpatrick. What about electors for the Empire State? tell us soon in the Cynosure. We want to vote the American Ticket. Yours,

N. R. LUCE, P. E. Sugar Grove District, U. B. Church.

THE FIRES YET AGLOW IN PENNSYLVANIA.

OAKLAND CROSS ROADS, Pa. Sept. 16th, 1876.

Last week I had the pleasure o accompanying brother J. R. Baird on a lecturing tour in various towns on the Allegheny River, near Pittsburgh.

SPRINGDALE.

A flourishing town of several hundred inhabitants, and a regular hotbed of secrecy. Brother Baird delivered a very able lecture on the evening of September 4th, to a large audience in the United Presbyterian Church. The order was, with a very few exceptions, good. At the close of the lecture, one H. G. G. Fink, a quack doctor, Methodist Episcopal local preacher, Freemason, &c., made a very abusive reply, in which he was kind enough to admit that brother Baird had been a Mason, but "was a perjured wretch," (!) and labored hard to beat down what he called a "man of straw," and answer arguments, "as weak (in his estimation), as water," during which a large part of the audience hastily left in disgust; but the quack medicine man, preacher, Mason, &c., all in one, failed to get the "man of straw down," and perhaps a few doses of Fink's celebrated Magic (?) Oil" might have strengthened somewhat said "weak (?) as water arguments." The effervescing of magic oil did no harm, and only served to show the true spirit of Masonry.

Mr. A. M. Hill, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, deserves especial mention for laboring in the good cause, as well as for liberality and hospitable kindness.

PARNASSUS.

This beautiful town of seven hundred inhabitants, is situated on the Allegheny Valley R. R., and is the home of many loved friends and relations, and the place where the writer first preached the Gospel. Brother Baird lectured Sept. 5th and 6th, in Mercantile Hall. The "rains descended," but the hall was crowded each evening. Prof. R. S. Dinsmore occupied the chair the first evening, and Rev. S. B. McBride the second, both presiding with dignity and ability. The prosecrecy and anti-secrecy elements are about equal in Parnassus. Both were well represented. Order was excellent. The friends were wonderfully pleased, but if the devil ever got his due, the secret fellows got theirs; but they sat mute, with faces black as thunder clouds.

At the close of the second lecture, a man who has the honor of belonging to five secret orders, accused brother Baird of not being a Methodist (Wesleyan) minister; but the writer, (known to all present) took pleasure in rising and making a little statement concerning brother Baird, which caused the secret order man to suddenly sit down, realizing that his ears weighed considerably more than his brains.

TARENTUM.

The climax of grand success was gloriously capped by the triumph, September 7th and 8th, at Tarentum, a delightful town a few miles above Parnassus. The lectures were in the fine large United Presbyterian Church, of which the eloquent Rev. Mr. Timmons is pastor, and whose thunder-toned denunciations of secrecy, and vanquishings in debate, at various times, of the immaculate and high-toned secrecy champion, Rev. D. L. Dempsey, have caused him to be more hated by all "good Masons and Odd-fellows" than ever the infallible pope at Rome hated Martin Luther. Five hundred present the first night, and brother Baird more than sustained his reputation as an able lecturer, but he told the secret order men that what they got that night was only a mosquito bite, compared with what they would get the next night, announcing at the close that "he would resurrect Hiram Abiff," go through the ceremony of "crossing Jordan," &c., and notice the Odd-fellows and minor orders "simlar to Masonry,

During the day previous to the second evening, in anticipation of the large audience, the aisles and every nook and corner of the church were filled with seats, and they were needed, for by half past seven the church was densely packed with at least seven hundred persons, and brother Baird fully redeemed his promise of the first evening. Every opportunity was given at the close of the second lecture, to test the lecturer and prove him an imposter, if possible, but the Masons only sat and scrowled, without daring to make the attempt. The lectures throughout were a grand success, and brother Baird was well remunerated for his labors, and carried away with him the best wishes of hosts of friends. From Tarentum we proceeded to the Shelhammer Wesleyan Methodist Church in Armstrong county; where brother Baird assisted at our

QUARTERLY MEETING.

Brother Baird preached very able sermons on Saturday evening and Sabbath morning. Notwithstanding the wet weather on Sabbath, a good congregation was present, and we had a precious time in morning lovefeast. Things are working smoothly on Conemaugh Charge, and we feel that the good Lord is blessing us.

Your brother in Christ,
A. THOMPSON WOLFF.

OUR CENTENNIAL LETTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 27, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—If I don't write you to-night some account of the past three days I fear the record would be lost in the great crowd and teeming events of the day of days, to-morrow—the Philadelphia holiday, and State occasion to do the honors on account of having the world's gathering here.

I must not attempt to narrate all the interesting incidents which are continually transpiring, nor to record even the names of the many excellent friends of the cause who call with words of cheer, some of them having spent hours in finding us. Let me here say for the information of future visitors that our stand is in the south-east corner of the main building, nearest forty-first street. Any one looking at the wondrous display of the Bible in two hundred languages can by turning around see our stand and the Cynosure Banner in one of the angles facing the British and foreign Bible Society. On the other side of the same case is the display of the American Bible Society. Many Bibles printed hundreds of years ago are here shown.

Every real lover of the Bible and free speech will gladly welcome our testimonial literature against the enslavement of our citizens to the bogus oaths and mythical rites and ceremonies of Masonry borrowed from the dark ages of the world and which mirabile dictu, in this age and nation are now being actively propagated! I desire before giving any incidents to present the following extract from "Mackey's Masonic Ritualist." From 2 Thess. iii. 6-12 verses. We quote only part of wo verses, from edition, 1873:

Now we command you brethren that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly. * *	Verse 6. Now we command you brethren in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that ye withdraw &c.
Now them that are such we command and exhort that with quietness they work * *	V. 12. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus, that &c.

Mackey's work gives the above as if it was the exact language quoted from 2 Thess. His whole quotation is represented as given from 2 Thess. iii. 6-16, but the glaring and daring omission of the words we have italicized from the New Testament ought to strike with horror every Christian caught in the lodge.

Masonry thus dethrones Christ and enthrones itself; but it tells applicants for its favors that it does not interfere with any one's religion! and hundreds of otherwise intelligent citizens accept the lie. Delusive assertion. Verily it seems like a moral mania raging in our land.

"THE SHOCK OF ENTRANCE."

Under the above head in Mackey's Ritualist occur these sentences:

"Having been wandering amid "the errors and covered over with "the pollutions of the outer and "profane world, he comes inquiring- "ly to our doors seeking the NEW "BIRTH and asking a withdrawal of "the vail which conceals DIVINE "TRUTH from his uninitiated sight. "And here as with Moses at the burn- "ing bush, the solemn admonition is "given, "Put off thy shoes from off "thy feet for the place whereon thou "standest is HOLY ground:" and the "ceremonial preparations around "him, all of a significant character, "to indicate to him that some great "change is about to take place in his "moral and intellectual condition " * * initiation is, as it were, a "death to the world and a resurrection "to a new life * * Masonry "stands before the neophyte in all "the glory of its form and beauty to "be fully revealed to him, however, "only when the new birth has been "completely accomplished. * * "Shall not all the sons of light " * * in the heart burst of their "grateful joy, (exclaim) "O clap your "hands all ye people, shout unto God "with the voice of triumph."

"The shock of entrance is then "the symbol of the disruption of "the candidate from the ties of the "world and his introduction into "the life of Masonry. It is the "symbol of the agonies of the first "death and of the throes of the new "birth."

Reader, we spare you farther quotations at present. The last sentence is italized by Mackey. The preceding italics are ours,

If there are any revivals where greater "heart bursts" and "grateful joy" and "shouts unto God," over the "new birth," from the "pollutions" of the "profane world," in "divine truth," or where "death to the world" and a "resurrection to a new life" should cause all the peo- to clap their hands and shout with the voice of triumph, with more enthusiasm than these Masonic expressions would convey; the reader will please notify the Cynosure—but oh! some say that Masonry is not a religion!

Well, now let us have a sample of its song:

"Hail Masonry divine,
Glory of ages shine
Long mayest thou reign
Where e'er thy lodges stand
May they have great command
And always grace the land:
Thou art divine.
Great fabrics still arise
And grace the azure skies;
Great are thy schemes:
Thy noble orders are Matchless beyond compare,
No art with thee can share;
THOU ART DIVINE.

But what of the prayers? Here is the one I find on page 24. As it is short try to put it all in.

"Vouchsafe thine aid, Almighty Father of the universe, to this our present convention, and grant that this candidate for Masonry may dedicate and devote his life to thy service, and become a true and faithful brother among us. Endue him with a competency of thy divine wisdom, that by the secrets of our art he may be better enabled to display the beauties of godliness to the honor of thy holy name. So mote it be. Amen."

The above is a faithful copy, italics included. Your readers can see its character. Christ says in John 14: "In my Fathers house are many man sions; if it were not so I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you....No man cometh unto the Father but by me....If ye shall ask any thing in my name I will do it," and in the preceding verse the reason is given, viz: "That the Father may be glorified in the Son."

But Freemasonry is an infidel concerning Christ. It goes not to his Father nor where the "many mansion's" are, but off in some wild balloon sent from Babel's tower, it tries to reach the cars of the great architect of the universe, whom they imagine has some lodge for them.

"When the final trump shall sound
To judge the world of sin
Within thy courts, may we be found
Eternally til'd in."—[RITUALIST, p. 228.

"Til'd in." Is not that fine? "TIL'D IN"! We pause. We cannot imagine that infatuation can carry poor mortals any further. And we have in this country, speaking our language, reading our Bibles, worshipping in our churches, preaching in our pulpits and teaching in our Sunday schools, men, brothers, fathers, husbands, in the sworn bonds of brotherhood with such a religion and such a fraternity as this! With some of them we may sympathize and regard them as unwilling captives, deceived and caught, but unable to get out on account of their dread of committing perjury.

This idea arises from misconception of the Masonic for the judicial oath, which was to confirm truth, and be an end of controversy, no more to be said by the witness. The practice of taking oaths of like character to those of Masonry, is so ancient, that the Divine law (Lev. v. 45) censures them as sin which requires confession, and an offering from the perpetrators of them. The authorized oath was used to testify of things known by the sworn witness, who in our civil courts is bound to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But the Mason is bound to "ever conceal and never reveal" any of the secret arts, &c., which may now or in the future be revealed to him. Oaths of this kind are simply profane oaths which require confession and abandonment, no matter how many ministers and members of churches play false to their profession as followers of Christ the only master.

These remarks have extended farther than I intended. Suffice it meantime to say that Mackey is like a valuable gun captured from the enemy and turned against him. The above mutilation of the quotation presented to their own eyes causes them to stare, and already more than one has tried to impeach the authority of even Mackey's Ritualist! Masonic authority for its votaries has a fair parallel in Romanism and its books. Masonry and Romanism are a pair of infallibles, whose infallibility is not in their books but in their myths and mysteries and their supreme pontiffs.

Incidents from Sept. 23d to 28th. A young man who intended to join because he had relatives who are Masons, being pressed to consider the subject, met all efforts by resistance and went off abruptly with an attempted laugh and the remark, "I don't want to be convinced."

A lady writer for Eastern religious journals was shown the "New Birth" language of Mackey, the profane representation of Moses and the holy ground, and astonishment reached its maximum when she saw the unconfessed multilation of the Scriptures and the omission of the name of Christ from 2 Thess. iii. 6-12 verses. It was evident that she thought it high time to testify against such a daring and guilty usurper.

A gentleman from the Dominion once was a Mason but is now against them.

Three hearty young farmers "were boys grown up together." But one had escaped the lodge, and gladdened me by his unexpected response. He had instinctively repelled the yoke, and rejoices now, more assured in his freedom.

WARM FRIENDS.

J. G. Smith, Esq., of Beverly, Mass., a Cynosure subscriber, would be glad if some good lecturer could come to that neighborhood.

Robert Paley and his excellent wife, of Illinois made a cheering visit. Very pleasant was the sight and conversation of our revered and aged friend Isaac Preston, now eighty-four years of age, on a visit to his early home and the Centennial.

A Rev. gentleman agreed in sentiment with us but, &c. Oh these Masonic chur.! members how they fetter the expression of sentiment and action of others.

Lady and gentleman from Mass. "What? The look indicated something. Oh, he sets it out, he had been a Mason of three degrees, but it was all a humbug and he told everybody so! Yes, said his good lady, they all know their sentiments.

A Rev. friend of Bro. Stoddard from Ohio, also found the place and a welcome; also Mr. and Mrs. Jerrelden; Wallace of O., and E. E. J. Meyers, one of your subscribers.

We have had several contributors to the tract fund, also. The lead is taken by our energetic Conn. President, J. A. Conant, who handed me three dollars; Mr. Verbeck of Stillwater, one dollar. Mr. V. is neighbor to Mr. Mosher, and both stand equally up to the work; also Mr. George and Mr. Anderson of Ellington, Pa., who are Cynosure readers. Miss Post, sister to A. L. Post, gave the tract fund a dollar, and we shall leave the banner at her seat in the meantime. A Rev. gentleman from New Jersey had for two years been intending to join the Masons and was merely waiting convenience, but what he had heard, &c.

Another, a Presbyterian, was with us, but circumstances, &c. He continues to pay in his fees to the lodge. He smiled and smiled. "Masonry is not so bad as Romanism,—ah, well." It was pleasanter to talk with another Rev. and lady. The sword shown was 2 Thess. and the multilation. The lady looked convinced and lovingly turned her eyes to her husband in confidence that he would see it too! But he had been caught, and I believe felt the situation. Her eyes fell and I felt inclined to let go; but he ventured the Masonic theory of three solemn oaths, when Lev. v. 4, and contrast of judicial oath put that straight. It is pitiful to find such men under the shell. They must yearn for soul freedom. No doubt they do. Our excellent friend, Rev. Mr. Habburd, also brought a friend.

A Disciple preacher sat a while listening and then made himself known. There are Masonic and Odd-fellow members in the church where he is. He had often been asked to join, but had not; was strengthened against them. Another member of same body, from another State, found how the wind blew and although at first a Mason, at least had not been in a lodge for five years.

A gentleman was glad to see the Cynosure; didn't know of such a paper.

A man who had tried to justify the multilation of the Bible and was blind morally, spiritually and intellectually called again and had a hand-shake, and apologized for not seeing the wrong.

Last but not least we shall introduce you to Samuel French Esq., of Chapin Ill.; the candidate for Lieutenant Governor of Illinois on the American Party ticket. A substantial, honest, Christian farmer, in every way worthy of the honor.

THOMAS HODGE.

Ronayne Again Sustained.

In conversation with a gentleman on the subject of Freemasonry he informed me that he entertained the idea that there was something desirable in the order, and that he had fully determined that he would at some time know for himself. He further informed me that to join the lodge in the city where he resided, would cost one hundred and fifty dollars, and he had not felt that he could yet afford it; but hoped to be able soon to do so. After getting his views, I informed him that he was very much mistaken in his estimate of the order; that it was a stupendous humbug, and how men of good principles could be completely infatuated with the institution was to me something inexplicable. Yet it was undoubtedly true that many good men had been hoodwinked into Freemasonry, and by some strange process of reasoning—or want of reasoning—had been induced to consider it a very worthy order. I then read to him from "Ecce Orienti" some of the more salient points of the secret "work," and assisted him to read the cypher. When I had his interest thoroughly aroused, I proposed to teach him the "secrets" of Masonry and furnish him a "Hand Book" from which he could become "bright," and know all the much vaunted mysteries of the "Blue Lodge," for the modest sum of fifty cents. He accepted my offer, and on the 15th of August I sold him a "Hand Book" and drilled him on the steps, due-guards, signs, grips and words, exactly as Mr. Ronayne taught me, and as he has given them in his book. As I received a letter from him dated at Sedalia, Mo., Sep. 9th, I will give his exact words that all may see how he succeeds as a Mason:—

By the way, I have got to be a "bright," No. 1 Mason, I can work by the square and compass with the best of them, and let me tell you, I am having a "heap" of fun with it. While at Burlington, Iowa, I met a traveling man, who wore the badge of a Mason. As we were stopping at the same house, I thought it would be a fine opportunity for me to practice. He applied the usual test to me and pronounced me "sound," and invited me to his room for practice; said he was J. W. of his lodge, and being away so much he "got dull." I soon found that I understood Masonry better than he did, and during my stay (over Sunday,) he kept me all my lessure time practicing with him. Since then I have met many Masons who take me for a brother every time. Many thanks, Doctor, for your cheap Masonry, as I got the genuine article so much below its marked value."

I have not given the gentleman's name or address, but I can "vouch" for him, and he will be a good worker in as yet a comparatively unoccupied field. What a good thing Masonry will be, and how it will help men to travel, when we get a few hundred such men scattered all over this country. If Masonry is so good I can see no objection to helping men to it cheap, and then they are not debauched with those blasphemous oaths that were made up in a grog-shop. Well, says one, you encourage men to be hypocrites, in pretending to be what they are not. But such a charge is applicable to all Masons, for they claim to be in possession of great mysteries, and superior wisdom, that can be obtained only in the lodge, and that to, at a cost of from twenty-five to one hundred and fifty dollars!!

I should consider Mr. Ronayne one of the greatest philanthropists of the age, if what Masons and their jacks say of Masonry is true, and all lovers of the human race should work for such great knowledge to become universal and not confine it to healthy, able-bodied men.

I am willing to do what I can to spread the light, and take every occasion to do so. Masons have withdrawn their patronage, so I am not afraid any more of giving offense to friends, and I feel the greatest freedom and the largest liberty. Yet one thing surprises me, I find they do not control as much public patronage as I supposed. At least I do not feel the loss of their patronage financially.

I was pleased with the remarks of a gentleman yesterday, and I will give them here. He informed me that a number of years ago he was preparing for a trip to California, and some of his friends who were going with him joined the Masons, and urged him to do so. As his father was a Master Mason, he asked his advice. The old gentleman said, "Never do it, my son; only dead-beats, and men who take every advantage to accomplish their selfish ends reap any benefit. It would be a nuisance to you." "So mote it be."

Our Mail.

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"One man, seventy years of age, and thirty years a Mason, said to me that there is not one truth in Honeywell's tracts I asked him if Masonry was a religious institution. He said it was not. Then why do ministers and Christians belong, and why do some preachers tell us they will leave the church before they would leave the lodge. I asked him if he was acquainted with E. Ronayne. He said he was not. I showed him Mr. Ronayne's picture in the Cynosure, and "Freemasonry at a Glance," and explained the pictures, even to the use of the common gavel, and told him that the Freemasons of Chicago have conceded to him the right to tell the truth (which is all he wants) and some have openly confessed that these exhibitions are strictly true, and agree exactly with the truth contained in these tracts. This ended our conversation as he got to reading and then bought that Cynosure, the first and only one that I have sold yet. Another Mason about my age, seeing this champion was silenced came up and resumed the argument. I asked him if Masonry was a religious institution. He said it was; that Masonry was founded on the Bible, etc. I read to him in Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, 'Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else;' and also A. G. Mackey and Daniel Sickles on pages 12 and 13 in the address of Pres. H. H. George. So we find Masons differ, for they themselves don't know what Masonry is."

James W. Raynor, Montrose, Susquehanna Co., Pa., writes:

"Will every friend of our cause in Pennsylvania send to me or Rev. N. Callender, Green Grove, or Rev. A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa., the names of men they desire in their respective localities for Presidential electors, that we may make up a ticket as soon as possible?"

P. Bacon, Weatogue, Vt., writes:

"The Cynosure is the last paper that I would give up. The longer I read it the better I like it."

A widow of one of our warmest friends writes:

'This is a strong Masonic city. I wish for some tracts to distribute."

We publish this hoping it will meet the eye of other friends who have time to help on the cause in this way.

Rev. A. D. Carter, Deersville, Harrison Co., O., writes:

"I will say that as I am engaged but half of my time the present year in pastoral duties, I propose to devote my leisure time in lecturing against secret societies in Ohio. You may therefore place my name and address in the published list of lecturers."

Lorenzo D. Brown, Montmorenci, Ind., sends for twelve different kinds of tracts and writes:

"I want to scour our township before election. Can you get a list of the names of all the Masons in Indiana? It would be valuable to me. I want to get the people ready for a lecture by Ronayne or some one else."

We do not know of any source from which we can obtain the list you ask for.

John Dorcas, Shiloh, Iowa, writes:

"I tried both of our county papers today to have them publish Edmond Ronayne's affidavit in relation to Masonry as published in the Cynosure of August 31st, and I could not get it done. I then engaged with one of them to strike me off three hundred or more copies of the same to hand round. I have also written to Ronayne to see if he can come to our place, provided we can raise the means to defray expenses. We who are opposed to secrecy cannot be heard through our county papers if the editors think best to keep us out. The lodge controls the press whether it owns it or not."

This affidavit is certainly of general interest, and every editor who wishes to benefit his readers should allow it to appear in his paper. Let others test their county papers by presenting this affidavit for publication.

The National S. S. Teacher for October will be found as usual of great value to teachers who wish to prepare in a thorough manner for their classes. It introduces to the study of the Bible in a special manner. The "Biblical Lesson Outline" is worth columns of dry notes. Adams, Blackmer and Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

The New York Tribune has again placed the public under obligations by publishing in its cheap and convenient "Extra" form all of Prof. Huxley's public addresses during his recent stay in this country. All are given in full, and those which will attract the most attention and discussion, the three in New York on the Direct Evidence of Evolution, are fully illustrated by drawings from the diagrams used in the lectures. The opportunity to hear Prof Huxley could be improved by comparatively few, but the Tribune extra, for the small sum of 10 cents in pamphlet form, removes the disadvantages and places all on an equality so far as these lectures are concerned. While we recommend no on one to accept the views of Huxley, his lectures give the latest theories of the scientists of his class who have substituted speculation for faith in all spiritual matters.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

BIBLE IN SCHOOLS:—E. S. WELLS, ESQ.

The statement concerning Mr. E. S. Wells, made on the authority of a respected citizen of Chicago, seems to have been incorrect and to do injustice to Mr. Wells. He writes that he signed the call on Dr. Patton requesting him to speak, but adds :—

"I am as far as you can possibly be from any sympathy with the exclusion of the Bible from our public schools."

We imagined that the "numerously signed call on Dr. Patton was a crafty and trumped-up affair, which would seem to have been the case. Many like Messrs. Baird and Bradley signed the call, who, as Mr. Wells writes us, had no spmpathy with Dr. Patton's ideas. Yet the fact that he has all along advocated the Bible exclusion, gave, and doubtless wasintended to give the public an impression that the signers of his call were in sympathy with his views; thus trading upon false capital.

The attempt to denude government of Christianity, men being as they are, "worshiping animals," (as a writer has said,) without sanctioning false religions, is just as impracticable as to put down one end of a scale or balance beam without lifting up the other. The state, like Pilate, has a Saviour on its hands, and must, and will recognize him or crucify him. But recognizing Christianity by administering oaths by fasts, thanksgivings, chaplains etc., is no more "church and state" than saying the Lord's Prayer is sectarianism.

THE MOLLY MAGUIRES.

This dreaded gang of oath-bound murderers has at length fallen into the power of the courts and is likely to be wholly broken up. The conceit of the ancients that justice followed the wrong-doer limping and slow has been completed in their case by Horace's poetical imagery picturing the criminal fleeing but punishment always sitting behind him on his horse. These Molly Maguires have surely verified, too, the Scripture: "Because sentence against an evil work is not exccuted speedily therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." For years they have plied their bloody work with impunity, protected by their secrecy and the dread of their vengeance; which is about all the bulwark now left the Masonic order. The immediate occasion of the final efforts to arrest the course of this secret fraternity was the murder of policeman Yost at Tamaqua, Pa. Pinkerton's and other detective agencies were set to work with little result other than to exasperate the order to greater villainy. The efforts of President Gowan of the Reading railroad were more successful in getting into the secrets and plots of the organization and bringing its members to justice. Nine have now been convicted and sentenced to be hung during the present month and the next. About as many more are waiting their triai and will probably meet a like doom. The political use made of this order has been at times referred to in our columns. Alexander Campbell, one of the condemned, was quite a local politician,and men of supposed respectability were known to have sought and used the power he exercised through connection with the Mollies. The origin of this secret clan was Irish and its members are nearly all of that race. A correspondent of the Chicago Tribuue furnishes the following sketch of its origin furnished, it is said, by one of its "chiefs":

"The body is but one of the numerous secret organizations that came into existence in Ireland during the latter part of the last century. These secret bodies were known by different appellations, such as the "Levelers," the "White Boys," the "Hearts 'o Steel" or "Steel-Boys," the "Peep-'o-Day Boys," the "Right-Boys" and others. These, although operating under different names, had generally but one common purpose in view, which was to resist the rapacity of landlords, who rented their lands far above their value, and, when the tenant had not the means to pay promptly on "rent-day," seized his goods, or flung him and his family out to perish by the roadside. Many persons are said to have died through exposure by these cruelties. Prior to the accession of George III. to the English throne, secret societies were entirely unknown in Ireland. The first agrarian outrages are said to have been commenced about November, 1760. Numerous causes combined to create these organizations,—the prime cause, however, being the despotism of the landlords and the heartlessness of the "tithe-mongers," who squeezed out the very vitals of the people, and by process, citation, and sequestration, dragged from them the little which the landlord had left them. The people were ground down to very servitude; there was no law for them. The ear of Justice was deaf to their appeals. So outrageous and continued became these oppressions that the people set about for a remedy, which had for its aim the murder of landlord and agent, and the demolition of their property, as a revenge for their cruelty, which is said to have been unparalleled in the history of any land.

At the time when the name of a landlord in Ireland was the synonym of cruelty, there lived in the County Roscommon an old widow named Molly Maguire. She had a small holding of land, and struggled hard to bring up the family of boys which her husband had left her. The constant failure of the crops made her somewhat tardy in paying her rent; and at length the land-agent, an unscrupulous man, determined to eject her from the little home that was so full of sacred recollections to her. He summoned his "crowbar brigade,"—a gang of men kept in those days by every land-agent, for the purpose of evicting tenants, throwing the houses over the heads of those who refused to leave, and seizing the cattle of others for rent—and went to the "shuling" (hut or cottage) of Molly Maguire. The gray-haired matron was alone at her spinning-wheel when the cruel gang came. They commanded her to leave; but so attached was she to the old hearth, so heart-broken at the prospect of eviction, that she said she would die first, and refused to be dragged from the hut. The brigade then commenced the work of destruction, and, laying their iconoclastic hands on the cottage, soon hurled it over the prostrate form of old Mrs. Maguire, who was killed in the ruins.

The cruel act stirred the popular sentiment to a white heat, and, at the old woman's wake, a few enraged and desperate men pledged themselves to be revenged for her death. Headed by two of Molly Maguire's sons, they banded themselves into a society, to which they gave the murdered woman's name, and, in a short time, it spread throughout the adjoining counties of Mayo and Galway. Land agents were occasionally shot, barns burned, and often in the morning an agent went into his domain and was shocked to see his fine herd of cattle disfigured by having their tails cut off during the night. These atrocities continued for some time, but at present are unknown in Ireland. The introduction of the Molly Maguire movement into the coal-regions occurred about the close of the war. It was revived by some dissatisfied and desperate minors, for the purpose of having revenge on mine-bosses and others in authority in and around the collieries, and received its title from some of the old workman, who, in their younger days, at home, held tryst with the leaders in some secluded spot where the "peelers" would not be likely to find them.

As the society grew in numbers and power, it was merged with the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and now exercises the widest and most evil influence in a section of Pennsylvania where law and order are not respected.

The men thus flying from monarchical tyranny in Europe have sought this country under pretense of enjoying its free institutions. They, like the Masonic lodge, have set up a system more despotic than that from which they fled, the despotism of anarchy. Their freedom was to prey on all outside their oath-bound clan freedom—to drink, fight, shoot and murder in cold blood; Masonry also recognizes no laws but its own and they have served to protect the worst crimes excited by lust, revenge or avarice. Let us regard the downfall of the Pennsylvania clan as prophetic. The Centennial year sees the beginning of the end. Let no longer the oaths of secret organizations protect their members from the laws of the land and these fraternities are practically disbanded.

GATHERING AND SCATTERING:—An article in the Cynosure of two weeks ago, entitled, "He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad," contained some views, in our judgment either incorrect or liable to be misunderstood. A reply was intended in the same number but pressure of other matters prevented. The "step-at-a-time policy" is one. Individual reformation is necessarily complete if it is genuine, but in communities and nations it must be "precept upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line." While the standard of reform must be at its highest, and there must be no relaxing of effort until it is reached, the work of raising a whole people to that standard is of Omnipotence alone. The carrying of any moral question to the ballot-box is only one of the steps up the mountain. It is not a final reference either in the anti-lodge, temperance or any other reform. It is no "abandonment" but a proper use of those weapons God has put in our hands. If any one has proposed to leave such questions for final settlement to the ballot-box it is certainly an error and folly. The men engaged in our reform must not yet be given over to stupidity. It would be worse than that to stake our cause for instance on our success in the impending election.

As for Mr. Moody he is human in judgment, but we believe him sincere in his efforts to reform the world, and bring all men into a state of holy living before the Lord.

—Bro. Parker Hurless, of the Christian Radical, has published a tract by Rev. W. H. Chandler, of the United Brethren Theological Seminary, Dayton, O., entitled, "Shall we Abandon our Position on Secret Societies?" We have not seen the tract, but the characters of its author and publisher is a good endorsement. May it be scattered by the hundreds of thousands.

—Bro. Needles is beginning to reap already in Missouri. So strongly does public sentiment set in against the lodge, that in a late Democratic nominating convention, at least two candidates were chosen who are non-Masons and one of whom is a decided Anti-mason.

—"August Newhaus, a store-keeper and secret partner in the Lake Shore Distillery Company, yesterday pleaded guilty to "whisky crookedness" before Judge Blodget and was fined $500. Sentence was suspended. Lorenz Mattern, a revenue official, likewise pleaded guilty, and was fined $500. His fine was likewise suspended."—Tribune.

This is the old story. Both men are members of Chicago lodges.

—Can any reader answer the following?

I see in the Cynosure of Sept 21st, that Waldenses from South America are settling in Missouri. Can you tell in what county, and any of their ministers' names and post offices? Perhaps some of the readers can give information. F. S.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois held its annual meeting in this city last week, but kept out of the papers so entirely that little but the names of committees and of the officers elected are generally known. The great charity known as the Masonic Orphan's Home which has burdened the Grand Lodge for several years was at length buried by reference to the subordinate lodges. The report of the last day's session is as follows :

The Grand Lodge convened at 9 A. M. yesterday, M W Deputy Grand Master Joseph Robbins, of Quincy, in the Chair. The special order for 10 A. M. being the election of officers, the Grand Lodge went into election, with the following result ; R W W J A De Sanery, of Centralia, Deputy Grand Master ; R W Henry E. Hamilton, of Chicago, Senior Grand Warden ; R W W H Scott, of Troy, Junior Grand Warden ; R W A A Glenn, of Mt. Sterline, Grand Treasurer ; R W John F Burrill, of Springfield, Grand Secretary. The report of the Committee on Masons' Orphanns' Home was referred to the subordinate Lodges for action. The annual oration was delivered by the Grand Orator, George M. McConnell, of Chicago, after which the Lodge adjourned.

There has be en recently incorporated in Boston an association of teachers and others interested in the introduction of the Metric weights and measures, under the name of the American Metric Bureau. Art. 2 of its constitution reads as follows:—

"The object of this Bureau shall be to disseminate information concerning the Metric System; to urge its early adoption; and to bring about actual introductions wherever practicable. To this end it will secure the delivery of addresses; publish article; circulate books, pamphlets and charts; distribute scales and measures; introduce the practical teaching of the system in schools; and in all proper ways, as far as the means at its disposal will allow, the Bureau will urge the matter upon the attention of the American people till they shall join the rest of the world in the exclusive use of the International Decimal Weights and Measures."

This Bureau already includes among its members many of our prominent educators, and its numbers are rapidly increasing. An office has been opened at 13 Tremont place, Boston, and as soon as suitable arrangements can be made, branch offices are to be opened in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other central localities, where all persons interested are invited to call or to write freely in regard to any matter pertaining to the work of the Bureau.

Religious Intelligence

—Societies called "Mother's Peace Associations" are being formed among the Friends, and the object deserves the attention and co-operation of all evangelical bodies. The object as stated in the constitution is to cultivate in the minds of children and all others, a desire for the fruit of the Spirit, which is "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith," and also a distaste for envy, hatred, strife, jealousy, revenge, and the like, that they may grow up lovers of peace, and with an abhorrence of war and the untold evils that follow in its train. Members of these societies are expected to guard the children as much as they can from reading literature calculated to fire the martial spirit, and to supply them plentifully with such tracts and other publications as will help to build them up in the principles of peace.

—The Emperor of Germany has expressed a desire that the next General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance may be held in Berlin.

—The Presbytery of Butler, Pa., United Presbyterian church, at a late meeting, adopted the following relating to secret societies:

Whereas, The secret orders of the day are sweeping broadcast over our country almost unrebuked, daring to come into our U. P. congregations and families, taking our hopes and helps from our own ranks and depleting our numbers, reducing our power and disgracing our Master and his gospel; therefore,

Resolved, That we use our influence in a gospel way to secure such a county convention and organization as will, in future, educate the people on this form of Anti-christ so thoroughly that the deception and bondage of Satan may be the exception and not the rule in our country and churches.

—A deep sympathy will be felt for Rev. T. R. Cross, late of Hamilton, N. Y., in recent severe afflictions, as told in the Advance. "He with his wife and child, arrived at Cheyenne on their way to his new field of labor at Colorado Springs, Sept. 20. They had a sad journey. When they left Hamilton they brought along with them the remains of a child for burial at Oberlin, Ohio. They arrived at Richland, D. T., just in time for Mrs. Cross to take the hand of her dying mother. On the way down from Portlandville to Sioux City, Thursday evening, an infant child of theirs died on the train, and they returned to Richland to bury it beside its grandmother. The remaining child was taken very ill, but so far recovered that they started on and at last accounts had reached Cheyenne, and expected to push on immediately to Colorado Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Cross have the deep sympathy of all their friends, both old and new, in these great afflictions."

Brother Cross is author of the popular tract on "Secretism," was secretary of the Worcester National Convention, and has always been an active friend of the reform.

News of the Week.

—New lines of street rail way have been put down and 200 new horse-cars have been bought to accommodate the crowds that attend the revival meetings in this city.

Colorado at her first vote as a State has gone Republican.

—Stormy weather on the lakes was very disastrous last week. One or more vessels were lost with all on board.

London, Oct. 9.—It is stated that Russia has offered Roumania absolute independence if Russian troops are allowed to march through Roumanian territory. The military preparations of Russia continue. It is an ugly sign that the Russian reserve have been forbidden to leave their places of residence. The public in Russia look on war as probable. A panic exists on the St. Petersburg Exchange.

The English Cabinet has made a formal proposal to the Powers for a conference. Russia also urges a conference. In addition to this, both powers agree to the necessity of a month's armistice. There is, therefore, reason to hope that Russia and England are not so diametrically opposed to each other as people believe.

The Home Circle.

The Barren Fig-tree.

Within the vineyard's sunny bound
An ample fig-tree shelter found,
Enjoying sun and showers;
The boughs were graceful to the view,
With spreading leaves of deep green hue,
And gaily blushing flowers.

When round the vintage season came,
This blooming fig was still the same,
As promising and fair;
But though the leaves were broad and green,
No precious fruit was to be seen,
Because no fruit was there.

"For three long years," the master cried,
"Fruit on this tree to find I've tried,
But all in vain my toil;
Ungrateful tree! the axe's blow
Shall lay thy leafy honors low;
Why cumbers it the soil?"

"Ah! let it stand just one year more,"
The dresser said, "till all my store
Of rural arts I've shown;
About the mossy roots I'll dig,
And if it bear we've gained the fig—
If not, then cut it down."

How many years hast thou, my heart,
Acted the barren fig-tree's part,
Leafy and fresh and fair,
Enjoying heavenly dews of grace,
And sunny smiles from God's own face—
But where the fruit? oh! where?

How often must the Lord have prayed
That still my day might be delayed,
Till all due means were tried;
Afflictions, mercies, health, and pain,
How long shall these be all in vain
To teach this heart of pride?

Learn, O my soul, what God demands
Is not a faith like barren sands,
But fruit of heavenly hue;
By this we prove that Christ we know
If in his holy steps we go—
Faith works by love, if true.

—[Robert Murray McCheyne.

Matters for Thought.

Is not that wisdom that leaves nothing for a dying hour?

What is the distance from earth to heaven to the prayer of faith?

He must be necessarily poor who receives all from another.

There is in every ordinance of the Lord that which is peculiar to itself.

God being what he is, his church must be secure for time and for eternity.

Lowliness of mind is not a flower that grows in the field of nature.

They are the wise whom God esteems wise. They are the wise whom God makes wise.

There are many who know their own wisdom, but there are few who know their own folly.

The wise are they who distinguish clearly between the law court and the equity court.

All our evils are to be traced up to two things—high views of ourselves and low views of Jesus.

Christ never took away an outward blessing but he gave a spiritual one instead of it.

Holy personal conformity to the will of God is that without which neither you nor I can be saved.

If there be tossing and doubting, it is the heaving of a ship at anchor—not the dashing on the rocks.

There is not a trouble a Christian has, but if he lives by faith on Christ in it, it will turn to a blessing.

I am inclined to think that there is not one sin we ever commit but has its effects upon our souls in after years.

It is a glorious thing to see a spark in the midst of the ocean, and all the power of that ocean unable to extinguish it.

"Let us love one another out of a pure heart fervently," bearing and forbearing, dealing tenderly with one another.

Pastors who wish to reach the masses should begin with their own people—heads of families with their own children.

Pray that you might find time for prayer; for rest assured, that if you restrain prayer, you will never be restrained from sin.

In proportion as you have the love of Christ shed abroad in your heart, in that proportion shall ye have the heart of a weaned child.

To return to God is to come to him as a promising God, as a forgiving God, as a paternal God—as our God and Father in Jesus Christ.

I see the tear that falls and the sigh that is heaved! Do I take from thee that beloved one? I will never leave thee! I am ever with thee.

There is no burden that the Christian can have but the burden bearer can enable him to rise above it, and walk happily with God under it.

Never begin with obedience—you will never attain it! Begin with faith and upon faith found this—"He that loveth me, keepeth my commandments."

Jehovah, Jesus our Shepherd, careth for his feeble as well as for his strong ones, with all the sympathies of our nature and all the power of Deity.—Selected.

Read your Bible Daily.

The celebrated painter, Benjamin Robert Hayden, gave the following admirable advice to his son at a critical time of his life:—"You are quite right to read history; make yours if master of the history of Greece and Rome. The English people are in many respects not unlike the Athenians without their profligacy. Read your Bible daily. There is no more interesting book in the world, and it is becoming more necessary to read and study it, because I already perceive a tendency among our scientific men, and what they call discovery, to set the Bible aside as an oriental legend. Do not believe them. The Mosaic account of the creation is the most simple and the most natural, and will be found, you may rely on it, confirmed by science, when science has got down to the real facts. Generalization, founded on our present knowledge of the laws of nature, is the very thing which our present acquaintance with those laws does not justify. I am convinced that no thoroughly established and settled theory will be found to contradict the truths revealed in the Bible. But you are too young yet for me to enter further on the subject. I only tell you of it to put you on your guard. You will find many men, old and grown-up men, who will laugh at the Bible. Don't believe them. Mathematics are all very well; but the differential calculus, my dear boy, can never prove or disprove the existence of God, Read your Bible, do your duty, and leave the rest to God."

Street Education.

A gentleman visited an unhappy man in jail awaiting his trial. "Sir," said the prisoner, tears running down his cheeks, "I had a good home education; it was my street education that ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; in the street I learned to pilfer. Oh, sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!"

Children's Corner.

Pretty is that Pretty Does.

The spider wears a plain brown dress,
And she's a steady spinner;
To see her, quiet as a mouse,
Going about her silver house,
You would never, never guess
The way she gets her dinner.

She looks as if no thought of ill
In all her life had stirred her;
But while she moves with careful tread,
And while she spins her silken thread,
She is planning, planning, planning still
The way to do some murder.

My child, who reads this simple lay
With eyes downcast and tender,
Remember the old proverb says
That pretty is which pretty does.
And that worth does not go nor stay
For poverty nor splendor.

'Tis not the house, and not the dress,
That makes the saint or sinner.
To see the spider sit and spin,
Shut with her webs of silver in,
You would never, never guess
The way she gets her dinner.

Overcoming Evil with Good.

A very little girl, who often read her Bible, gave proof that she understood her obligation to obey its precepts. One day she came to her mother, much pleased, to show her some fruit which had been given her. The mother said the friend was very kind in having brought her so much. "Yes," said the child, "very, indeed; and she brought me more than this, but I have given some away." The mother inquired to whom she had given it, when she answered, "To a girl who pushes me off the path, and makes faces at me." On being asked why she had given it to her, she replied, "Because I thought it would make her know that I wish to be kind to her, and she will not, perhaps, be rude and unkind to me again." How admirably did she thus obey the command to "overcome evil with good."

"Put Your Paw Up."

Come here, children, and I'll tell you a little story about a pussy cat named Mew-mew. She was a very good puss, and never stole the cream which cook put on one side, nor frightened Gyp the canary, who used to sing so loudly from his cage in the window. No; she used just to sit and purr, purr, cosily on the rug before the fire in the winter, or lie blinking in the sun on the window-sill in warm weather.

She had one fault, however; when she was a little sleepy or hungry she used to yawn with her mouth very wide open. She could not help that, but the dreadful part of it was that she never put up her paw in front of her wide-open mouth.

Well, Mew-mew lived with a lady who was very fond of all sorts of animals, and one of her pets was a little yellow-hammer, a small bird with a yellowish and blackish coat.

Well, this little bird, whose name was Pippin, was allowed to fly about the room quite freely, and Mew-mew never hurt him, for he was a great friend of hers, and they had grown up together. Pippin used to pretend to peck at Mew-mew's tail, and she would pat at him gently without putting out her claws, for she would not have hurt him for the world.

One day in winter Mew-mew was dozing cosily by the fire, and hoping she would soon have bread and milk, and Pippin was hopping about the floor, or flying up on the picture-frames, or looking at himself in the glass.

Mew-mew was lazy: and she folded her tail neatly about her, and gave, O, such a great, long yawn! One would have thought her head must have split in two; and she never put up her paw.

And then, before you could count one, Pippin had flown into her mouth; and before puss knew what had happened, her mouth had shut again. But oh! sad to say, she had bitten off poor little Pippin's head! She sat staring before her as the poor little yellow body tumbled on the floor, and then ran away into a corner and sat huddled up there, looking so unhappy; and her mistress could not scold because she had not done it on purpose, and because for days afterward she went about the house looking so wretched.

And now that you have heard the story of what may come of this rude habit, I hope none of you, my dear little boys and girls, will ever think of yawning, however sleepy or hungry you may be, without being very careful to "put your hand up!"—The Prize.

What a Young Swiss Did.

Professor Nagel, at a meeting held in London in 1862, related the following interesting fact:

He had in his school in Switzerland, a little girl eleven years of age, about whom he had not thought or expected more of than any of the others. She attended about two years, then was obliged to go home into the country.

There was no Sabbath-school in the village. She felt the want deeply, and said to herself: "As there is no school, I must open one."

She spoke to the little girls of the village, telling them of the school in Neuchatel, and asking:

"Will you come to me next Sabbath, and we will pray together, and sing hymns, and read the Bible, as they do in Neuchatel?"

They responded to her request, the first time five or six, then ten or twelve, then twenty or more; then the older girls of the village went with the little girls, having obtained permission; and at length the dear girl of eleven years old saw around her every Sabbath a school of forty children, from six to fifteen years of age. She read the Bible to them, sang hymns, and prayed with them.

Her mother said she sometimes listened from behind the door, and could never hear her little girl reading and praying without shedding tears.—Selected.

Home and Farm.

From wheat to bread in eleven minutes.—A trial was made at the Moss Creek Mills, near Carrollton, Missouri, to ascertain the time in which bread could be made from wheat standing in the field, and with the following astonishing result, commencing at one minute after three o'clock and finishing at twelve minutes after three:

Commenced reaping wheat	3.01
Finishing reaping wheat	3.02
Commenced threshing wheat	3.02¼
Finished threshing wheat (¾ bushel)	3.03¼
Commenced grinding wheat	303¾
Finished grinding wheat	3.06¼
Mrs. Lawton commenced making bread	3.08
Finished making bread	3.08¼
Commenced baking bread	3.08½
Finished baking griddle cakes	3.09½
Finished baking biscuits	3.12

This is an achievement in bread-making equal to the best time of Goldsmith Maid or Smuggler on the turf.—New York Telegram.

RIGHT HABITS OF BREATHING.

Good air is one of the first essentials in physical and vocal exertion. No one can keep the body and mind vigorous for any great length of time in impure air. And the most impure air is that which is filled with the emanations from the human system. The lungs should be trained to free, full, and vigorous action. They are, so to speak, the very springs of vitality. The more immediate importance of the lungs in the animal economy will be brought to mind, when we recollect that a person may live for days without food, but to deprive him of air, even for a few moments, is to deprive him of life itself. If our breathing is imperfect, all the functions of body and mind are impeded; in fact, the manner of breathing at any particular time is almost as good a test as the pulse itself of the general state of the system, physical and mental. One of the commonest faults in the use of the lungs is the habit of breathing, as it were, from their surface—not bringing sufficiently into play the costal and abdominal muscles. By watching the domestic animals—a horse or cow, for instance—we may learn a lesson in breathing. We perceive that there is very little motion near the fore extremities, but the breath is impelled from the flanks. So should we have the main action at the waist. Any form of dress or belt, therefore which constrains the base of the lungs, and presses upon the stomach and intestines, must do serious harm.

GETTING READY FOR WINTER.—How many farmers keep their work so well in hand that everything on the farm is in proper order when winter comes? The first shock of severe weather usually finds many little things not quite ready to secure the comfort of the household, as the first requisite, and of the domestic animals, which should not be overlooked. Often a sufficient supply of fuel is not provided, and the wind whistles through the crevices, because weather strips have not been put on the doors and the stray bits of plastering which have fallen off have not yet been replaced.

The first cold storms which occur are often the most severe of any during winter; and stock being unaccustomed to the cold, suffer from its effects so much that they do not fully recover from it during a whole season. A few boards may have been detached from the sides of the sheds or the roofs may not have been put on; if so the stock has no place for protection at the very time it most needs it.

After the cellar has been thoroughly cleaned out and renovated, the vegetables may be put in for winter use; but they should be arranged in an orderly manner, so that any showing symptoms of decay may be at once removed. There is nothing more detrimental to the health of the family than the noxious gases which arise from decaying vegetables in a cellar. Milk and butter should not be kept in the neighborhood of so dangerous an element. Milk is very susceptible to it, and loses all pleasant flavor as a result.

The house should be banked up so as to keep the frost from finding its way into the cellar or the house. A great saving may be made and much comfort and real pleasure derived from having these little things ready in season.

The fall months in the West are usually so delightful that the farmer is carried along without any positive warning of a severe winter, which approaches so stealthily that it is upon him before he is aware of it. The last days preceding a severe storm, are usually among the most delightful days we have. With these things in view, it stands the farmer in hand to make good use of the pleasant days, which may yet occur before the holidays, that he may not be caught in the lurch. The corn is to be husked and cribbed, while the "chores" must be performed daily. The days are short and the work goes on slowly; many important things must be left undone, unless the farmer has taken time by the forelock. At least it turns out so in many cases. It is better to have a piece of work done a long time before it is needed than to not get it done at all.

Corn which has been cut up for the fodder it provides, had better be piled under a shed, for it keeps better thus protected, besides the greater convenience in feeding it to stock. All the animals kept for store or breeding purposes, should be liberally fed now that they may enter the winter in good condition. Stock is often neglected while striving for the last bit of grass upon the pasture. Better leave the stray blades upon the fields to protect the roots of the grass during winter, and bring the animals gradually into the habit of using the dry food, for before the winter is over they will need a good supply of vitality to bring them out in good condition in the spring.

THE MOODY MEETINGS.

The revival meetings led by Moody and Sanky opened on Lord's day, the 1st inst., with preaching in the tabernacle at eight o'clock in the morning. About 7,000 were in the audience. Mr. Moody spoke from John xi: 39: "Take ye away the stone." The discourse was introductory, a defense of revivals, and an exhortation to put away everything from heart and life that came between the dead soul and the life-giving Christ.

In the afternoon at four o'clock he spoke again to a crowded house, while some 14,000 people without were unable to gain a hearing. His theme was John iv: 36: "And he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." The meetings were continued through the week by a short discourse and a prayer-meeting at Farwell Hall at noon and preaching in the evening at the large tabernacle. On Tuesday night the sermon was on "Love and duty;" text, 1 Cor. xiii: 1: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." The following is a brief extract:

If a young man professes to be converted and begins to speak against his brethren, I know his religion is a sham. In the 5th chapter of Galatians you may find out what are the evidences of real conversion. "The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." But love is put at the head of the list. If love is not the mainspring of our lives we may be sure we have not been born from above. Look at that scene in the temple. There were rich men giving $500, or perhaps $1,000 for the service of the Lord; and that would look very well in the morning papers of Jerusalem, if they had any papers in those days; but there is a poor widow who gives two mites, but she gave her heart with them, and when Jesus saw it he said the poor widow had given more than all the rest. There is a text in the second chapter of Titus which has been too much overlooked. "Sound in faith, in charity, in patience." If a man is not sound in faith we cut his right hand off; we call an ecclesiastical counsel and drive him out of the pulpit; cast him out of the synagogue. But if he is unsound in love we let him go on sowing discord among brethren and keeping the church in a continual quarrel. It is very important to be sound in faith and patience, but it is essential to be sound in love. If we can't live on the fifteenth chapter of Corinthians we are not where God can bless us or make us of any use. It takes a good man to love his enemies.

On Wednesday night Ps. cix: 23, 24 furnished the text: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." In the course of the discourse Mr. Moody said:

"Now I have been thinking that there is a passage in Christ's sermon on the Mount that might point out our hindrances in Chicago—'Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.' Now, I don't want you to think me personal, but I hope the Spirit of God may be present to-day to carry the truth to every one who has a quarrel going on. I believe the difficulty with us is the trouble in the church, the strife, the dissension going on among the brethren. If you have come to the altar with a quarrel between you and your brother, leave there thy gift and go out and be reconciled to him. If you have any malice or hatred toward any one your prayers will go for nothing—they will go no higher than your head. I believe this is the reason there is so much work lost among us—that you have something against some one or some one has something against you.

"I know two brothers who had a quarrel—a regular Cain and Abel over again. The mother could not get them reconciled. She could not sleep. Her prayers went up night after night. One of them saw how his mother felt, and was sorry for her. To please her he bought a very costly gift and took it to her. 'I don't want any gift,' she said, 'I want you to be reconciled to your brother.' If he had been reconciled first and then brought the gift to his mother it would have been all right. So it is with God. You take your gifts to the altar and keep in your heart hatred toward your brother. God don't want your gift until you are reconciled.

"Now think for a moment. Think of any one who believes you are a hypocrite, any one who says you are black-hearted, and who does not believe in anything you say in the meetings. Go and seek him out and be reconciled to him. That is the gospel of the New Testament. 'Oh!' you say, 'he will not believe me—he with whom I have a quarrel will not forgive me.' Go and speak kindly to him, show him a forgiving spirit yourself, and be reconciled. Go tell him that you want his forgiveness—that you do not want him to stumble in the way of his salvation over you. I do not think of anything that would lift Chicago more than the fact of every one here taking this truth to their hearts. We would make quick work with it.

"There is a passage in the 11th chapter of Mark, if I know it correctly. I hear it quoted very often in the prayers at the meetings: 'Whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye shall receive them, and ye shall have them.' But they stop there, and do not go on to the next verse, and they say, 'God has not answered my prayer,' when nothing comes from their supplication. They should read the next verse for the reason: 'When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any, that your Father which is in heaven may forgive your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses." When they pray they want God to forgive them, but they are not willing to forgive others. Suppose I was a minister, and I had trouble with a brother, and some pretty hard words arose from the quarrel. Well, I get up and go to a man and pray with him. I find he has a great deal of trouble, and I say to him: 'Won't you just cast your troubles on the Lord?' He says: 'Well, the fact is, I have had a quarrel with a man and I feel bitter toward him." Then I say, 'Go and forgive the man, and be reconciled toward him.' But he asks me: 'You had a quarrel with a man, did you go to him and forgive him?' So we cannot go to men and preach Christ if we have hard feelings ourselves for anybody. If there is any body here to-day who has a quarrel with his brother let him go at once and seek a reconciliation."

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.

2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.

3d Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.

5th. Civil Rights.

6th. Arbitration better than war.

7th. The Bible in schools.

8 h. Monopolies discountenanced.

9th. A return to specie payments

10th. Maintenance of public credit: protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.

11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6 That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

We publish this week the American Party tickets so far as we have received them. We hope to have the Minnesota and Pennylvania tickets for publication next week. If any one notices a typograhical or other error in the ticket for his State we would esteem it a favor if he would correct it.

We give our readers the position of the Covenanters on voting this week. Let us help them in their work of making the United States Constitution acknowledge God in Christ as the author of said government. We need their help at the polls.

A number of able articles are omitted for want of room.

The Mobile (Ala.) Register (Dem.), in stating the issues of the present campaign, says: "The grave question to be settled now, at much cost, is: "What is to be done to get rid of the negro as a voter? Sooner or later he will be disfranchised and thrust out of politics." There is the Democratic platform in a nutshell.

TICKETS! TICKETS!!—Send for American Party tickets, or better still, get them printed at home, if you can get them into the ballot box.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA PLAN.

The Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, which is a red-hot Tilden paper, prints a communication with the heading: "Orangeburg strikes the key-note of political redemption; how to make the Radical leaders understand that the white people are in earnest." The key-note alluded to is contained in a series of resolutions adopted by all the Tilden Clubs in Orangeburg and Barnwell counties, and sent to all the other counties in South Carolina for adoption. The resolutions are as follows:

1. Resolved, That we will not rent land to any Radical leader, or any member of his family, or furnish a home, or give employment to any such leader or any member of his family.

2. That we will not furnish any such leader, or any member of his family, any supplies, such as provisions, farm implements, stock, etc., except so far as contracts for the present year are concerned.

3. That we will not purchase anything any Radical leader, or any of his family, may offer for sale, or sell any such leader, or any member of his family, anything whatever.

4. That the names of such persons who may be considered leaders be furnished to this Club at the earliest date, and that a list of the same be furnished each member of the Club.

5. That whenever any person or persons, who shall be denominated Radical leaders, by a vote of this Club shall cease as such, these resolutions shall become null and void so far as such leader or leaders, or any member of his or their families, are concerned.—Chicago Tribune.

"Thou hast but an hour to fight,
Now the blazoned cross unfolding;
On! right onward, for the right;
Strike let all the soul within you.
For the truth's sake go abroad:
Strike let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages tell for God."

George W. Curtis, in a speech at Flushing, said:

"I say the only solution of the Southern question is the destruction in the minds of white men of the South that there is any hope of their return to power in the form of the old Democratic party. Democrats South; let them understand that, while there are differences in the Republican rings, they are a unit upon this question; let them understand that the nominees of the Republican party are determined upon that fact, and a settlement of the southern question will inevitably follow.

HAYES AN ODD-FELLOW ORATOR.—On page 24 of the campaign life of Gen. Hayes published by Robert Clarke & Co., of Cincinnati we find the following:

"He (Hayes) sought to widen the circle of his solid acquaintances and add daily to the number of his friends. Having been a member of the order of Odd-fellows and Sons of Temperance in Fremont, he united again with those organizations in Cincinnati. The addresses he was invited to deliver at Odd-fellows' lodges and at many more public places were very numerous. In this way he made reputation as a public speaker, if not money."

If this evidence is not conclusive we do not know what would be.

If the principles of the American Party ever gain the ascendency it must be by voting for them.

The Committee of Thirty-three on the perilous condition of the country, besides their resolutions, reported an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which Mr. Adams supported in a speech and for which he voted. The proposed amendment was as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both Houses concurring), that the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid, to all intents and proposes, as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

Art. 12. No amendment of this Constitution having for its object any interference within the States with the relation between their citizens and those described in Sec. 2 of the first article of the Constitution as "all other persons" [viz: slaves] shall originate with any State that does not recognize that relation [viz: slavery] within its own limits, or shall be valid without the assent of every one of the States comprising the Union.

Mr. Adams declared in his speech in support of this amendment to the Constitution as follows:

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I should be very jealous, as a citizen of Massachusetts, of any attempt on the part of Virginia, for example, to propose an amendment to the Constitution designed to rescind or abolish the bill of rights prefixed to our own [i. e., Massachusetts] from of Government. Yet I cannot see why such a proposition would be more unjustifiable than any counter proposition to abolish slavery in Virginia as coming from Massachusetts.

SUFFRAGE AND THE COVENANTERS.

D. S. FARIS.

SPARTA, Ill.

I suppose you are aware the Covenanters are non-voters, and that our reasons lie back of platforms. Our position is one of political dissent from the constituted government of the nation. The reasons are:

1. That Christ is not king of this nation, as at present constituted. The Constitution of the United States ranks the nation with those that "break the bands and cast away the cords" of God and his Son. Every officer of the nation or any State or county in the United States, swears to this act of rebellion against the King of kings. Every voter represented by such officer does the same thing representatively. While the Constitution stands in its present Godless, Christless attitude, Covenanters must stand aloof.

2. The nation as at present constituted is not governed by God's will or law revealed in the Bible. The Constitution plainly makes the will of the majority law without respect to the supremacy of the Divine law. The law of God is the law I am sworn to. I can swear to carry out no other behests, and consequently while these things are so, I must renounce my political privileges in obedience to that prohibition, "Say not a confederacy with all them with whom this people say a confederacy."

I have read your platform. So far as I am able to judge it would be a good platform were it not that it necessarily implies the support and administration of the present constitutions of the State and United States, at least until they can be amended. Now as the defect is radical and fundamental, placing the nation on the basis of atheism, no Christian ought for a moment to have any part or lot in it. In time of the Southern rebellion, loyalty to the Confederacy was rebellion against the United States. So in this case allegiance to the United States is rebellion against Christ.

But I presume you will reply, that if all Christians should take this position it would be giving up the hope of reform. Not so. It would be taking the appeal from the ballot to the overruling Providence of God. Now God needs no help in the way of sinful compliance with existing evil. His command to us is, "Come out from among them and be ye separate." If we take care to honor Him He will take care of His own honer. We cannot do evil that good may come. God often overrules evil for good as in the case of Joseph and his brethren. But our damnation would be just were we to sin that God might glorify Himself by overruling our sin.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Robert Gorrly, Ft. Branch, Gibson Co., Ind., writes: "Seeing several opinions in the Cynosure as to how we should vote the coming election, I thought I would tell you how I would do, and that is what my conscience would approve; vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and leave the results with God."

Hibben Cheeney, Waterloo, Ind., writes: "I shall vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick, should there not be another vote cast in this county for said candidates; yet I judge there will be quite a number. I am urging the friends of our party to organize and contend manfully for the right. God is on our side, we need not fear. The day of triumph will come."

S. A. Patt, Worcester, Mass., renews his subscription and writes, concerning his political position: "We are not strong enough ourselves, but weaken the good there is in prospect if Hayes and Wheeler are elected. So you see where I stand."

The following letter from James Springer, Springerton, Ill., was received in answer to the question whether or no he would vote the American party ticket, and would allow us to use his name as an elector: "If the Lord will, I shall vote the American ticket without a scratch. Act? Of course I will I would be pleased to meet the faithful in the State capital, or anywhere, and give our rousing votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I this day raised a beautiful flag with the names of Walker and Kirkpatrick as large as life. This is the first, and perhaps will be the only flag raised in our village. Masonry is becoming very unpopular here. Courage, brothers. I was for Lincoln when our county only gave him twenty-two votes, if my memory is not at fault. True, this is a hard fight, but then the victory will be a great one. Could Ronayne meet with electors and others at Springfield, and let us have a rousing meeting? God speed the American party." We would be glad to co-operate with the friends in Illinois in such a meeting, and will leave the question for them to answer.

Wm. M. Casteel, Princeton Mo., writes: "We have an Anti-masonic ticket in the field for county officers, and we want to elect our men if possible. We are getting the excitement high here."

Rev. F. W. Arndt, Portage, Wis. writes: "The way the Democratic party has turned, is indeed a shame and the way the Republicans are going is enough to dishearten any man who wants to do right. The question with me has been: What are we coming to? If the American Party is what it claims to be, I am one of them."

J. N. Lloyd, Jessup, Ia., writes: "I believe that it is a duty for one and all to vote for Hayes and Wheeler, more especially in those States that are at all doubtful. I do not think I am deserting our principles, but it does seem as if there was much depending on Republican success."

Josiah Shaw, Fall River, Wis., writes: "About thirty years ago, in the little town of Fairbee, they nominated two farmers for the Assembly, one a disbeliever in anything beyond this life, the other a candid, good citizen; but they both kept a barrel of rum in their granary to sell to those who would buy. I asked myself that if of two evils I should choose the least, for it was probable that one would be elected; but conscience said, No. Well, when they balloted the Republicans had forty-eight, the Democrats forty-nine, and two scattering, which prevented a choice. After balloting until they were tired, a motion was made and carried not to elect either one. Now, didn't we gain a victory by being o the Lord's side?"

J. S. Perham, Brookfield, Vt., writes:

"I cannot vote either of our prominent tickets, but I want to vote and believe it is the Christian freeman's duty to go to the ballot box. May we, as a party, be saved from the rocks on which so many reforms break and fail of doing great good."

J. V. Shattuck, East Deering, Me. writes: "I shall certainly vote with the American Party, even if my vote is the only one cast in this State."

Albert Marey, Spottsylvania, Va., writes: "If I had stayed here long

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE.

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this Institution. A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 22.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Anthor a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style,

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

enough, I would have voted your ticket or none, for I am disgusted with the Republican Party, and the Democratic Party are ruining this State as fast as they can. If they should get the election, I would not give a cent for a farm here during their administration."

J. F. Kuhlman, Ponca, Dixon Co., Neb., writes "I do intend to vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick, if an electoral ticket is put forth for Nebraska. There are in many parts of the State friends of our cause, who are opposed to the secret lodges, whose votes will go to the other parties because we are not organized and cannot act unitedly. We should by all means organize. No part of the country is more entirely controlled by the lodges than these frontiers. Nearly every town starts with a saloon and a lodge, and though the minister may be on the ground at the same time, he finds that to establish even a feeble church is the work of years of self-denying toil, and then too, an organization would bring the subject before the people and give a rallying point to its friends. My own experience convinces me that a decided and fearless course is not only the more consistent, but also the wisest.

This county will cast perhaps about five hundred votes. About twenty-five of them will be for Walker and Kirkpatrick.

Geo. Clark, Danville, N. Y., writes:—I most heartily agree with every principle laid down in the Platform of the "American Party." And I believe, also, that the time has fully come when political, as well as moral and religious action, should be taken on all these questions, and especially in relation to secret societies: and that all midnight, oath-bound cables should be prohibited by law; and that the most direct and sure way to bring these issues before the American people, and to break up and abolish these Anti-republican, Anti-christian, demoralizing and most dangerous conclaves, is to organize the better moral and Christian elements of the country into a political party for the overthrow of these great and growing evils—evils which neither of the other political parties will recognize, or with which they will grapple, and by which, to a great extent, they are controlled. When the Liberty Party was organized for the abolition of slavery, I gave it my hearty and loyal support. The old Whig and Democratic parties being controlled by the slave oligarchy, were powerless either to emancipate themselves or abolish slavery. So do I see and feel now the necessity of independent political action on the bases of the "American Party" for the overthrow of these towering and threatening evils in our land—the rum power, the lodge power, the ring power, etc., etc., and as much better as I think the Republican party is than the Democratic party, and as strongly as I prefer the election of Hayes to Tilden, yet I feel it my duty to help the more needed and nobler American Party, and shall probably, if I live, give that party, its excellent platform of principles, and its worthy candidates, my support.

THE CONNECTICUT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES,

Will meet at Franklin Hall, Willimantic, on Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue until Thursday evening, Oct. 26th. The first half hour will be devoted to prayer and praise to Almighty God, after which attention will be given to the business of the Association, and the hearing of the reports. Good speaking may be expected in the evenings of each day.

A POLITICAL MEETING in the interest of the American Party will be held at the same place on Thursday, at 10 o'clock A. M., and if thought best, nominate State and Electoral tickets.

J. A. CONANT, President.
D. S. ELLSWORTH, Secretary.

CONVENTION AT SANDY LAKE, PA.

The Western Pennsylvania Christian Association will hold its first anniversary meeting in the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Sandy Lake, Mercer Co., Pa., commencing on Tuesday, October 31st, at 7 o'clock P. M., and continue over the two following days. Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., and Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D.D., of Pittsburgh, and other distinguished speakers will be present and address the Convention.

Free entertainment will be provided for all who come Let the friends of Christ come up to give help against the Masonic anti-Christ. Let the lovers of republican liberty rally for the overthrow of Masonic despotism Let the friends of law and order come and plead for impartial justice against the sworn favoritism of the lodge. Gather from all over western Pennsylvania and may the Lord of Hosts be with us.

By order of the Executive Committee.
REV. C. F. HAWLEY, Cor. Sec.

—Past Master Ronayne returned from a most successful course of meetings in Iowa last Saturday. He spoke at Morrison, Ill., on Wednesday, Oct. 18th, and will hold a public initiation at Tipton, Iowa, on the 23d. He visits Ohio soon after the election, beginning at Oberlin.

The special fund for sustaining our agent at the Centennial and keeping him supplied with tracts for his work should not be overlooked by our friends. Its importance at this juncture of our reform cannot be over-estimated. Never probably will there be such another opportunity in your lifetime or mine to reach the uttermost parts of the earth at an expense so trifling. Will not friends visiting the Exposition at such greatly reduced rates on the railroads consecrate a tithe of the money thus saved to the Lord in this work, banding their contributions to Bro. Hodge at his stand in the main building or sending direct to the office of the National Christian Association. All such contributions will be promptly reported in the Cynosure and applied as the donor shall direct, either to the expenses of our agent or for tracts. J. P STODDARD.

Topics of the Time

The extraordinary efforts of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, to maintain the popularity of H. W. Beecher have not been wholly successful, though for a time delaying the inevitable estimate that must be placed upon his teachings and character by all good men. It is said that during a recent lecturing tour in Canada he met a very cold reception, the most prominent papers advising their readers not to hear him. It is also known that the last volume of his "Life of Christ" was killed by the great scandal, and its publishers lost $50,000 by their venture. The said scandal yet lives in the courts where Moulton is trying to bring on a trial for Beecher's swearing out a false suit against him, and the latter's counsel are as persistently putting it off on one pretext or another.

The election in Ohio has made some matters more clear to the politicians than they have yet been willing to acknowledge. Thus far they have been unwilling to concede any influence to the anti-secret reform in politics and were as unwilling to acknowledge that the lodges had any. But the Democrats having found out, or thought they had, that Col. Milton Barnes, the Republican candidate for Secretary of State, had signed an Anti-masonic petition, published it abroad for the instruction of the numerous secret orders. Now Col. Barnes resides at Cambridge, where many good and highly respectable people live who abhor the lodges, and if he had joined them in a petition it would have been an act not only highly commendable in itself, but doubtless never an occasion for future regret. However, if it had been a detestable case of fraud or paltry theft (great thieves are in honor now) he could not have more quickly or heartily have denied the supposed impeachment, and claimed a loving membership in several fraternities. Mr. Barnes may thank his party for electing him, and he may now at leisure count the cost of the report and the worth of the denial. Since he ran behind his ticket some four thousand five hundred votes (nearly half the majority) can he tell the public whether his letter of denial cost him more Anti-masonic votes than he would have lost from the ranks of the lodge had he been courageous enough to have signed the petition and stood by the consequences.

Paul's distinction between natural and spiritual, 1 Cor. ii: 14, is illustrated with wonderful clearness in the preaching of Mr. Moody. One of the most brilliant and successful members of the Chicago bar who has been attending the revival meetings for the purpose of critically studying the effect of Mr. Moody's oratory, owns himself unable to explain its wonderful effects. "I have studied audiences," he says, "for twenty-five years, but I never saw them under such control as under the speaking of this uncultivated, unlearned preacher. There must be some power under it all which is more than the effect of mere speech.

In an able address before the National Bankers' Association, ex-Secretary Hugh McCulloch placed the financial issues now before the country in so clear a light that not even an infatuated member of the "Greenback" party could deny its truth. He believes strongly in resumption at the time set by Congress, January 1st, 1879, and points out a way to reach it—that the government should at once call in the greenbacks and issue for them thirty-year gold bonds bearing four per cent. interest. The Bankers' Convention endorsed the plan as simple, practical and likely to damage the business interests of the country as little as any yet suggested.

Gen. Butler does not find his re-adoption into the Republican party in Massachusetts all fine sailing. The best men in the district, disgusted with the chicanery of Knight Templar Loring, have nominated Judge E. R. Hoar as an Independent candidate. The latter accepts with a scathing letter on Butler which will be filed in the archives of political literature as a protest against ring rule and rascality in candidates for public office.

Commenting on Disraeli's late speech on the Servian question and the influence of European secret societies in that sanguinary struggle the Catholic Review says:

"Russia is honey-combed with secret societies; the new German empire tries to awe them with bayonets; London has long been their center of operations; all nations know them, feel them, yet see them not until some vast conflagration calls them forth to the dance of death."

HOPEFUL SIGNS.

BY PROF. S. C. KIMBALL.

Among the hopeful signs in the East is the fact that the dead silence of the press upon the subject of Freemasonry is broken. One after another the religious papers are breaking silence and though with bated breath, they speak on the right side. The following is from a recent number of the N. Y. Independential:

Will the St. Louis Christian News correct its mistatement? It says:

"We can remember very well the opprobrium heaped upon Finney, his doctrines, his methods, his manner and opinions, by many of these men who now come forward to offer praise to the dead hero. If we are not greatly mistaken, one of the Eastern papers now devoting so much space to the latter work once on a time refused to print Pres. Finney's terribly true exposition of Masonry, after he had begun a series of papers on that subject in their columns, by special arrangement. Finney made it too hot for somebody and they deserted the prophet. They, with others, return to garnish his selpulcher, which is another illustration of the frailty of the flesh."

The Independent is the only paper to which this can refer, and the statement is utterly untrue, as we are able to say, although there is not now a single man editorially connected with the paper who was on it at that time. Neither then, nor now, nor, so far as we can learn, since the paper was started has there been on it a single editor or sub-editor who has been a Mason, or who has been in the least concerned about or pestered by complaints of Masons about either President Finney's or our own words about the order of oaths and aprons. Mr. Finney was requested by the editor of the Independent to write several articles against Masonry. This he did, and we published ten successive articles in 1868. We then ceased publishing them—not at all because of any remonstrances against them, but simply, as Mr. Finney was told, because excessive space had already been given to the subject. We have no idea that Mr. Finney ever put so uncharitable a construction on this occurrence. At any rate, we have since that time published as many as thirty articles by him, on various religious subjects, which is probably five times as many as all the other religious papers put together; and if anybody has the right to "return to garnish his sepulcher," we have. We have the charity to conceive it possible that the above item from the Christian News was dictated by nothing worse than culpable ignorance.

But dear Independent, have you of late devoted "excessive space" to the evils of Freemasonry? The above rasping by the Christian News has extorted from you a more decided testimony against Freemasonry than I have read in your paper for years. Your motto is to speak "NOT AS PLEASING MEN, BUT GOD." Now why is it, if you esteem Masonry to be a great evil as President Finney did, that you so seldom warn your readers of their danger? You say you are "PUT IN TRUST WITH THE GOSPEL." Do you fully reach it as it bears on Masonry?

The New York Baptist Union has published a pungent article against oath-bound secret societies, and Sept. 10th gave the following cheering item of news:

"President Robinson, of Brown University, gives his opinion on college secret societies, in his annual report, which is that their influence is not beneficial. The points of objection which he raises against them are their expensiveness, the clannish spirit which they foster, the habits of intrigue formed in their management, the tendency to harden peculiar habits and tastes into defects of character, and the serious interruption of college work which the attendance of annual meetings, when at a distance, occasions. The Corporation of Brown University, at their recent meeting, voted, "That, in the judgement of the Corporation, the existence of secret societies among the undergraduates is unfriendly to the best interests of the University."

The Bible Banner, Vineland, N. J., has published outspoken articles against Masonry.

The Morning Star, although edited and published by Anti-masons, is extremely timid in its treatment of Masonry, and its time-serving policy is a great grief to many of its readers, but prayer is made without ceasing to God that this ancient; and in some respects valuable paper may be forced back to its early and sound position on the subject of secret societies. The Star of Sept. 6th, printed the following item of news from Bates College, Lewiston, Maine:—

"The literary societies are prosperous, and the zeal with which they seek members from the entering class is sure to create a lively interest in their affairs, especially on the part of new comers. The interest in them is well sustained throughout the year, and this is partly accounted for from the fact that there are no secret societies to draw off the attention of students to social festivities rather than to the development of their forensic and literary abilities. The faculty have given no encouragement to the formation of secret societies, as they are confident that they would ruin the usefulness of those now in operation without bringing anything into college life to compensate for their loss. E. A. S."

These hopeful signs may seem small to some, but straws show which way the wind blows. The time is fast passing when Christian ministers and editors will be able to ignore the work of the National Christian Association. It reminds us of the effort of the Roman government to ignore Christ. "Gallio cared for none of these things;" and yet the Nazarene conquered. By the help of the Lord, we will open the eyes of those otherwise well-educated ministers who "know nothing about Masonry." If it had not been for the bread-and-butter argument these ministers and editors would long since have known more of the evils of Masonry than they pretend to know. They ought to subscribe for the Cynosure, then they would know.

BOASTING AND BOASTERS.

BY J. H. HANNA.

"Love," it has been well said, is the law of Christ's Kingdom, the lesson of his school, and the livery of his family." No power on earth like that of love. It is the weapon with which God in Christ is subduing this rebellious world to himself. He reveals himself as the God of love, and he enjoins upon each and all of us to love our neighbor as ourselves. "Love your enemies;" "bless them;" "pray for them;" not boasting over them; "that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven." Such is undoubtedly the teaching of the Master: and I submit that it excludes boasting.

But what of Paul? Is his teaching rightly interpreted opposed to that of the Master? No, no. The great apostle of the Gentiles urges the cultivation of that same love of which the Master spoke, under the appellation of "charity." See the whole of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. In another epistle he warns every man "not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think." In yet another he urges us to "put on bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering." If despite such general teaching the apostle must still be branded as a "boaster" in an invidious sense, it cannot be denied. I think, that this boasting of his was coupled with wondrous humility. "Unto one who is less than the least of all saints is this grace given." "I am the least of the apostles that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God."

I acknowledge indeed, that when his authority and influence as an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ were endangered he could vindicate his apostleship in glowing terms; but I do not acknowledge—I positively deny—that such necessary vindications were "boastings" properly so-called. They contain no exaggerations; nothing but a simple declaration of facts, and consequently cannot be characterized as "boastings," except in accommodation to the language of his opponents and adversaries.

Paul's opinion of "boasters" properly so-called, real, veritable, live specimens, is given in the two following passages:—"This know also," says the apostle, writing to his beloved Timothy, "that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, BOASTERS, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

Again he speaks elsewhere of men "Filled with all unrighteousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, deceitful, proud, BOASTERS, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful, who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same but have pleasure in them that do them." Such is the teaching of the apostle and I submit that it criminates "boasters" and condemns boasting.

Boasting is not only contrary to the genius and spirit of Christianity and to the precepts and examples of apostles and evangelists, but it is also degrading in its nature, unmanly, impolitie, and pernicious. Nay more, it is an almost infallible sign of a coward: no brave man would triumph over a fallen foe. For my part I have never yet known a "boaster" good for anything else under the sun.

THE OATH OF DEATH.

We need say no more, for the whole Morgan tragedy rises before us with its voice which speaks more loudly by far than mine can, and with a force stronger by far than any human reasoning, saying that the true sense of the Masonic obligation is death, death, DEATH.

Of a Mason who shot himself while in Lisbon, Mr. Hugh Lalone, Sen., and his son, Hugh Lalone, Jr., each related to me the following, as a fact well known to them. Each is a member of the M. E. church of Lisbon, where they now reside.

A clerk, respectable, and intelligent, employed by a firm, a little way back from the St. Lawrence River, in Canada, a little below Lisbon, I think, but the name of the place I do not remember,—who was a Mason, thoughtlessly revealed some of the secrets of Masonry to a young lady with whom he was keeping company. She told the same to some friend of hers, and so, from one to another it passed on until at length it came to the lodge. He was summoned at once to appear before its bar to answer for the act. When settling up all his affairs, and bidding "good bye" to friends he passed out of the store, walked a few rods down the road, put a pistol to his head and shot himself.

Evidently, this young man believed that the penalty of the Masonic obligation meant death, and he believed that it would be inflicted upon him, and, prefering to die by a different method from either one of those expressed in the Masonic oaths, he took his own life.—Rev. E. W. Wheeler in Am. Wesleyan.

THE BIBLE NOT SECTARIAN.

One reason of turning the Bible out of school is that it is a sectarian book! What evidence of this? Why, a great many don't believe in it. If that makes it sectarian, then the Creator is sectarian, for many claim they don't believe in him; then human freedom is sectarian, for many don't believe it is the rightful inheritence of all men. God gave his Son to the world, and the unbelief and rejection of him by many does not disprove this truth, or make him a sectarian Saviour. The word of God is no more sectarian than the air that surrounds the globe, as it is the only truth designed and adapted to give the world a pure moral atmosphere. It is no more sectarian than the sunlight that enfolds and gladdens the earth, for it is the only light that can enlighten the pathway to the tomb in any land. All its great truths, principles, and laws are as universal as the intelligent creation of God. But it should be turned out because it alone is guilty of producing discord and strife. Some people used to tell us that abolitionism was the sole cause of trouble in this land; just let slavery alone and we can have peace! But slavery would not let us alone, and now Romanism, infidelity, communism, filthiness, political thievery, corruption and every deviltry that imperils the nation's life will not let us alone however peacable we may be. But some Protestants on the affirmative of the question say it is such a mere perfunctory service, its reading has little effect, is of so little value, why not give it up for the sake of peace? My dear Protestant brother, why can you not persuade your Catholic or infidel brother to reason thus: It is a mere perfunctory performance of no educating or religious influence, and we will not disturb the vast educational interests of the land about such a trifling matter? Would it not be well for these flexible brethren to exhort the agitators on that side awhile, and read them a lesson of forbearance and charity? That the service is perfunctory enough we all admit; but this persistent clamor and opposition to its presence prove that its leaven works, that its hammer strikes, that its fire is burning a little at least. The mere recognition of its authority by commanding the school in silence to hear it read, has a restraining, controlling, educating influence; nay more, if laid unopened upon the desk in every school room it would have a power, as it is known to be the Book of books, the Law-book of the King of kings, and this bitter war against it is a testimony to its irresistible influence which I am ashamed any Protestant should attempt to hide. You cannot persuade a Catholic infidel that the Bible has no power in the schools: they know better. The mere recognition of it as the perfect law of divine justice and the only standard of pure morals makes it a power, and this is just what the infidel and rationalist especially object to. And it is because of this salutary, silent, yet immeasurable power in national justice and morality, that we protest against its expulsion from the educational system of the land. This charge against the Bible as the troubler of the school is about as reasonable and just as king Ahab accusing Elijah of troubling Israel. But the prophet's reply is, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house," etc. So we say to the infidel, Teuton, and Catholic, "The Bible is not a troubler of the schools, but you and your father's house at Rome." For 200 years this book has been an instructor in the schools of the land, and we can say of it as Pilate did of its Author, "We find no fault in it."—Rev. J. W. Bain.

The United Presbyterian Synod of Pittsburgh on Freemasonry.

EXTRACT FROM REPORT TO SYNOD.

The committee appointed by said Synod to consider the inquiry respecting Freemasonry, report that having deliberated on the same, they are of the opinion that this subject imperiously demands the attention of this Synod, and the church at large. We are aware that in discharging this duty unpleasant sensations will be excited in the minds of many. We are also aware that the subject ought to be treated with due caution. Nevertheless it appears to us to be the duty of the Synod firmly to bear their testimony and to warn and admonish professors of religion against becoming members of Freemason lodges, or if members, against continuing to attend their meetings.

Your committee do not design to trace the origin, nor enter into a discussion of the merits of Masonry. We do not mean to urge the objection against the very nature of this institution from the fact of keeping secret from the world that which is held to be so important; from the requisition of an oath of secrecy without knowing its nature or object; nor to dwell on the suspicious character of a society that seeks concealment and darkness for its proceedings. Your committee confine their attention chiefly to the effects of these societies on religion and morals. We ask what good effects these societies have ever produced? What reformations have they effected? What youth have they ever reclaimed? What Christian was ever improved in piety by entering Masonic lodges and holding communion with its members. Is such fellowship at all consistent with the communion with the people of God, and with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ? And what Christian of eminent piety has not abandoned his intercourse with them? How many mournful instances of degradation and ruin to the bodies and souls of men may be traced to connection and intercourse with such characters as too generally compose the lodges of our country? At how vast a risk does any one, and especially an unguarded youth, enter an association embracing with equal affection "the pagan, the Turk and the Christian?" How humiliating and disgusting it must be to persons of intelligence and taste to mingle in the close intimacy of brotherhood with those whose society they would spurn on ordinary occasions?

We think it not unimportant to notice how inconsistent with the holy charity and exclusive benevolence of the Gospel, is that peculiar attachment and preference to the brethren which is the boast of their order, a preference not founded on intrinsic worth, but merely on the lodges of Masonry, not to mention the baleful influence which Masonic partialities may be expected to produce in the distribution of justice in elections, and appointments to office.

How vain, if not presumptious, the pretense of instituting a society, the benevolence of which shall exceed the charity of the Gospel of the Son of God. The Gospel of Christ explains and enforces with the highest possible motives, the principles of charity. The Gospel with its rites and institutions are the means appointed by God for the reformation of the world. It needs not the light and aids of Masonry by which it is unknown to us that one genuine instance of reformation was ever effected. We also consider Masonry in excluding from its rites, its confidence and its privileges all females, as insulting to the dignity and hostile to the comfort of the most amiable of our species. Woman was designed to be the friend, the counselor and the intimate confidant of man. It is believed then that a man of a generous and affectionate heart will hesitate before entering an institution that forbids him to intrust the wife of his bosom with secrets, communications imparted to the most worthless of his own sex.

We think it not unworthy the consideration of our American youth who justly revere the institutions of their country, what a dangerous medium secret societies have furnished to designing men for accomplishing purposes ruinous to other governments; and how dangerous they may yet be to our own. Under the influence of the above and other reflections your committee would not hesitate to say to all members of our church, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and have no communication with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them," and to recommend to the Synod the following resolutions:

1. Whereas, Masonic lodges, especially as composed and conducted in our country, have had and are calculated to have a pernicious influence on morals and religion, and that attendance on them is unsuitable to the profession of the holy religion of our Lord Jesus Christ; therefore

2d. Resolved, That it is the duty of ministers of the Gospel, elders, parents and professing Christians, to use their influence to prevent those under their care from entering these associations and induce those who have entered to discontinue their attendance.

3. Resolved, The Synod, deeply concerned for the general interests of society, civil and religious, and particularly for some amiable men who now stand connected with the aforesaid society, recommends them to take with earnestness the course of safety for themselves, and in the present crisis of the conflict with the Kingdom of Darkness, to show themselves of the Lord's side, and to perform zealously the duties which their attitude in relation to these societies and the church of Christ particularly recommended, so as not only to promote the cause of godliness generally, but also the eternal welfare of their brethren with whom they are connected and upon whom they may exert a salutary influence.

The Tragedy of 1826.

We have followed the story of the Morgan abduction from the histories that have come down to us through the past half century until we see him imprisoned and in the power of men sworn to take his life. It was early in the morning of September 14th, but five weeks more than fifty years ago that he was brought to Fort Niagara and the strong doors of its magazine closed upon him. On the same day a Royal Arch Chapter was installed at Lewiston, which event called together a very considerable assemblage of Masons of that degree from Rochester, Buffalo, Lockport, and other places in that vicinity. It would appear from the testimony of one or two witnesses, and the statements of others, that scarce an individual Mason, attending that installation, could have been ignorant of the fact that Morgan was at that time confined in the magazine of Fort Niagara. It appears to have been a subject of conversation among them, and several were then informed that such was the fact. On the day of the installation, Giddins remained at the fort to see that all was kept safe. He together with John Jackson, went to the magazine for the purpose of carrying Morgan some food. Morgan refused to admit them and said he would starve rather than fall into their hands; and he made so great an outcry as to render it necessary to dispatch Jackson to Lewiston to procure the assistance of some one to silence him. David Hague came down in haste, a distance of seven miles, but did not succeed in quieting Morgan. Two other persons were sent down from Lewiston, and one of them (Loton Lawson,) of whom Morgan seemed to have a great dread, went into the magazine and succeeded in stilling him. In the evening twenty or thirty persons, besides those belonging to the fort, came from Lewiston, and were at the fort. About midnight, seven persons, all Royal Arch Masons, held a consultation on the plain near the graveyard, some rods distant from the fort, as to the manner in which Morgan should be disposed of. There seemed to be but one opinion among them all: that Morgan had forfeited his life, for a breach of his Masonic obligations; and that it was their duty as Masons, to see that the penalty was executed. They came to a determination to proceed in a body and seize Morgan, and perform their own duty by casting him into the river. After they had started to carry this determination into effect, one of the company discovered a reluctance to go such lengths, which encouraged others to remonstrate, and the project was abandoned for that time. On the night of the 15th, a similar consultation was held between four persons, as to the disposition of Morgan, but nothing was decided upon. At this consultation Colonel King became offended with Mr. Giddins for expressing a desire that Morgan should be released; and Giddins surrendered to him the key of the magazine which was afterward intrusted to the care of Elisha Adams. It is known that Morgan remained confined in the magazine during the 16th and 17th; and it is believed that he was so confined until the 19th of September.

The final disposition of Morgan is in doubt so far as any direct judicial evidence is concerned. Future events, however, sufficiently established the fact that he was taken out of his temporary prison on the night of the 19th of September, carried out upon the Niagara river and drowned. Beside the circumstantial evidence connected with the re-appearance of the body, and the maneuvers of the Freemasons of New York, the direct confessions of Valance, one of the party engaged in the murder, on his death-bed in 1828, and the remarks of Masons to each other within the guarded precincts of the lodge have fully satisfied the popular mind as to the disposition of Morgan by Masonic agency.

Samuel D. Greene, a member of Batavia lodge at the very time, writes in his wonderful book, "The Broken Seal" as follows of this evidence:

"For many weeks, indeed, everything was obscure and indefinite. Hopes were entertained that he would appear again—that he was kept somewhere in prison until his book could be effectually suppressed, and then he would be set at large. But after a time, and little by little, the remarks which were dropped by leading men among the Masons dissipated all hopes that he would ever be seen alive. It became more and more apparent that this thing had not been done in a corner; that a very large number of persons, far and wide, had been cognizant of the transactions; and their manner of talk about them was often of the most shameful character. It was a great subject of coarse joking among the Masons in their common conversation in the street, but especially in their lodge meetings. The efforts that were made, the measures that were taken to discover where he was, began to be a matter for ridicule and laughter, and even the distress and anxiety of his wife were joked about in public places.

Masonic Meanness at the Centennial.

Several months before the opening of the Centennial Exposition the Secretary of the National Christian Association sent a written application to A. T. Goshorn, the Director General, asking for space for Anti-masonic publications and received a flat refusal.

March 31st, the application was made in the name of Ezra A. Cook & Co., for space, but the character of the books was not mentioned. Space was granted in the Book Department and the following is an exact copy from copying book of the letter enclosing the required fee:

"CHICAGO, April 10, 1876.

Presley Blackistone, Esq., Treas. American Book Trade Association, Philadelphia, Pa., Dear Sir:—In response to yours of the 8 h we send herewith our check on NEW YORK for $8.25 to pay for use of space assigned us on ground floor in section H, 2 1 2 by 3 feet on said floor, and 7 1 2 feet high. We are informed by Gen. Smith, Illinois Secretary, that circulars, catalogues, tracts, and cards may be placed where the public can take them BUT THEY MUST NOT BE SOLICITED TO TAKE THEM; and we also understand that while persons may not be solicited to subscribe for our paper or to purchase books, yet books may be QUIETLY sold and subscriptions QUIETLY taken. It is with this understanding that we apply for space.

Please send any other necessary information and state when our books MUST be in place, as we do not wish to send our agent EARLIER than necessary.

Yours truly,
EZ A A. COOK & Co."

The following is an exact copy of the first part of the letter in reply:

"PHILADELPHIA, April 13, 1876.

GENTS:—Yours with $8.25 for assessment on space 2 1 2 by 3, Sec. H, Cent. Ex. Am. B'k Tr. Ass., is received nd the amount is to your credit. We will have your permit prepared and sent to you in a few days. You quote the rules of the Commission in reference to catalogues, circulars and sales correctly."

Yours &c.,
P. BLACKISTON, Treas.

As we stated in our letter that we understood that "books may be quietly sold," and that "it is with this understanding that we apply for spaee," we were astonished to find that Elder Freeman was prohibited from selling a single book.

Elder Freeman called on Presley Blakiston and we wrote to him, but all to no purpose. Many in the building who had things to sell were selling them. Others who had books there only had samples to show and not to sell. When Mr. Hodge arrived there he saw so many selling that he ventured to sell and continued to do so boldly, without interruption for two months until one of the petty officials with concealed badge of office, a zealous Freemason, became angry because he got worsted in debate with Messrs. Harry Wilcox of Jackson, Mich., and Norris Gay of Batavia, N. Y., two intelligent Christian gentlemen who would treat no one with the least discourtesy.

In his anger he even exceeded his authority, as he ordered the case of books and tracts locked up.

The Centennial Commission it seems had adopted some restrictive rules which they were not enforcing, if indeed they were meant to be enforced, except when some official wished to vent his spite on some exhibitor.

When Messrs. Wilcox and Gay saw the turn affairs had taken they each handed Mr. Hodge $5 to pay for books to be given away. Mr. Hodge has tried every means in his power to get permission to sell books and offered to pay fifteen per cent. on all sales for the privilege, but without avail. He was offered the alternative of taking contributions for any purpose and not giving away or selling a single tract or book, or to give away books and tracts but not sell anything or take any donations for any purpose. He chose the latter alternative, and friends of the cause who wish to help circulate books and tracts there will have to send their contributions to this office, as Mr. Hodge is not allowed to receive them.

—It frequently crops out that the leaders and friends of the movement in our church against the secrecy law are actuated more by fear of the orders than by a sincere belief that much good will be done by breaking down the law. A champion of the movement, in a harrangue on a conference floor, after berating those who try to maintain the law, said that they were as much afraid to express themselves against the secret orders as those who oppose the law. He seemed to resolve the whole question of respecting the law into a matter of fear or bravery in opposing secrecy. We had never thought that it was moral cowardice in the advocates of breaking down the law, which makes them so zealous. We have noticed that they speak most fiereely against their brethren, and the inferenee was that they would endure even the ban and battery of secrecy if they thought it right to oppose it. We thought they were standing on convictions. But since we find their locus stanti to be fear of the thing oppo-ed, we are disposed to a little sympathy for the hands that hang down and the feeble knees.—Telescope.

In a memorial of the "International Association for obtaining a uniform decimal system of Measures, Weights and Coins," presented to Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, Chancellor of Her Majesty's Exchequer, in March, 1859, it is estimated that the adoption of the Metric System would save in the management of the London & Northwestern R. R. $50,000 a year; and in the various departments of Her Majesty's Government not less than $2,500,000 every year. When we consider that this computation was made by competent authorities, and remember that the amount named would be saved every year by a single railroad, it is evident that the total saving made by the adoption of the Metric weights and measures would be almost incredibly large. The same proportionate saving would be effected in every market, store, factory, counting-room; in short everywhere, for in business life nearly every sentence, spoken or written, contains an expression of quantity.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.—In the November number of the International Review, Edward A. Freeman, justly regarded as one of the ablest of living historians, discusses "The Origin of Parliamentary Representation in England," in a paper which will be an invaluable addition to the history of representative government. It is called forth by the recent publication of Vol. II. of Professor Stubbs' Constitutional History of England, a work to which Mr. Freeman refers in his own most recent volume (Volume V. of the "History of the Norman Conquest") as the "greatest monument of English historical scholarship." The writer has some material points of difference with Professor Stubbs, however, which furnish the raison d'etre of the article. Following this is an interesting review of "The Life and Works of Mr. Philip Gilbert Hamerton," who divides with Ruskin the honor of the foremost position among the art critics of the world, and whose regulear contributions are a prominent feature in each number of the International. Dr. Dorner, one of the ablest of German Theologians, and a recognized leader in the body of Christians of which he writes, contributes an article of rare interest and value upon "The Prussian Evauvelical Church." Dr. Dorner was present at the Evangelical Alliance Meeting in New York two years ago, in whose deliberations he acted a conspicuous part. Hon. Edward D. Mansfield discusses a subject brought into unusual prominence at the recent political conventions at Cincinnati and St. Louis in an article upon "The Chinese Question in the United States." A valuable contribution to the history of journalism is furnished in a paper upon "The Journals and Journalists of Italy," by Professor Angelo DeGubernatis, of Florence, editor of La Rivisita Europea. The Princess Dora D'Istria, a writer of recognized ability, and a frequent contributor to the leading European Reviews, contributes an article upon "The Literature of the French Reformation." In addition to this series of papers, covering by their range, and general interest, a considerable portion of Christendom, Rev. Dr. Samuel Osgood presents an exceedingly interesting and instructive paper upon "New England Transcendentalism;" and there are the usual scholarly reviews of recent publications, American and foreign, followed by the Science paper of Dr. Wright of Yale College; and the usual letter on European Art Matters, by Philip Gilbert Hamerton. Reform News.

The Iowa Campaign.

The brief notes of the three weeks' lecturing course of the Secretary and Agent with Mr. Ronayne in Iowa, that have been forwarded and published give but an inadequate idea of the great good accomplished. From a short conversation with Mr. Ronayne who returned from the Wis. State convention on Saturday we learn that leaving Chicago Sept. 18th, he spoke at the following points in Iowa: Ames, exposition of three degrees; State Center, one degree; Albion, two degrees and one lecture; Oskaloosa, do.; Monroe, one degree and a lecture; Maquoketa, two degrees; Bangor, two degrees. At Delavan, Wis., he gave the three degrees. We hope for more full reports from these meetings than have yet been received. At present we can say that in Iowa the meetings were attended with good order and full houses. As one good and immediate result at least two Freemasons have openly left the order and probably many more have resolved to have no more to do with the blaspheming lodge. At Delavan on Friday evening the bad Masonic blood boiled over and during the meeting and after its close, eggs, sticks, stones and clods were hurled thick and fast at him who was so bold as to push a stubborn and deadly lance at the latest "relic of barbarism." The eggs were not bad however, and none of the other missiles did especial mischief except to the windows of the Hall, which belonged to a Royal Arch Mason.

Mr. Ronayne's future appointments are as follows:

Morrison, Ill., Oct 18, 19.
Iowa City, Iowa, Oct. 23, 24.
West Branch, Oct. 26.
Springdale, Oct. 27.
Tipton, Oct. 30 and 31.
Wasioja, Dodge county, Minn., Nov. 6, 7 &c., and other points. Returning from Minn. soon after election he will arrange for visiting Ohio, Pennsylvania, etc.

Wisconsin Notes.

JANESVILLE, Wis.,
Oct. 11, 1876.

DEAR BRO. K:—I had felt a strong desire to greet again the friends of this reform in this State, and also to awaken an interest in the State meeting. Accordingly I have spent the last three weeks quite laboriously. At Clinton, no lecture had ever been given and the Masonic influence was wholly predominant. No church could be obtained but I hired a hall of a Masonic saloonkeeper, had bills printed by a Masonic printer, and with much effort got a good audience composed largely of Masons. They gave me material aid in advertising the meetings by their denunciations and personal abuse, and added much to its interest by their denials and questions. They kept me speaking for two hours and a half and treated me much more respectfully in the end than at the beginning. I felt grateful for the presence and sympathy of the pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Bronson, and found a few others who "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

From there I went to Sharon where I found warm friends. I lectured here in the Free Methodist church to a fair audience, which would have been larger but for the absence of any fire; and I preached Sabbath afternoon and evening in the Lutheran and the Congregational churches. The F. M. church is a neat and commodious house just dedicated; and the Congregational church is having a good degree of pro-perity. The pastor, Bro. Case, has no sympathy with secretism, having had some experience in the lodge of Odd-fellows.

At Milton I spoke in the Congregational church to a small audience. This has been, and still is an anti-secret community, but a Masonic Congregational minister has done much to impair the integrity of some of the members of that church, and to induce one of its members to go into the lodge; while the combined forces of secretism have divided the Baptist church and done much to promote discord and spiritual dearth.

From here I went to Baraboo, and was most cordially greeted by Prof. J. W. Wood, known to all your readers for his faith and good works. A meeting was arranged, and I spoke that evening and had a profitable meeting. Mr. Albert Watkins, a young man made a Mason about two years ago in Minn., gave his testimony as to the frauds and abominations of the lodge. He was chosen a delegate to the State convention.

At Ironton, my old home, I spent the Sabbath and preached three times. I felt to mourn over the desolations of Zion, and especially indignant that a Mason had been sent as a home missionary to work in my old field. It is but just to the brethren at Ironton to say that this young man was a student and did not let them know that he was a Mason until he left. How long must the "abomination that maketh desolate" be permitted to stand in the holy place?

A good meeting in the Congregational church in Baraboo, concludes my labors in this part of the State and I am on the way to the State meeting.

DELAVAN, OCT. 13.—The State convention is in progress. The attendance is good and an excellent spirit pervades our meetings. Bros. Stoddard and Lathrop have made addresses, and Mr. Ronayne has worked the first and second degrees of Masonry before large audiences. This forenoon is to be given to political discussion, and this afternoon to resolutions. To-night we witness the death of Hiram, and it is hoped that Masonry, too, may die — at least its influence in Delavan.

Yours for the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

Correspondence.

OUR CENTENNIAL LETTER.

DEAR CYNOSURE: I shall give you some more incidents, and as we have arrived at the close of another month some reflections may be offered on the features of our ambushed foe so far as we may deem them likely to be useful.

The first character I present now is a good sample of physical humanity — man and wife being one in spirit. The man very knowingly presented before me his finger with a yellow metal ring on it, broad enough and figured enough to be envied by any squaw. No doubt he would have been delighted if it had produced a talismanic effect upon your agent, but he was too dull to appreciate its charms. "See that! I'm a Mason," he said, "of thirty-three degrees, and a church member too, and a U. P. (United Presbyterian) at that. Yes, I'm a Mason and not ashamed of it either." He had delivered his volley and was retiring when I asked him, "Where do you live neighbor?" "I won't tell you, sir," was the reply, as he disappeared with his better half who showed herself a help meet for him. The queries here are, whether or not he feared a report to his church, and whether or not that church is one which has surrendered to the control of Masons.

A New Yorker said that in the old Masonic books the words "as saith the holy word" were printed after those so well known, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." Have you any evidence of such a blunder?

The president of the Y. M. C. A., of Washington, D. C., paid your stand a visit. Young men in such positions have great responsibities. We trust that such organizations may maintain anti-secret principles. They are too active and influential to escape the tempter, and to be allowed to carry on their work without exciting the envy and desire of secretism to so control them as to transfer at least a share of the merit of their good deeds to those insidnous organisms who seek their own glory and not that of Christ.

Very encouraging visits have also been received from a number of friends of the cause; as Mr. Vanfossen of Adel, Dallas county, Iowa, who knows some hard facts concerning the influence of secretism. He paid a dollar to the tract fund. His worthy life partner accompanied him. From Brattleboro, Vermont, appears R. G. Wood, Esq., an experienced worker in the cause. He also gave a dollar to supply printed bullets; and we have had the pleasure to renew the subscription to the Cynosure of one who had lost sight of it since the Chicago fire, viz., James McCormick, East Liverpool, Columbia county, Ohio. He paid up to July 1, 1878.

One stated that he had two uncles who renounced Masonry at the time of Morgan's abduction and murder, one or both of whom cautioned him against ever becoming a Mason. A worthy old gentleman, Mr. Degrand, called for tracts 24 and 25 to distribute. There have been several such cases lately, which doubtless gives great pleasure to the friends of the cause. I was so unfortunate as to have a slight cold one drizzly day when George Thompson called, and did not at the moment apprehend the national reputation of his name. I shall be glad to see him again.

A "minister of the Gospel" had the Masonic extract of 2 Thess. iii: 16 read to him. He pronounced it a perversion.

But the elephant came into the enclosure at last; a real live Masonic elephant, with tusks of fifty degrees; the largest I had hitherto seen! He had thirty-three degrees of Scotch Masonry, as far as he could go in that direction, but had taken seventeen others since! What a throat for oaths he must have. Now for it. I meekly asked an explanation of the difficulty in this "Mackey Ritualist" extract (2 Thess.), leaving out the name and authority of Christ. Of course I was demolished at once. "Did I understand the languages, the Hebrew and Greek? Didn't all denominations use only such parts of the Bible as they found suitable to their purposes?" "But," I ventured, "don't it appear to mutilate this part?" "Oh not at all. Christ's authority is recognized fully in the higher degrees." This gentleman was in a hurry at first, and went off with his lady, but soon returned to further enlighten your agent. I was a little surprised, but it was suggested by my shrewd neighbors that probably he did not wish his wife to hear the talk. I regretted not having asked him if Masonry was a religion. However, he made light of Mackey as of no account; but like all good priests of Rome and Freemasonry did not refer your benighted agent to any volume where he could get "more light." "Join the church," says Rome; "Join the lodge," says Freemasonry. Unless you do, say both, you cannot know precisely what we teach. "How can you know if you were never a Mason?" is the daily silly question, as if testimony was of no account.

OCTOBER 4, 1876.

If after a calm comes a storm, the statement may be reversed with equal truth. Yesterday was one of very enjoyable days from friends and foes. It began with a champion of Masonry in the person of a Baptist minister not from the West, and as each spared not the use of his weapons I pitied his amiable looking wife, for of course she knew the light of her Bible better than the darkness of the craft. In conclusion he very ingeniously, not ingenuously, asserted that "Christ was not excluded from one of them," i. e., one of the degrees of Masonry, which he would have liked to have understood thus: Christ is included in all, but the real meaning is that the name is admitted in only one of the degrees; a good illustration of Masonic subterfuge.

It is impossible to do justice to the many friends of the cause, some of whom, I dare say, may feel as if I had not done them justice in my brief notices, or in omitting names and incidents. Some also may have come a second time and been received as new arrivals, for memory is not good. This is not quite the best way for friends, however excellent in the case of foes who are welcome every visit, if they show any fairness of disposition on the subject. One gentleman this morning came within hailing distance, fired off his pop gun and fled. "He had seen none but noodles opposed to Masonry." This was fired at your agent while our excellent brethren in the cause, Messrs. Harry Wilcox, of Jackson, Michigan, and Norris Gay of the old home of poor murdered Morgan, Batavia, New York, were engaged in a lively discussion with some of his "brethren" at your stand.

One of these proved to be a Centennial official with a piece of metal under his vest lappel, which he showed me, and it was verily the meanest thing I had seen in the whole two hundred and thirty-six acres of the Exposition! I having assented to the question, "Do you sell these books?" he ordered the case to be shut up and to sell no more! I have been to the superior officers and find that this zealous servant exceeded his orders [see article entitled Masonic Meanness] although it seems that it accords with certain rules that sales shall not be made without a license. There is a form necessary of which I had no knowledge before, and which may involve some days' delay. Of course if the officious man had not felt a little piqued at the ridiculous result of his Masonic encounter with with Messrs. Wilcox and Gay, he might not have blundered a second time by exceeding his authority. However, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good, for it suddenly blew ten dollars into my hands to be given away in books, etc. Yea, verily, the fellow was not out of sight before our noble-hearted friends handed over five dollars each. Give a commander three hundred such men and others like Anderson, of Ellington, Pennsylvania, who stood "one" for Walker and Kirkpatrick in the railway car, and they would make any general a Leonidas.

I had a very gratifying case yesterday of a young man, a partner in a manufacturing firm in this city. He had received a parcel of tracts and read them, and was now convinced that his duty to Christ was totally opposed to his intended union with the lodge. We shook hands heartily. He is an M. E.

There have also been two bankers at different times, one from New York the other from Brooklyn. The first pronounces Freemasonry injurious to the cause of Christ; the last had been a Mason but rejoices now in freedom of speech, and wonders how any sensible man can continue in the thralldom.

A Rev. M. E., of Michigan, speaking of Masonry said: "We find it in the conference. It must be brought to an issue by and by. Some talk seriously of doing so now."

A "Disciple," whose father printed the Millenial Harbinger for Bishop Alexander Campbell (a thorough opponent, by the by, of Masonry in his lifetime) heard him preach his last sermon. This gentleman had carried a certain Masonic pamphlet for eight years in his pockets and only destroyed it two days ago to his regret now. Two others of this body at different times confessed themselves Masons, but it turned out that although one from the southwest of our country had been ten or twelve years a Mason, he now condemned it as injurious to the church and society. The other cordially shook hands at parting and seemed to admit the correctness of our position.

One mourned a brother — free and generous-hearted — whose death he ascribed to the bad habits formed as a Mason.

A good advocate of Masonry with a foreign accent did not believe in the full inspiration of the Bible.

A melancholy case was an old man whose religious language seemed all in order, until like the transmogrified cat which saw the mouse, it was but a cat after all! So to my amazement he declared (perhaps he thought me a Mason), "Freemasonry is as good and pure as the Christian religion!" He backed out of this however, by attempted modifications. He was one of two who revived a lodge after Morgan's death, and yet declared that it now had got so beneath what it should be that he had not entered a lodge in twenty years.

A Brooklyn gentleman hangs an illustrated Cynosure at his door to bother the Masons and bought a Ronayne to post himself with.

We have had pleasant interviews with Mr. and Mrs. James Stuart of this State, Mr. Whitney of Massachusetts, who had seen Mr. Freeman here and would have been glad to have seen him again. Brother and Sister Acker of Kansas; Terhune of New Jersey; also an editor who had once exchanged with Cynosure whose name I did not get.

A Rev. M. E. was amused at a Mason mistaking him for a Mason and found a dissatisfied state of mind in the poor man concerning it.

But I must add that I have had the pleasure of again seeing Geo. Thompson, the brave advocate of the oppressed, who suffered five years' imprisonment in the reign of slavery, and is now in the field against this aspirant for the rule of men, as undaunted as ever. But you know him and your readers know him, although not perhaps as much as they ought.

Oct. 7th.—On applying to the Gen. Superintendent after the peremptory closing of the book-case by the official referred to in my last, I was told that I might go on giving out tracts, but must not sell anything. I still accepted donations to the tract fund as before, but even this was painful to the petty official, who succeeded in getting an order prohibiting the receipt of donations. He utterly refused to go with me to the Gen. Supt., and shows a determination "to throw every obstacle possible in my way. He tried to make out that I was selling printed matter to the man he saw give the donation but was forced to admit that I distinctly told Mr. Hollister of Plano, Ill., who gave the donation of one dollar, that I could not sell anything, nor did I, and he saw me return the money that was offered to pay for books and refuse to sell.

I have applied for permission to sell, making out my application in due form on a blank furnished me and an answer was promised me this morning. If permission is granted I shall have to pay 15 per cent. on all sales. Judging from the spirit manifested by the officials, there is little hope of getting permission to sell anything.

I am also prohibited from soliciting subscriptions to the Cynosure, but thank God there is no farther restriction on free speech, and there are daily many very interesting discussions at our stand, where thousands of young men get information that we may reasonably hope will keep them out of the lodge. Some who are already caught in its meshes are here shown the evils of secretism and will abandon these works of darkness.

A Sunday-school teacher who had in his class of young men several Odd-fellows, desired something on that order, and I gave him "Sarver's Sermon on Odd-fellowship," and "Odd-fellowship Illustrated." He was very thankful for them. He had instinctively been opposed to the order without knowing much about it. Of course I have to be very careful about giving away books or your case would soon be empty, and besides that they are not mine to give away. But the money given by Messrs. Wilcox and Gay was to pay for books, and perhaps there are others who will send you money for the same purpose, as I am neither allowed to receive donations or to sell anything.

A Baptist minister of N. Y., said he was sick of the multiplication of secret societies. One of his church members, a Mason, but a good man, had said when speaking of the order: "I cannot stand it." A Congregationalist pastor wanted to get posted; had been troubled with a Freemason in his church.

I enjoyed a call from J. B. Cressinger, one of your Ohio lecturers, with his daughter, very much. There is no danger of defeat with such war-horses engaged in the conflict. I also had a pleasant call from J. B. Hart, of Groton, N. Y., an editor and an Anti-mason. Two College students were given "College Secret Societies."

Our old friend Samuel Strong of Saranac, Mich., was determined to find the stand, and did, much to his pleasure and mine, also Amos Farlow of Ohio.

A friend, from Maine, I believe, wanted to take home an assortment of books to sell, but I was obliged to refuse him.

Just as I was about to leave for my boarding place an old gentleman came up smiling and talked freely. He professed to be a Christian as well as a Freemason. I showed him the mutilation of Scripture shown in Mackey's Ritualist, which he professed never to have seen before, but he attempted to justify the mutilation, and finally declared his disbelief in the divinity of Christ, and said that Masonry was a better religion than Christianity. I of course pronounced him an infidel, which he did not relish very well.

A colored Mason who listened was sure that Freemasonry was as ancient as Solomon's Temple, at least. Without debating that point much I showed him that oaths like those of Masonry were strictly prohibited under the Mosaic law, and though as ancient as the tower of Babel they were of no binding force because plainly declared sinful. He referred to the civil oath, but I showed him that one was an unauthorized oath to conceal the truth, while the civil oath which was authorized of God, was an oath to declare "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth,"—the very opposite of each other. He ended like his white brother by pronouncing Masonry better than the church, —a divine institution, etc.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I have lately been reading some copies of your valuable paper. I find it to be straight on reform; no organ of compromise; but fearless in the exposition of evil, false doctrines, and dark institutions. I am weekly receiving a paper which three years ago, when I first subscribed for it, was a bold exponent of the sins in high places, prominent among which was Freemasonry. Persecution was let loose upon the editor, and for two years he has left that subject out of his paper entirely. God grant that it may never be your misfortune to yield your principle to the enemy, though the heavens lower, the earth quake, and the solid rocks rend. I shall no longer support that paper; but all such as stand like the Cynosure, I believe it to be my duty to stand by, and do all I possibly can to encourage by cheering words, remittance, subscription, and extending their circulation.

We stand almost alone here in opposing rum, tobacco, and Freemasonry; and are reviled for letting our light shine. They tell us, "Blessed are the peacemakers," (peace with sin and Satan, at ease in Zion); that is their hobby. To sit and suck their pipes like great emblems of second childhood, they call worshiping God in the beauty of holiness. I do not seek that kind of peace or holiness. Neither do I want it.

Be encouraged, Mr. Editor, remembering that those who live Godly shall suffer persecution. A. L. J.

Dear Sir:—I saw a notice in the Cleveland Leader of tha 16th of September that the Baptists of San Fransisco are erecting a tabernacle for the worship of Almighty God, through his Son, our Master and Redeemer. Yet when they came to lay the corner-stone, they had to apply to the Freemasons to lay it for them. A house which they are building at a cost of some $150,000, to dedicate to Almighty God, to honor his Son in, must have its corner-stone laid by a set of infidels, and in mock idolatrous ceremonies. Shame, where is thy blush! I pity in my soul any Christian people who cannot build a house of worship without consulting Belial, and calling the lodge to their aid, to do, or help to do the Divine service, and important work of the same. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you and be to you a Father and ye shall be to me sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. vi. 17.) And have nothing to do, or no "fellowship with the unfruitful workers of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak of the things done of them in secret. (Eph. v. 11, 12.)

I pray God to hasten on the time when the church of Christ, and of God, will purge itself of oath-bound secretism, and everything that militates against the right. I am still battling for the good cause, using the sword of the Spirit. I am yours in Christ, J. B. Cressinger.

"Ecce Orienti."

Elmwood, Ill., Oct., 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—As President Allen of Westfield College requests some one who is "posted" to explain "Ecce Orienti," I will see what I can do.

In the first place perhaps it would be best to tell how I came to know the book. Silas Oldfield, a Master Mason of "Horeb Lodge, No. 363," aproached me one day more than a year ago, and presented me a little book in cypher, and asked me if I could read it. He then informed me that if I could I would know all the secrets of Freemasonry. He said Anti-masons did not know it all yet. From that time I resolved to know Masonry, without going into a lodge. Some way, I never had confidence enough in the "exposition" to even read them, much less study them.

The book I saw had no title page and I have since heard that it was the book the Grand Master of Illinois suppressed. I knew where to go for light—to the Cynosure office. So I wrote a letter of inquiry and found that "Ecce Orienti" could be obtained for $3.50, and that "Bernard's Light on Masonry" would be a good key. Well, I got the book and in an hour I had mastered the "cypher" and soon became thoroughly interested and could read it as readily as any other book.

Now is not that strange; when Masons solemnly declare that only Masons can buy the book, and only Masons can read it?

As the preface is short I will insert it here, remarking that the book does not claim to be Masonic, but the ritual of another order, yet the work is identical with Masonry:

"The Ritual adopted by the Modern Order of Essenes is so long that it can only be learned and retained by constant attendance at the meetings, and as many are so situated that they cannot attend regularly, they soon forget much that they have learned, and thus lose interest in the subject, until their connection with the order becomes merely nominal, or is entirely severed in default of the payment of dues. From this state of things arises the need and demand for some means of refreshing and aiding the memory, outside of the lodge and for the want of an authentic work on the subject, Essenes are availing themselves of any means of information that comes within their reach; hence the extensive sale of several open and highly erroneous exposes, that are sold alike to members of the order and the public at large. To arrest this evil, and meet the demand for a work of this nature that is accurate and legitimate, this volume has been prepared.

THE AUTHOR."

Who ever saw any open exposé of the "order of Essenes"?

Then follows a short history of the Jewish sect called "Essenes," and then an account of Modern Essenism" from which I must make a short extract:

"On the revival of Essenism and its introduction into this country, the principles of the ancient sect were adopted by the new order here as a basis of their creed and government, together with the following ritual, which is here given to assist us in becoming bright and zealous workers on that symbolic structure here below, to the end that we all may be the better enabled to eventually enter that spiritual building —that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Is not that good Masonic doctrine? I will now make a short extract from the body of the book, with the literal translation from Mr. Ronayne's "Hand Book:"

"Yr ps bhv an' rglr dprtum hv mrtd th hrr wh w'e hv nw confd; an' i yr nw chrc i't i' xpct tht u. wl cnfrm t. th prncpls o' the or-d l. std pisvrng i th prete o' evr cmmdb vr-t. Sh i th ntr o' yr enggmts a' a Fc., an' t' ths d-nts n ar bd b' the ms sa'ed ts."

There are many characters in the book, but I have selected the above extract that it may the more readily be printed; it is found on page 92. In the Hand Book on page 83 we find the above to read:

"Your past behavior and regular deportment have merited the honor which we have now conferred; and in your new character, it is expected that you will conform to the principles of the order, by steadily persevering in the practice of every commendable virtue. Such is the nature of your engagements as a Fellow Craft, and to these duties you are bound by the most sacred ties."

This is sufficient to see what the book is like. What do Masons say of the book? One Mason admitted that the monitorial work was correctly given, but the filling in was only to catch Anti-masons, yet he would not say it was false. Another Mason told me that it was not quite right, but it was nearly so.

I loaned the book to a young friend a few days ago, who is a well posted book Mason and can read the cypher readily. He showed the book to a brother who is a well posted Mason, and had not before seen the book; but in a few minutes became wonderfully interested in it and said it was the ritual of a secret religious society among the Jews. My young friend said it was as good as a show to see his brother's face, when he expressed surprise at the interest his brother seemed to take in a society he knew nothing of and could read their secret work so easily.

Perhaps I have said enough on the character of the work, and the evidence of its genuineness as a Masonic work, as Bro. Allen infers it to be; but I will say in conclusion that it is neatly printed on good paper and well bound for service, of convenient size for the pocket, and contains 174 pages. It abounds in symbols and abbreviations and would puzzle a man not well versed in the "arts, parts and points," of Freemasonry to decipher, and hence will never be popular with Anti-Masons.

OUR MAIL.

A. Holt, Carthage, New York, writes:

"I am anxious to vote this fall for Walker and Kirkpatrick. The American Party platform is just the platform for the honest American people. I never saw a better one got up by any party, and I think that every Christian voter should vote in favor of such a platform. Mr. Editor, where shall we get our tickets?"

We will send tickets to all who order them in time. If convenient enclose money to pay for them at the rate of twenty-five cents per hundred.

E. Gould, Pillar Point, Jefferson county, New York, writes:

"Long may the Cynosure live to defend the right, and may the time soon come when the cause which it advocates shall gloriously triumph."

Stephen Waite, New Bedford, Bristol county, Massachusetts, writes:

"I am lending my paper and circulating the tracts in this place. I shall vote the Walker ticket."

S. S. Rice, N. Pownal, Cumberland county, Maine, writes.

"We intend to do all we can for the destruction of Freemasonry and the salvation of sinners. You have our sympathy and our prayers. Push the battle; the Lord will help you."

Mrs. L. W. Rowley, Utica, Minnesota, writes:

"The kingdom of darkness is in conflict with the kingdom of light. Nothing but Divine power can control the long standing empire of vice. When will the Church awake and realize the acts which Freemasonry is weaving for her destruction?"

W. Uffenbeck, Lemont, Illinois, writes:

"Though Lemont is known as a place where the secret societies have a great many followers, yet there are a great many Christians here who abhor them and who firmly believe that secretism cannot be combined with true Christianity."

James Auten, Galion, Ohio, writes:

"I should be well pleased to hold our State meeting at Oberlin, so that we could have Edmond Ronayne with us."

What do other friends in Ohio say?

David Brown, Ottawa, Illinois, writes:

"By the Streator mob we see the working of the lodge. We have three newspapers in our city, and not one of them said a word about it, and but few persons have heard of it although but sixteen miles away."

Rev. Wm. Oburn, Galion, Ohio, writes:

"Two Royal Arch Masons of this place (one deceased lately), stated to me in plain terms that if the anti-secret party undertook to put down by means of the ballot all lodge associations, they would, by means of the sword, undertake to defend their right to continue them. There is no doubt but a feeling of this description is cherished by many of the advocates of secrecy."

James Audruss, Amboy, Illinois, who is now eighty-three and a half years old, writes:

"When I was a young man I joined the Masons; but when I professed religion a few years after I found I had made a much better choice in joining the church; and I was also taught by so doing to have but one master; the Author of the Bible. I also thought it my duty to renounce Masonry, hoping it might induce others to do so, and still others not to join so terrible an institution as I had. I have never regretted taking this course."

John Viall, who has obtained twenty-eight new three months subscriptions for the Cynosure in September, writes:

"Faith without works is dead. I do hope the friends of this blessed cause will arise and work as they never have done until the terrorism of the secret, oath-bound clans shall be utterly destroyed. I am working alone here, but by God's help I shall do what I can to increase the circulation of the Cynosure and advance the interests of the American Party."

Edmond Ronayne writes from Albion, Iowa:

"At Ames we had three meetings, equal in interest to anything of the kind during this year. They were large and enthusiastic, and what is still better, they were attended with good results. Masons sent for me to hold a private conference, and I doubt not some of them at least have seen the interior of a lodge for the last time. I worked the three degrees, and it would be impossible for me to describe the feeling of that vast audience during the exhibition of the Hiram Abiff tragedy on Thursday night. The Anti-masonic cause is largely indebted to friends Steele, Lamb etc., who are working like Trojans."

F. Christian, Placerville, Cal., writes:

"I am seventy four years old and circulate my Cynosure as much as possible, and find many who read it on the sly."

A friend in Vermont writes:

"My prayers are offered for the Anti-masonic lecturers and writers; also for the entire anti secret reform, that God may guide in all these matters; that Mr. Ronayne may become a Christian if he is not one; that he may be greatly blessed in all things; in his family, his business, at home and abroad; but especially in his soul. I ask the prayers of all Anti-masons in the country that God may raise up many such lecturers, and may we soon have one in this State. Let us hear from all the friends in Vermont relative to a State mass meeting. We as Anti-masons are not, in my opinion, sufficiently awake in this great work. A great work it is and a good one and one that God is blessing."

What do other friends in Vermont say to a State meeting?

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

How to Find Mr. Hodge.

The tract stand, where Mr. Thomas Hodge will welcome every friend of this cause is in the SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF THE MAIN BUILDING. Find either of the large Bible Society stands and they will point out to you the beautiful Cynosure Banner close by.

Elgin Congregational Association.

This body of Illinois Congregationalists closed a most interesting semi-annual meeting at Wheaton, Oct. 11th, inst. The ministers in attendance seemed to have experienced a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit, and the prospect of revival on their fields of labor appears better than ever before.

Several of the pastors take the Cynosure; and some who have never read "Finney on Masonry," have procured that volume, the most wonderful work left by that great and holy man.

One pastor remarked: "I have Masons and Odd-fellows in my church and congregation; and the question has pressed itself on my mind within the last few minutes: 'Am I willing the light of God would shine on that great and important subject as well as on others?' We know that Bro. Finney was a man approved of God, and that he was a Mason. I am resolved to obtain his book against the lodge, and give that subject the investigation to which its acknowledged importance entitles it."

Such was the spirit of this excellent meeting. And if these good and talented men shall obey the injunction by Moses to Joshua: "Only be thou strong and of a good courage," a new era of hope and power has dawned on the Congregational churches of northern Illinois. "He that heareth the sayings of Christ and doeth them," builds his house on a rock; he that doeth them not, builds on shifting sand.

T. Dewitt Talmage.

This gentleman has resigned his place as editor of the Christian at Work, and is announced as editor-in-chief of the Advance. It is also announced that the Advance will henceforth be published simultaneously at Chicago and New York.

This is important intelligence, not only to the cause of Christ in general, but to the cause of Christian reform. Mr. Talmage has made a strong impression on the popular mind, and has not belonged to that class of religious worldings who endeavor to purchase popularity by selling the truth and catering to its enemies. His taking Richard S. Storrs, D. D., with him into the Advance would seem to prove that he too, as well as Dr. Storrs, has shrunk from the moral abominations which have had their source and center in Brooklyn.

It is a physical impossibility, however, that a paper should be published "simultaneously" in New York and Chicago. It must and will belong to one city or the other. The Plymouth church, Chicago, is endeavoring to procure Mr. Talmage as their pastor. Let us hope that if he comes here he will not come as the timid apologist for, or slave of the lodge, or worse still, the pretended but false friend of reform.

Mormon Masonry.

It is not generally known that Mormonism is what is called in lodge-language "Clandestine Masonry." Jo Smith, the founder of Mormonism was a Freemason, well known by Samuel D. Greene, was often at his hotel in Batavia before and about the time of Morgan's abduction; and it is a curious and pregnant fact that Mormonism arose when Masonry fell; the legion which ruled and run the lodge, would seem to have "entered into the swine" of the endowment house; hence ruling Mormons are sworn by terrific oaths, to obedience to their head, so that the judicial oath has no influence on Mormons.

Smith instituted a stop degree by which none but Mormon Masons could enter their lodges, which is what constitutes clandestine Masonry.

The murderous oaths and sham-assassination of Hiram Abiff acted over and over by Masons is an appropriate drill and preparation for such crimes as the Mountain Meadow massacre. The following sequel of that bloody holocaust to Mormonism is given in the papers.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Oct. 10.—At Beaver, Utah, to-day, Judge Boreman passed sentence upon John D. Lee for participation in the Mountain Meadow massacre nineteen years ago. In doing so he called attention to the atrocity of the crime; the inability heretofore of the authorities to procure evidence that the conspiracy to murder was widespread; that he was finally offered up as a sacrifice to popular indignation, but that others equally guilty might hereafter expect punishment. The prisoner having the right under the laws of the Territory to choose death by hanging, shooting or beheading, and having chosen to be shot, was sentenced to be shot to death Jan. 26, 1877.

A Tribute to Seward.

There has just been completed and presented to the city of New York by prominent citizens a noble statue of Wm. H. Seward. At the formal unvailing of the statue in Madison Square and presentation to the Mayor in behalf of the city, Hon. W. M. Evarts, in the address of the occasion, delivered a eulogium to the most honored son of the Empire State well worthy the occasion, the orator and the subject. The following extract is a just tribute of praise to the man whose first lessons in politics were received from the men and principles who fifty years ago stood up against the despotic and infidel lodge; who twenty years later arose in the Senate of the United States in eloquent defense of those principles in his memorable speech against the secret Know-nothing order; and who received that famous encomium of Hon. Charles Francis Adams in his eulogy on Seward before the New York Legislature, April 18, 1873: "The inconsistency of the power of secret societies with popular institutions, as illustrated in the well known story of the abduction and death of Morgan, made him first a member of the Senate of this State, and afterwards raised him to be governor for two terms. In all this public service, he is found boldly adhering to his broad popular views, even when they were so much in advance as actually to conflict with popular prejudices." In Mr. Evarts' speech occurred the following:

Mr. Seward's fame was not bounded by the limits of the State or the country in which and for which he lived. His life divided itself into four divisions of service to the country. From '24 to '36 a lawyer; from '36 to '48 he filled a prominent place in the service of the State; from '48 to '60 in the U. S. Senate, he led and filled out the great progressive movement of our politics; from '60 he had been foremost in the administration of the affairs of the country. He was a leader of two great parties, and where, in all his career, could we look for any failing in duty? Had he been only a lawyer, there would have been others more famous, but none more faithful. He (the speaker) would give all the fame that could come from splendid rhetoric and eloquence, to have it said of him that he defended James Freeman against a world in arms.

Having stood the sole Senator who maintained fully and fairly the doctrines that he held in regard to slavery, he had, in 1850, gathered about him twenty-seven Senators; and when the great question came, and the choice fell upon another younger in the service than he to lead his party, he went forward without a moment's pause or a ripple in his composure, and then, encountering the storms that followed, he failed before no responsiblity, he faltered in no duty. The traits of character which made his life always the same were serenity of judgment, which could make him the master of the confused ideas of others; great forecast, which was able to keep in mind the processes that were going on to legitimate conclusions; and patience without which forecast and serenity do not complete the domination that is possible to man.

That great character had suffered as much in life from misconstruction and misrepresentation as any less pure and faithful servant of the country. When shall we learn that that which makes charity so difficult in little affairs is ten times greater in large? When learn that evil spoken of great men is truth? If only truth were spoken against men in public affairs, there would not be much complaint. Through his long life Mr. Seward had definite political principles, one of which was an unflinching faith in popular privileges, and no departure could be found from his faith in popular government.

—"An Oriental Order of Humility, the chief object of which appears to be the conferring of high-sounding titles upon insignificant people, has been established in the South. The plan of the order is truly 'Oriental.'" —Tribune.

This society has been heard of occasionally in the North. It is merely a vent for the bad gases generated in the Masonic lodge. Some of the more outlandish Freemasons not having scope enough in their lodge for folly start one of these organizations in a town, and practice their abominable horse-play upon any poor wretch they may get hold of. If the order is "Oriental" it is no less humiliating to every one connected with it. And for that matter the title may well be applied to secret orders in general.

—A number of our colored citizens have been taken in a Masonic trap labelled, "N. G. L. U. O. O. F." which stands for National Grand Lodge of the United Order of Oddfellows, an organization entirely distinct from the late Philadelphia fair. Their meeting was lately held in Memphis, Tenn., and was attended by forty-six delegates. There should be no sorrow that the number was so small. It should rather surprise plain-thinking persons that the colored race should thus follow in the foolish ways of their paler friends, whose organized systems of secret conspiracy are more dreadful in many portions of the South than was the crack of the driver's whip in years forever gone. Senator Sherman in a speech at Marietta, Ohio, not long since called these Southern orders "secret oath-bound conspiracies of hell." Why will the colored man encourage such infamous gangs by entering into secret bonds among themselves.

The United Presbyterian of a late date had an ably written semi-centennial review of the Morgan abduction and murder, and the following plain conclusion is drawn from the story:

"Would it not be well for the people to look around them and ascertain who among their self-constituted leaders are members of this and like conspiracies, and ask themselves how many of those who are in the enjoyment of public office are "brethren of the mystic tie"—members in full standing among the conspirators against the equal privileges of American citizens."

A Correction.

It is claimed that in my communication of Sept. 12th I made a slight mistake. I said "this same minister is President of an anti-secret society." I should have said Secretary instead of President. I ask to make the correction.

J. A. Bingham.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. N. Wardner writes to the American Wesleyan some sadly interesting features of Christian labor in Western Tennessee. In a number of instances churches were held in buildings with a lodge overhead, whose dismal thumps and other noises of initiation sometimes nearly broke up the religious services below. In one place a kind of union church had a granger's hall added in front, so that the Wesleyan brethren worshipping within must needs pass through it.

—Rev. Geo. Whipple, for years a Secretary of the American Missionary Association died on Friday the 6th inst. The Advance says of him: "The colored people of the South might well build a monument to his memory, as one who was as instrumental as almost any other one man has been in bearing to them the advantages of Christian education."

—The General Conference of the Seventh-day Baptists, was held in Walworth, Wis., beginning Sept, 27th. The reports from the various agencies of this church, mission and tract societies, educational and Sabbath-school interests were encouraging. The Sabbath Recorder, the organ of this church takes an honorable position against the lodge.

—The North Michigan Free Methodist conferenee expressed its opinion by vote that steeples, belfries and towers on churches are generally useless and expensive appendages better left out of the church plans.

—The revival meetings continued through the past week with no abatement in the real religious interest; the crowds of curious only being missed. Audiences of from four to seven thousand have gathered to hear the earnest and devoted addresses of Major Whittle, and the revival continues to deepen among professing Christians. Thnrsday was widely observed in the city and country around in fasting and prayer for this work. Messrs. Morehouse and Needham arrived on that day and took part in th: meeting which overflowed Farwell Hall, filling the First Methodist church near by. The railroads have arranged their trains to accommodate any living in the snburban towns who may wish to attend in the evening. On the Sabbath Mr. Moody returned from his brother's burial and resumed charge of the meetings.

—The first band of missionaries to foreign lands sent out by the United Evangelical Association has just started for Japan. Sabbath, Oct. 1st, they spent in Cleveland, the headquarters of the denomination and very interesting farewell exercises made the occasion memorable in the history of the denomination.

—The meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions was held this year in Hartford, Oct. 3d to 6th. The reports presented show that only four ministers have been sent out as new laborers this year. A considerable number of new helpers have however been sent out by the Woman's Board. The total receipts for the year were $465,442 from all sources, which was not sufficient by over $31,000 to meet the expenses. The Board maintains eighteen missions, eighty-six stations and 517 out-stations; 155 ordained missionaries, female assistants 222; 1,100 native pastors, teachers, catechists and other helpers and a total force of 1,488 in foreign fields, sustained by this society. The number of church members on its fields is 12,811; added during the year, 1,638.

News of the Week.

—The State elections in Ohio, Indiana and West Virginia were held last week and were hotly contested. Ohio elected the Republican ticket with considerable gains. Indiana elects Democratic State officers by 5,000 majority, but there is a Republican gain in Congressmen of five; Ohio likewise gains eight. W. Virginia is Democratic.

—A new Mississippi steamer, the Southern Belle, was burned last week near Baton Rouge. The passengers were panic striken and by burning and drowning twenty-five or thirty lives were last.

—On the morning of the 12th inst., a boiler in a nail mill in Pittsburgh exploded with terrific force demolishing the mill and part of a rolling mill adjacent and damaging considerable property in the vicinity. Of the 150 workmen in the mill fifteen were killed, three fatally injured and thirty-nine wounded.

—The condition of the Servian war last week is told in the following dispatches, which describe the negotiations for an armistice:

London, October 11th.—A Reuter dispatch from Constantinople says: At the extraordinary council yesterday, which decided to grant a six months' armistice, strong opposition to any armistice was at first expressed. The council agreed that a six we ks' armistice, as proposed by the Powers, might, from its shortness, seriously endanger Turkey in the improbable event of a failure of peace negotiations.

The council therefore decided that the Porte should communicate to the Powers the conditions on which it would consent to a six months' armistice, which in its opinion would have the following advantages, namely: Enable the Porte to allay the excitement among the Mussulmans; not expose the Porte to the risk of having to resume hostilities during the inclement season, and afford an interval which would facilitate an understanding upon the conditions of peace and general reform to be introduced in the empire.

The notification of the Porte's acceptance of the armistice in this sense will be made to the Ambassadors to-day. It is believed here that the Porte's conditions will be cacepted.

A Reuter dispatch from Belgrade dated to-day says: "The Servian Council of Ministers to-day decided to accept a regular armistice as soon as it is proposed to them by the Consuls of the Great Powers."

—The latest in regard to the armistice is that the Porte has offered one of five months which Russia refuses. The English sentiment is in favor of the armistice with a growing jealousy toward Russia, and calls on Germany as the arbiter of the impending war to decide against the formidable Czar.

Obituary.

Mr. Nehemiah Fancher, a Christian of fifty years experience, died at his residence in Cumberland Co., Ill., Sept. 16th, 1876, aged 72 years, 4 months, and 9 days. His place of nativity was Luzerne Co., Pa., his boyhood and early manhood were spent in Ohio; his last thirty years in Illinois.

His life was one of marked activity; and that not simply of a secular sort, but largely religious. Depth of convictions, earnest solicitude for the right, uncompromising decision of character marked him. The "works of darkness," secret societies, were his abhorrence. Our Anti-masonic movements had a prayerful supporter in Bro. Fancher. Nor did he undervalue the Cynosure, but was some time a subscriber for it; always its friend. The lodges owed him no gratitude, nor failed to give him their hostility. He is now quite beyond the reach of cable-tow influence—gone to that blessed One who in secret said nothing. Thus, one by one depart our trusty ones, our fellow-soldiers, our "partners in distress." But the work will still go on—the Lord still reigns.

The Home Circle.

As God Will.

If I were told that I must die to morrow,
That the next sun
Which sinks should bear me past all fear and sorrow
For any one,
All the fight fought, and all the journey through,
What should I do?

I do not think that I should shrink or falter,
But just go on;
Doing my work, nor change, nor seek to alter
Aught that is gone;
But rise and move, and love, and smile, and pray
For one more day.

And lying down at night for a last sleeping,
My ear
Which harkens ever: "Lord, within thy keeping
How should I fear?
And when to-morrow brings thee still nearer,
Do thou thy will."

I might not sleep for awe; but peaceful, tender,
My soul would lie
All the night long; and, when the morning splendor
Flashed o'er the sky,
I think that I could smile, could calmly say,
"It is his day."

But, if a wondrous hand from the blue yonder
Held out a scroll
On which my life was writ, and I with wonder
Beheld unroll
To a long century's end its mystic clew;
What should I do?

What would I do, O blessed Guide and Master,
Other than this—
Still to go on as now, not slower, faster,
Nor fear to miss
The road, although so very long it be,
While led by thee?

Step by step, feeling thou art close beside me,
Although unseen;
Through thorns, through flowers, whether the tempest hide thee,
Or heavens serene—
Assured thy faithfulness cannot betray,
Nor love decay.

I may not know my God; no hand revealeth
Thy counsels wise;
Along the path no deepening shadow stealeth,
No voice replies
To all my questioning thought, the time to tell,
And it is well.

Let me keep on, abiding and unfearing,
Thy will always,
Through a long century's ripe fruition,
Or a short day's.
Thou canst not come too soon—and I can wait
If thou come late.

Real Religion.

Nothing does so open our faculties, and compose and direct the whole man, as an inward sense of God; of his authority over us; of the laws he has set us; of his eye ever upon us; of his hearing our prayers, assisting our endeavors, watching over our concerns; and of his being to judge and to reward or punish us in another state, according to what we do in this; nothing will give a man such a detestation of sin, and such a sense of the goodness of God, and to our obligations to holiness, as a right understanding, and a firm belief of the Christian religion: nothing can give a man so calm a peace within, and such a firm security against all fears and dangers without, as the belief of a kind and wise providence, and of a future state. An integrity of heart gives a man a courage and confidence that cannot be shaken. A man is sure that, by living according to the rules of religion he becomes the wisest, the best and happiest creature that he is capable of being: honest industry, the employing of his time well, and a constant sobriety, an undefiled purity and chastity, with a quiet serenity, are the best preservers of life and health; so that, take a man as a single individual, religion is his guard, his perfection, his beauty and his glory: this will make him the light of the world, shining brightly and enlightening many round about him.—Burnet.

Reason cannot Understand the New Birth.

I heard some time ago of some commercial travellers who went to hear a man preach. They came back to the hotel, and were sitting in the smoking-room talking, and they said that the minister did not appeal to their reason, and they would not believe anything they could not reason out. There was an old man sitting there listening, and he said to them, "You say you won't believe anything you can't reason out?" "No, we won't." The old man said, "As I was coming in the train yesterday, I noticed some sheep, and cattle, and swine, and geese, all eating grass. Now, can you tell me by what process that same grass was turned into feathers, hair, bristles, and wool?" "Well, no, we can't just tell you that." "Do you believe it is a fact?" "Oh yes, it is a fact." "I thought you said you would not believe anything you could not reason out." "Well, we can't help believing that; that is a fact we see before our eyes." "Well," said the old man, "I can't help but believe in regeneration, and a man being converted, though I cannot explain how God converted him."—Moody.

Scripturally Settled.

A widow in a Scottish country town had been left by her husband at his death a considerable amount of property, with a mortgage on it. Her trouble was whether she should pay the interest on the mortgage, and keep the property entire, or sell a portion of it, and discharge the encumbrance. Many weeks of thought and consultation passed, and at length one morning she met her minister, with a blithe countenance, and the joyous statement that now she saw her way through the difficulty, and that her mind was at rest. On being asked how she had come to such a happy and peremptory decision, she told him that she had happened to read that morning the sixtieth Psalm, and the sixth verse, which said, 'I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth,' forcibly struck her, and appeared to give her the light and direction which she so earnestly desired. She sold at once, as if by divine warrant, a portion of her inheritance, and freed the remainder from all pecuniary burdens.—Dr. Eadie.

Give Yourself.—Said a mother to me one day: "When my children were young I thought the very best thing I could do for them was to give them myself. So I spared no pains to talk with them, to teach them, to read to them, to pray with them, to be a loving companion and friend to my children. I had to neglect my house many times, I had no time to indulge myself in many things which I should have liked to do. I was so busy adorning their minds and cultivating their hearts' best affections, that I could not adorn their bodies in fine clothes, though I kept them neat and comfortable at all times. I have my reward now. My sons are ministers of the Gospel, my grown-up daughter a lovely Christian woman. I have plenty of time to sit down now and rest, plenty of time to keep my house in perfect order, plenty of time to indulge myself in many ways, besides going about my Master's business whenever he has need of me. I have a thousand beautiful memories of their childhood to comfort me. Now that they have gone out into the world, I have the sweet consciousness of having done all I could to make them ready for whatever work God calls them to do. I gave them the best I could—myself."—Selected.

Another Good Letter for our Little Folks.

Constableville, N. Y., Oct. 5th, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—You printed the letter I sent before, and so I thought I would try again. I like the Cynosure very much. I am very glad the Anti-masons have a stand at the Centennial, and I hope it will do a great deal of good. I should like very much to go to the Centennial, but as I cannot, I do the next best thing, read all about what others have seen because I cannot see them myself. A good many from around here have gone to the Centennial. I have enjoyed reading the letters from Elder Freeman when he was there. And also the letter that Mr. Cook wrote for the children while he was there. I like to read the letters from children, and I wish that more of them would write. I have read a good many Anti-masonic books, as we keep them in the house to sell, lend, or give away. I think the "Broken Seal" is very interesting. I send a Biblical enigma. And now I must close, or my letter will get too lengthy. So good bye and many good wishes for the Cynosure.

[Thank Cora for her contributions. Will not others of her young friends be inspired by her example to write to one another in the Cynosure?]

Young Folks Centennial Letter.

My Dear Young Friends: - There are a great many strange things said and done in this world, and one of the world's wonders just now is this Centennial in Philadelphia. Right among this great collection of the world's riches in so much that is worth looking at; two ladies came along, and one of them thus in great anxiety, addressed me: "Oh sir, can't you tell us what to look at. O there are so many things and no one to tell us what to look at!" Now I looked at them, strangely, I guess, for she explained: "You know, sir, people tell of seeing so many strange things, and we don't know where to look for them." I guess they had attended shows, and had everything shown them, and now for the articles to show themselves without a showman was a style of exhibition they were not prepared for. I saw the trouble they were in and arose from my seat and pointed to a little book in a case close by and said: "There's the smallest Bible in the world." "Oh, Oh!" she cried out, "ain't that nice, that's just what we mean. Now you see we would have passed that. We are so [it was a big so] much obliged to you." "And that," said I, pointing to another case, "is a Bible four hundred years old." "Thank you sir, thank you; ever so much obliged to you." Now I think that so much thanks for so little work was first rate pay, and so I took a few steps, and pointed out in a corner the old frame pulpit in which the celebrated Whitfield used to stand when preaching out of doors to the big crowds of his day, and inside of it is the chair of the subject of that world-renowned tract called "The Dairyman's Daughter." I must not tell of her here, but recommend you to read it; but I'll tell you that that old chair which they think so much of is quite a plain frame with rattan bottom, a good deal the worse for the wear; and I wouldn't wonder if visitors have nipped off little pieces of it to send to some good grandma, or dear auntie at home who could not come to see the chair such a dear devout person had occupied. But I must say good bye to the ladies, for I have something for the boys now, just as strange. There are big stuffed bears from Russia trying to look fierce, and from that and other countries all manner of winged and four-footed forms which had once lived, and others which had never lived except in men's fancies, some of them carved out by "cunning workmen." But one of the things which has got into the heads of some strange people is the figure of a big giant, figuratively speaking you know, of which they are as much afraid as silly children used to be of witches and ghosts one hundred years ago. Well, there is really this said giant, and what do you think? He is actually there and appears to be watching such people, but when he came to the great exposition he was found to be stuffed with straw.

Now, my dear boys and girls, some of you too, may wonder what that story means, and so I must try to give you the interpretation of it. Some wicked men are so bad and some good men are so blind that they sometimes took such oaths as God called sinful in the time of Moses. Men were called guilty for doing so and were called on to confess their sin and offer sacrifice for it. Now men may be bound by oaths if they are ageeable to God's will. But in this case they should not be bound because they are contrary to his will. Now if a man thinks himself bound by an oath, when he should repent and confess the taking of it as a sin, it is clearly not a binding oath, but a straw oath which he ought to break.

Now this is just where a great many grown up men are. They fancy they are bound by oaths which they ought never to have taken and when good men and great preachers like President Finney and Elder Bernard confessed their sin and told young men and others not to commit that sin, and gave the reasons, what do you think these oath-bound men did? They said bad things about them and a man who thought himself bound said to me that Mr. Finney was a backslider; that is a man who goes from good to bad, because he had repented of his bad oaths and had tried to prevent other men from taking them. That was going from bad to good I think, don't you?

I shall now refer you to Lev. v. 4-5, to see the oaths then pronounced sinful, and which are of the very same character which a great many men in our land have taken thoughtlessly or ignorantly, or in unbelief and against the authority of the Bible and of the authority of our ascended Savior. THOS. HODGE.

What Did the Clock Say?

The clock upon the tower of a neighboring church tolled forth, slowly and solemnly, the knell of the departed hour. As the last sound died away, Willie, who was sitting on the carpet at his mother's feet, lifted his head, and, looking earnestly in her face, asked:

"Mother, what did the clock say?"

"To me," said his mother, sadly, "it seemed to say, Gone—gone—gone!"

"What, mother—what has gone?"

"Another hour, my son."

"What is an hour, mother?"

"A white-winged messenger from our Father in heaven, sent by him to inquire of you—of me—what we are doing, what we are saying, and what we are thinking and feeling."

"Where has it gone, mother?"

"Back to him who sent it, bearing on its wings, which were so pure and white when it came, a record of all our thoughts, words and deeds while it is with us. Were they all such as our Father could receive with a smile of approbation?"

A three-year old, contemplating a favorite cow, asked her mother "what Daisy did with her cud when she was done with it?" The puzzled parent did not know. "Oh, I know!" said the little one, "she gives it to papa, and he keeps it in his cheek."

The Work of the Holy Spirit.

D. W. WHITTLE IN THE REVIVAL MEETINGS.

In the absence of Mr. Moody last week Major Whittle led the revival meetings in the Tabernacle and Farwell Hall. On Monday at the noon meeting he spoke on the work of the Holy Spirit, and the following is taken from his remarks:

We never read in the Old Testament of the Holy Ghost being in the souls of believers. We do not read of that till our Lord Jesus Christ comes. But now the Holy Ghost may be in Christians and dwell upon them with power. And it seems to me that all this feeling we have of depression and insufficiency, all this longing desire that we and thers may be helped of God, would be answered if we just looked to God for the special enduement of the power of his Holy Spirit. It is not going to come out of ourselves. It is not going to come from any qualification in ourselves. Oh, it seems to me that our need is just this enduement of the power of the Holy Ghost. And when he comes love and faith, and all the virtues will come. And if we recognize this as definite and distinct, the reality of this induement, the reality of this gift. if we fully realize that this induement is a specific act of God, we will seek for it so importunately that God will give it us. Now what is the truth in regard to the Holy Spirit? We find Jesus Christ in the 3rd chapter of John's gospel fully endued with the Spirit; "for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." We find when he departed he breathed on his disciples and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." We find in the 39th verse of the 3d chapter of John that the "Holy Ghost was not yet given because that Jesus was not yet glorified." It required the glorification of the Son of God before the dispensation of the Spirit of God could commence. And you study your Bibles carefully and you find the promises of God looking forward to the giving of the Holy Spirit, the putting off of his Spirit into the souls of men. So you find that after the resurrection of Christ, and not till after his resurrection, did he breathe on his disciples and say, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." And afterward he told them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. The Spirit must be in them and upon them. And you know, in the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, that they tarried there, and they prayed together for ten hours, and it was a very distinct, very definite transaction they had with the living God. They were men with like passions with ourselves. They tarried there in prayer in the name of the glorified Saviour, and there was a descent upon them from on high, and they went out endued with the living power of the Holy Ghost. Paul was filled with the Holy Ghost. Ananias came and said to him, "Brother Paul, the Lord, even Jesus, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost, and many others, in the New Testament narrative, the bestowal of the Holy Ghost being always after the resurrection of the Saviour, Now, dear friends, the thing for us to believe is that the Holy Ghost is still in the church as really as immediately after the resurrection; that His dispensation still continues; that Christ himself has gone away that we might receive the comfortor and be filled with the Holy Ghost. The glorification of the Son is comforted in the bestowal of the Spirit. We cannot understand the word of God unless the Holy Spirit shall come upon you. "The natural man," says First Corinthians, "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God;" he cannot know them because they are spiritually discerned. God hath revealed them by his Spirit. So we can understand our Bible when speaking of the Spirit in the eighth chapter of Romans: "We know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intecession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered." And then, again, we see the mighty personal agency of the Holy Ghost in the fifth chapter of Acts, thirty-seventh verse: "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him. So in all the circle of Scripture there is testimony to the power and attributes of the Holy Spirit, and to his being vouchsafed to those who earnestly ask of God. It is the clear teaching of the word of God, then, that we should tarry before God and seek this enduement of power. And the history of the church shows it down through the ages. All through the past cases might be cited of the wonderful influence exerted by men consecrated in all their being by the Holy Ghost. In our own day, and right here in this city, we have a demonstration in our brother Moody being taken right out from among us, from a business house in this city, and made by the fullness of God's spirit a power and a blessing in a great revival of souls to a higher life. Now all this was work for God, and under the power of the Spirit, and with the Spirit's cheering encouragement. It is a hard, hard work for you to go to your Sabbath-school, to stand up and try to reach souls, unless the Spirit of God is with you and working through you. Dear friends, it seems to me we must have a more definite conception of the gift of the Holy Spirit. When we believe, it is the work of the Holy Spirit, because no man can see Jesus Christ except it be given him of the Spirit. You are saved by the Spirit when you believe. It seems to me that there is a faith of the Holy Spirit, in its reality, that Christians need to rejoice in more than they do. The possession of that best of gifts sets them apart from common men. The seventy elders of Israel were distinct from the remaining congregation; and when we desire to be thus filled with God, and desire to be used of God, and desire for ourselves this precious blessing, and the desire shall be so strong as to lead us to consecrate our whole being, we shall receive the gift, we shall receive the blessing of God, even the filling of our souls with his own Spirit. And then, it seems to me, we have a great work ourselves in this matter of self-consecration. I do not believe the Holy Spirit will do that for us. He calls on every Christian man and woman to prepare the way. He works in us and through us, not only for others, but for ourselves. Your part is self-consecration and continued watchfulness, that your devotement be kept unsullied. "Wherefore I beseech you, by the mercies of God, present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto Him, which is your reasonable service."

LESSON XLIV.—OCTOBER 29, 1876.—PHILIP AND THE ETHIOPIAN

SCRIPTURE—Acts viii: 26-40. Commit 34-39; Primary verse 37.

26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority under Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, who had come to Jerusalem for to worship, 28 Was returning, and, sitting in his chariot, read Esaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place of the Scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth.

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

40. But Philip was found at Azotus; and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cesarea.

It is easy to serve the Lord in great things, but the real test is in serving him in little things. He who, at the bidding of the Spirit, leaves a great work to do a small one, shows his fitness to do the greater. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." God desires humble, not ambitious workers. Matt 25: 21, 22; Mark, 12: 38, 39; Luke 16: 10; 19: 17; John 13: 14-17; 1 Pet. 5: 5.

Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near. Men have no need to be harassed with doubts as to what they should do. God will direct the feet of his saints. They shall hear a word behind them saying: "This is the way, walk ye in it." Ps. 25: 9; 32: 8; 37: 23; Prov. 3: 6 Is. 30: 21; 42: 16; 58: 11: Jer. 10: 23; John 14: 26.

THREE CHEERS FOR WALKER AND KIRKPATRICK!!

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.
2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.
3d Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.
4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.
5th. Civil Rights.
6th. Arbitration better than war.
7th. The Bible in schools.
8th. Monopolies discountenanced.
9th. A return to specie payments
10th. Maintenance of public credit: protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.
11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6 That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Iowa friends will be supplied by writing to the editor of tho Iowa Freeman, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Missouri will be supplied by addressing G. W. Needles, Albany Missouri, editor American Freeman.

Wherever American Party votes are cast, we hope our friends wil insist on their being counted and send us reports for publication.

Indiana State election results in a Democratic victory; Ohio in a Republican.

Shall we not receive an electoral ticket from Minnesota before our next issue?

SEND FOR AMERICAN PARTY TICKETS.

We sent both State and National tickets in time for the State election to every town in Indiana that the Cynosure is mailed to, and we this week are mailing tickets to the different towns in New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Will friends in these States named send contribntions to help bear the expense of printing and mailing these tickets? We send from ten to one hundred tickets to a town, where we have no special order, and it will take 50,000 tickets to supply the States named, and the postage will be about $50. As the tickets are a little different for each electoral district, there will be over 100 different forms of tickets printed at a cost of abont $50. We sent about 6,000 each, (12,000) State and National tickets to Indiana at a cost of $15.00 for tickets and postage, and have received FIFTY CENTS towards meeting this bill. If you want tickets send for them whether you send money or not. We are prepared to furnish tickets for other States not named as ordered. Price by mail; 100 or less, 25 cts.; 200 or more 15 cts per 100.

Samuel D Greene, Chelsea, Mass., although very feeble has secured an electoral ticket for the State of Massachusetts. All whose names are published have formeally accepted their appointments. He subscribes himself:

"Yours in the good cause of reform and for the National Ticket."

ELECTORAL TICKET FOR MASSACHUSETTS.

AT LARGE. Dr Samuel W Abbott, Wakefield.
Moses Morse, Reading.
1 Dist. O Brooks, Harwich.
2 Isaac Stearns, Mansfield.
3 John N Brown, Boston.
4 J as M Currier, Chelsea.
5 Joseph Sweetzer, Malden.
6 J G Smith, Beverly.
7 Daniel F Pratt, Reading.
8 J Leadbetter, Weston.
9 Henry M Tower, Spencer.
10 Nelson Smith, South Hadley.
11 Rev N S Dickenson, South Egremont.

MEN OF PENNSYLVANIA.—Next week we hope to publish a full electoral ticket for our State. As it is now so near the election, let every friend of our cause consider himself appointed to further the election of Walker and Kirkpatrick. To this end, so soon as you see this call please send with the money, to E. A. Cook & Co., for ballots enough to supply your respective neighborhoods (25 cts. per 100). Let us all vote for our principles, and pray that our cause may make sure progress to final victory. Yours,

J. W. RAYNOR, in behalf of Pa. State Association.

P. S. Do not fail to send for tickets.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.—Many of our friends consider this one of the best political documents we have. We shall put it in the Cynosure again next week. Send on orders for extra copies at once or you may be too late. We shall print 2,000 extra copies.

Price by mail three cents each; by express at $2 per 100.

It is lucky that there are different kinds of Masons—brick-masons and stone-masons, as well as Freemasons. We recently asked an influential farmer, while riding over his premises, how politics stood in his parts. Alluding to the candidates for a certain office, he objected to one because he was a "Mason." But remembering that he did not know our opinion of "Masons," he quickly began to file his objections to brick-masons for office. We assured him that we had greater Freemasons as office-holders, when he heartily approved our view.—Telescope.

Mr. Hendricks has always been famous for his fence-sitting powers, and he is receiving due credit for that accomplishment now in Indiana. Gen. Harrison remarked the other day that it used to be said in Washington that the only time a committee of five was known to be equally divided was when Mr. Hendricks was a member of it.—*N. Y. THE VOTER'S DUTY AT THE BALLOT BOX.

BY WM. A. BARTLETT, ELPASO, ILL.

Forward to me a few tickets supporting the candidates of the American Party. What few there are here who will support that ticket will do it irrespective of the consequences that may befall the other parties by their so doing.

We are not frightened much at the cry "If you support the American Party it will draw more largely from the Republican party than from the Democratic, and it would be awful to have the Democrats go into power." If the friends of the Republican party feel truly that such a scourge and curse as this i likely to befall our beloved conntry, it is high time for them to bestir themselves, and to prevent such a catastrophe; to make arrangements to support the platform of the American party, and the candidates nominated to carry out its principles and make a clean sweep of the Democratic party, and have just as good and true and reliable Republicans at the head of government as though their own candidates were elected with an addenda of principles to their own platform that would be an honor to any republic to carry out that was troubled with corruption, secret rings, extra-judicial oaths, and men at her head to control who had taken them.

BROTHER HART'S OPINION.

Father Preston has published his conviction that the real issue in the present presidential election is essentially the same with that of 1864, i. e., whether the slave power, backed by Freemasonry and Copperheadism, shall rule and ruin the nation, or whether the spirit ot justice and liberty shall extinguish the old oppression and preserve and perfect emancipation. In this opinion I am constrained to concur with him. And as it is morally certain that either Hayes or Tilden will be the next president, and that the election of Tilden will be the triumph of Freemasonry, even up to the Ku Klux degrees, and not only that but of slavery, rum, Romanism, ruffianism and ruin, it seems to me that a vote for Hayes and so against Tilden is almost as distinct an expression of true Anti-masonry as a vote for Walker. At any rate if I had a vote (which on account of changing my residence I have not) and were living in a State where the election was likely to be close, I would not dare to withhold it from the Republican nominee. If I lived in a State that was sure to go for either party by an overwhelming majority I would vote the American ticket; because it would not in that case endanger the vital results of that dreadful war of emancipation and would be more generally understood as a solemn protest against secretism. But where the American party hold perhaps the balance of power let them beware that they do not use it directly or indirectly to promote the return of the old Tammany slave-holding Democracy to power; the party which combines every dangerous element of corruption with an effrontery and transparency of hypocrisy seldom equalled and never excelled.

I. A. HART.

CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER CASES.

BY T. C. PATTERSON.

Under certain circumstances we must stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. At other times we are to pass on even through the deep waters. There certainly are grave considerations connected with this matter. First, we are in a certain sense creatures of circumstances, consequently are not always able to do the greatest amount of good. It is then our duty to do some good; the best we can. For illustration: My house is on fire. My first duty is to put out the fire; save my house and all it contains. But if circumstances render it impossible, my next duty is to save my dear wife and children, and much more with them; but if circumstances forbid and they all perish in the merciless flames, my duty then is to bow in humble submission before high Heaven's decree and still adore the God of mysterious providences.

Further; you are doing a great and good work, and no doubt wish you could do more; but you cannot do your work and at the same time do the work of Ronayne. It seems to me your provance is to prepare the minds and hearts of the American people for duty, Yes, drill, discipline a competent army; then come boldly to the battle at the polls, and return with palms of victory and glad songs of triumph. I have faith that this glorious day will come. But not yet; no, not yet.

New York claims 1,000 Anti-masonic voters. In this great State, (Pennsylvania) I am quite sure there are over 100,000 Anti-masons who are ready to vote when they can have any reasonable ground to hope for success.

If we have any hope for our country, politically, it must be in the Republican party. Do you say you have lost all hope or confidence in it? Oh ye of little faith. The Republican party is the head, heart, and arteries (politically) of this nation; pronounced by many religious papers as corrupt and fraudulent, yet the official records show it the purest since the days of Jefferson. They surely have done wonders in the last sixteen years considering the adverse circumstances. Perhaps they have not done all they could or should have done, neither have you or I. No, no. I would take a horse blinded in one eye if proved to be true and good rather than take one blind in both, balkey, and worse than all, a bloody kicker. I would rather risk the welfare of the nation in the hands of loyal Masons than in the hands of rebel cut-throat Masons. What can we expect from politicians reared up under the accursed institution of American slavery, and Freemasonry both? Yours for Hayes and Wheeler for President and Vice-president, and the overthrow of murder, treason and Masonry by the most sure and practicable means.

OUR DUTY AS CHRISTIAN CITIZENS.

BY H. W. HAMPE.

LINESVILLE, Pa.

At the present time it is not only our duty to pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom in the world, but also to vote for Christ's principles in politics. The old cry that religion and politics have nothing to do with each other; that they are not to be mixed together, is false. Politics not founded on the Bible must be full of corruption. The idea that men can be Christians and practice corruption in politics is the bane of our nation. Men who will compromise with error by their votes for the sake of expediency and personal favors do not come up to the requirements of our constitutional laws; much less to the requirements and standard of an enlightened Christian voter. We do not live in a time where Christians are disfranchised by law, as were the primitive Christrians and witnesses for God in the middle ages; but we have an equal and full share by our votes in the affairs of our nation, and if we neglect and refuse to use this our God-given right for truth, purity and honesty in national and local affairs, we are not worthy of the great boon of religious and political freedom that we enjoy. If we neglect to participate in politics because corruption reigns we will, in a great measure, be responsible for its continuance.

The language of some who say they will vote the reform ticket of the American party has the true ring. Remember, my dear Christian voter, you are responsible to God and posterity for your political actions; therefore vote for truth and righteousness and leave the consequences to God, and you will thereby honor and promote the cause of Christ.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

The testimony lately given by Bluford Wilson, ex-Solicitor of the Treasury, contains the fullest statement of the efforts made by the late Secretary of the Treasury, B. H. Bristow, to break up the Whiskey Ring, the most formidable of all. The story as published in the papers is as interesting, and at times as thrilling, as a novel. The extent of the ramifications and influence of the ring was almost incredible. In the boldest manner possible it defrauded the government annually out of millions. Its detection and exposure seemed well nigh impossible. It had its representatives in the Cabinet, among the personal and trusted friends of the President, in the Senate, in the House of Representatives, and scattered throughout the entire country. The very parties who were appointed to take care of the interests of the government were in its pay. The President himself, although no doubt innocent, was used for a time by the ring to thwart every effort to interfere with its operations. Through him the most prominent of all its members escaped conviction, and it seems even now as though he would be persuaded so to abuse the pardoning power as to shorten the term of service to which some who are now in the penitentiary were sentenced.

What effect the revelation of corruption thus far made will have on politics it is difficult to say. It was a Republican protest against Republican misrule that enabled the Democratic party to gain an ascendency in the House of Representatives. There is a determination now in many localities on no condition to vote for a "ring politician." Whether or not this will extend to the Presidential contest, and be so general as to elect the Democratic nominee, the future alone will tell.

In the meantime both parties have held their conventions, adopted their platforms and nominated their candidates. The Republican platform is in some respects the better; still it is easily seen to have been the work of politicians, and made exclusively for political purposes. There is a determination as far as possible to ignore every issue the presentation of which would be likely to lose votes. The Chinese plank is disgraceful, and should be repudiated. Mr. Hayes, the candidate for President, is, outside of his own State, an unknown man. His local reputation is good. His letter of acceptance of the nomination gives deservedly general satisfaction. He will, however, be no ordinary man if he reduce to practice the principles it contains. The control of the Republican party now is entirely in the hands of its worst element. A cabinet officer, a man whose reputation could not be much worse, is managing the campaign. The policy is to make Mr. Hayes, if elected, so much indebted to those at present controlling the party that he will feel it a duty to keep them in power, or to have him so hedged in that to attempt to make any radical change will be to array against him all its active members.

The platform of the Democratic party has but little to recommend it. The Chinese plank is much more objectionable than that of the Republican, bad as it is. Mr. Tilden, the nominee for President, has done good work in New York city and State, in exposing corruption. At the present time the reputation of a reformer counts for much. Thousands of Republicans would vote for him did they believe he would honestly administer the affairs of the government. Unfortunately for Mr. Tilden, his whole public life shows that with him reform is a means and not an end. So long as his political prospects were advanced thereby, so long and no longer is he willing to act in that capacity. No wonder such a reformer is regarded with suspicion. Besides, Mr. Hendricks, the candidate for Vice President, represents the worst element of his party. Loyal people hesitate to give their support to a ticket whose success will elevate to the Vice Presidency a man who never had a word to speak on behalf of the black, who never by word or deed showed any sympathy with the country in the dark days of the rebellion, and whose influence would be entirely hostile to the freedmen of the South. The Hamburg massacre in South Carolina, and the cruelties and indignities daily perpetrated on the blacks in the South, the details of which are given in the papers, awaken grave apprehensions as to the result should the Democratic party triumph next fall. Many a Northern man feels that let suffer who or what may, the only persons that were loyal in the South during the rebellion must not be left uncared for.

The honest voter this fall will find himself in a strange predicament. If he supports Mr. Hayes he will vote for a man whose reputation is good, but who is little known, who belongs to a party once the synonym for purity and progress, but now corrupt from center to circumference, completely controlled by its worst element. For aught to the contrary he knows, he may be helping to continue the present lamentable state of affairs four years longer. If he supports Mr. Tilden, he helps a candidate not wholly himself unobnoxious, but long connected with a party whose history is that of opposition to progress, and whose success would be most hurtful to the freedmen of the South.—*Ref. An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

AND OTHER SECRET SOCIETIES

By REV. J. SARVEN, Pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leechburg, Pa.

This is a very clear argument against Secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship. Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications.

PENNSYLVANIANS TAKE NOTICE!

The Northeast Pennsylvania Christian Association will hold its annual meeting on the 1st and 2d of November next in Fell Hall, Waverly, Luzerne Co., Pa., commencing at 1 o'clock P. M. Competent speakers are provided.

The Executive Committee of the State [Pa.] Association will meet at Waverly at the above noticed meeting and provide for its Annual Convention, this fall. Let the members of the Committee take notice of this fact and act accordingly.

By order of Committee.

Topics of the Time.

The Eastern war rumors flashed like mountain signals last week at news of Russia's declaration of hostilities. But better news next day quieted the fever, leaving only a few stranded business firms whose speculations in grain and stocks dragged anchor in the sudden war blast. Although Turks and Servians, with their twenty thousand Russian allies are desperately fighting, the diplomats of Europe are the arbiters of the struggle. Russia has signified her unwillingness to begin war alone. Her demands of Turkey are the independence of Servia and Montinegro with self-government, both political and administrative. Germany and Austria are believed to agree in this demand. France will remain wholly neutral and England, although last week the reports of her war preparations were ominous, will, on more reflection, keep the peace, while she insists on the validity of former treaties respecting the commerce of the Dardanelles. Turkey, thus left to Russia, will, it is hoped, yield to reasonable demands and close a strife which now seems a needless butchery.

Stranger than fiction are the rumors circulating among those acquainted with diplomatic secrets that the immense Russian army now threatening Armenia is for the durpose of a flank movement on Turkey; the occupation of Palestine and the Mediterranean coast; and the establishment of a Jewish nationality on the old domain of David and Solomon, the expenses being paid by the Jewish bankers of Europe who control the finances of the world, and whose aspirations for the future of their nation would be satisfied by the arrangement. The words of Disraeli, would be wonderfully significant in such changes. Charles Bradlaugh, the infidel, iconoclast and secretist, when in this country a year ago communicated to the N. Y. Graphic and other journals the fact that secret societies were at work fomenting trouble between Russia and Turkey, while Disraeli, the Jewish premier of England, speaks of their intrigues as a fact well known.

The trial of Alexander Sullivan for the murder of Francis Hanford is now proceeding in this city. Without extravagance the conduct of the case on the part of the presiding judge will make it one of the most remarkable of the decade. The social position of the parties concerned and the circumstances connecting the case with the Catholic and public school question would be enough for notoriety; but Judge McAllister, before whom it is being tried, adds yet another feature. In obtaining the jury he overruled decisions of the Supreme Court and enactments of the Legislature, and has in so marked a way decided various points in favor of the prisoner as to draw from the eminent prosecuting counsel expressions of his partisanship in open court, and has aroused the indignation of the public press. There are beside some significant features of this trial, which may be remarked upon after its conclusion.

Another territorial prize is ready to drop into the wide lap of Great Britain. Their inability to cope with the Kaffir tribes has led the Dutch Boers, who formed the little Transvaal Republic in 1848, in South Africa, to open negotiations with the mistress of Cape Colony for annexation to her domain, and England has signified her willingness to meet them half-way, by sending Sir Garnet Wolseley to treat with them. The population of this independency beyond the river Vaal is but 150,000 and their territory is but little larger than the State of Illinois, but is full of fertile valleys. The remaining free State in South Africa, the Orange River Republic, with its 20,000 inhabitants, will probably, ere long, follow into the fold of Britain, and the flag of St. George will wave over all South Africa with its Indian and Atlantic coasts, and northward to Lat. 22° S. This fine territory will be benefited by the new relation which will ensure its development, and will no less be a benefit to all nations.

THE HIGHER LAW.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Wicked men have in all ages framed iniquity by a law, or incorporated it into a covenant, and then claimed that, because of such law or covenant, evil became good and unrighteousness became holy.

Thus the Jews said of Christ: "We have a law and by our law he ought to die." Thus when Herodias' daughter demanded of Herod the head of John the Baptist he was sorry, "nevertheless for his oath's sake and them that were with him he commanded it to be given her." In modern times slaveholders and their sympathizers say, "We have a law, and the slave ought to be delivered into the hands of masters." It is so nominated in the bond, let it be done and the pound of flesh must be taken out from next the living heart, because men have so written and promised. "We have a solemn oath," says the Mason, "and for our oath,s sake we must keep our Masonic covenant."

The law of God requires candor and truthfulness, but the Masonic obligation requires dissimulation and falsehood, for the Mason must pretend that Masonry is a professed secret, that none but the initiated have ever understood. The great mass of the people believe this to be true because Masons pretend that it is, and every adhering Mason is understood as making that pretension. And this pretension he knows to be false. The Masonic minister of the Gospel hears his brother Masons positively affirm that Masonry has never been revealed, and that Morgan, Bernard, Allyn, Finney and others were liars and slanderers, and he silently consents to their malignant falsehood and becomes the passive partaker in their guilt. Herod-like, he does this "for his oath's sake and for them that are with him."

Thus a prominent Masonic minister told me that the Masonic oaths and penalties as given by Morgan were utterly false, and that he did not believe that Mr. Finny ever wrote the book on Freemasonry that bears his name. Poor man, perhaps he forgot that God says, "Lie not one to another;" or perhaps he thought, "I have a Masonic oath, and by that oath I must abide. If it involves lying, I had better lie than to break it."

Another prominent Masonic minister, who professes and preachse holiness, told me that for himself he was like Stephen A. Douglas on slavery, he (the minister) did not care whether they voted Masonry up or voted it down, but that we Anti-masons were "fighting a man of straw." In other words that we know nothing about Masonry and were only contending with an imaginary conception of it. Poor man! he lied thus, for his oath's sake and them that were with him.

Now against all such obedience to wicked law and such adherence to an unholy obligation we present the simple truth of God's word: "We ought to obey God rather than man." The doctrine of the higher law is as old as jurisprudence. Two thousand years ago, Cicero, heathen as he was, said, "Whatsoever is just is always the true law, nor can this law of justice be either originated or abrogated by any written enactment." That the obligation to obey God in all things, is always and everywhere binding on all men any law compact, covenant, or oath, to the contrary nothwithstanding, has been affirmed by every distinguished writer on civil law or moral philosophy, and is most clearly taught in God's word. When therefore seceding Masons have still so much respect for Masonic obligation that they sacrifice candor and Christian simplicity, when they fail to open their mouths for the truth, and allow their silence to be interpreted as assenting to that which is false, they show thereby that they are still in bondage to the lodge, and that for their oath's sake they are willing to disobey God and dishonor his cause. "Come ye out from among them."

HAIL, MASONRY DIVINE!

The words which we have taken for a caption to this article, are the opening line of a hymn, which, according to Webb, is sung at the Masonic "ceremony of installation." By these words it is seen that Masonry claims to be divine; that is, it claims to hold forth to men God's presence on earth. And as if there was to be left no doubt on the pretensions of the "mystic craft," the closing line of the first verse of the hymn, alluding to Masonry, declares point blank—

"Thou art divine!"

Need there be any plainer evidence than this, to show that Masons regard their institution as the manifestation of God to men?

Masonry also claims to be very ancient; and if we go back into ancient history we shall find that it was no uncommon thing for men to claim divinity, either for themselves or for the works of their hands. Even the monster, Nero, whose moral character was as much distorted as some of those irregular roots of trees which the Chinese seem to take a particular pleasure in fashioning into images of the gods, held pretensions to divinity. We read in mythology of one Salmoneus, King of Elis in Greece, who declared himself to be a god, and built a brazen bridge over his city so that the rumbling of his chariot wheels over it might rival the thunder of Jupiter, while his pointing a flaming torch at a man doomed him dead.

St. Augustine, in his confessions, written probably not far from the year 390, speaks of Manichaeus, who "would not have himself meanly thought of, but went about to persuade men that the Holy Ghost, the comforter, and enricher of the faithful, resided with plenary authority personally within him." Manichaeus was doubtless led to this boastfulness by his knowledge of eclipses and the movements of the heavenly bodies, a species of information which a few philosophers of those days, much to the wonder of the masses of the people, understood pretty thoroughly; for eclipses could be calculated at that time as accurately as they can be at the present day. This knowledge was probably derived from the Chaldeans; but Manichaeus himself appears to have been a mere pretender; for St. Augustine says: "When, therefore, he was found out to have taught falsely of the heavens and stars, and of the motions of the sun and moon (although these things pertain not to the doctrine of religion), his sacriligeous presumption became evident enough, seeing he delivered things which not only he knew not, but which were falsified, though his vain-glorious pride was so egregious that he ascribed the movements of these heavenly bodies to himself, as a divine person."

St. Paul, at an earlier period, at a time when the dividing line between paganism and Christianity was being drawn, speaks (2 Thessalonians, 3-4) "of a man of sin, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God."

It is our opinion that St. Paul here alludes to some pompous chief mystagogue of the Eleusinian mysteries, whose seat was at Athens, that center of ancient refinement in art, literature and philosophy, from which the epistles to the Thessalonians were written. It was not simply to a person that St. Paul probably alluded, but to the embodiment of the ideas, so hostile to Christianity, which were involved in those superstitious rites called the mysteries of Eleusis. These mysteries were the national religion of the cunning, subtle Greeks, and well might the apostle term them the "mystery of iniquity," that taught "with all power, and signs, and lying wonders; and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness"; under the name of righteousness practicing fraud and falsehood.

By examining into the pretensions and workings of Freemasonry, that modern mystery of iniquity, we shall find that the words of St. Paul alluded to describe them exactly. The spirit of Freemasonry lays itself as squarely across the path of Christianity, and opposes it as directly as ever did the mysteries of Eleusis. The institution is made up of fraud, imposition, and falsehood; and to call it divine, or to claim that its lying sophistries are righteous, as good as Christianity, and even better, is a mere piece of cynical blasphemy, alike contemptuous of God and man.

It is the belief of us Anti-masons that this modern mystery of iniquity shall be so exposed and revealed that the ordinary run of readers shall see, understand, and detest it, an entangled mesh of falsehoods, which "the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." That is, we believe that the open, manly expression of Christian truth shall ultimately destroy the crafty, wicked arts of Freemasonry. If we did not believe this, we should have no faith in the Christian church, nor in Republican government.

As the only way to destroy foul air and mephitic damps is to let in upon them the light and free airs of heaven, so, the only possible way to destroy Jesuitry in all its forms, whether originating in Paris, Rome, or London, is to let in upon it the divine light from the Savior of mankind, and claim open and fair dealing towards all men.

AMERICAN.

MASONRY WEDDED TO SOLOMON.

ACCORDING TO EMINENT MASONIC AUTHORITY.

ARRANGED BY J. W. RAYNOR.

Mackey's Lexicon, Art. "Dedication, pp 105-6:—Lodges were anciently dedicated to King Solomon, as the founder of ancient craft Masonry, and the first Most Excellent Grand Master. From the building of the first temple at Jerusalem to the Babylonish captivity, Freemasons' lodges were dedicated* to King Solomon; from thence to the coming of the Messiah they were dedicated to Zerubbabel, the builder of the second temple, etc.

Morris' Dict., Art. "Jerusalem," p. 252:—All that is venerable, all that is worth preserving in Masonry dates from Jerusalem, the Golden City, "the city of the Great King."

Mackey's Lexicon, Art. "Jerusalem," p. 228:—Jerusalem, memorable as the scene of many events that are dear† to the Mason's memory. David purchased Mount Moriah from Ornan, the Jebusite, and here Solomon was permitted to build a temple to the Lord. Page 336, Art. "Ornan":—Ornan the Jebusite was the owner of the threshing floor situated on Mount Moriah in the same spot on which the temple was afterwards built. This threshing-floor David bought to erect on it an altar to God (2 Chron. xxi: 18-25). On the same spot Solomon afterward built the temple.

Morris' Dict., Art. "Temple of Solomon," p. 467: In the study of Freemasonry we recur to the temple as the model and original of our society, etc.

Mackey's Lexicon, Art. "Ground Floor of the Temple," pp. 187-8:—Mount Moriah, on which the Temple of Solomon was built, is symbolically called the "ground floor of the lodge," and hence it is said that the lodge rests on‡ holy ground. This ground floor of the lodge is remarkable for three great events recorded in Scripture, and which are called "the three grand offerings of Masonry." To the Mason this sacred spot is sufficiently endeared by the recollection that it was here that after a long night of darkness language was restored and Masonry found.

There should be no table or obstruction of any kind in front of it, only a small pedestal may be set on his right hand to contain the gavel and other official objects. The magnificent throne of King Solomon, of which this is the type, is described in 1 Kings, 10th chapter.

THE CRIME OF ANTI-SECRECY.

The Republican and Democratic papers of Ohio have about all taken the ground that it is a political crime to oppose secret oath-bound societies. The occasion of this general expression was the report that Milton Barnes, Republican candidate for Secretary of State, had signed a petition to the legislature asking that members of such societies might be disqualified as jurors. The Democrats urged the report as a reason why he should not be elected, and the Republicans have vigorously denied the report, admitting that if it is true, Mr. Barnes is a political criminal. Mr. Barnes himself is said to deny it, declaring that he believes in secrecy and belongs to several secret societies. The lodges of Masons, Odd-fellows and others, of Mr. Barnes' town, have come to the rescue, and testify that they know him to be a good man and citizen and above being an anti-secrecy man.

To us it matters little whether this particular individual signed the petition or whether he is a believer in secret orders. It is probable that there is ground for the report that he did sign it, as there is a strong anti-secrecy sentiment in and around the town of Cambridge, where he lives. But whether he is in anti-secrecy man or not, there are thousands of the best citizens of the State who are opposed to oath-bound secrecy in every form. In their interest we desire to inquire how it comes to be a political and social crime to oppose these orders in a legitimate way.

It may be galling to the orders to pass a law disqualifying their members for jury service. But when was the right of petition taken away from any American citizen? This right lies at the basis of our liberties. If a petition is not heard by the law-making body, it is all right. But the right to petition is ever sacred. If secret societies can show that there is no cause for such a petition as many citizens of Ohio have signed, let them first show the folly of it before Masonic editors of political papers all over the State use the following language about a man who is reported to have signed it. The Coshocton Democrat says of Mr. Barnes: "He has probably disqualified himself as an office holder." The Zanesville Times, a Republican paper, says that the object of the report is "to drive Republican Masons from the support of Mr. Barnes." He adds:

"Mr. Barnes would certainly be unfitted for any office in the gift of the people, were the charges true, Unworthy, because the simple fact would point him out as narrow-minded, illiberal, fanatical, and ignorant, and the people do not desire that class of men for officers."

The Ohio State Journal, another Republican paper, says:

"If he signed such a petition, it can easily be proved, and if proved, we venture to say there is not a Republican newspaper in Ohio that would not drop him as unworthy of association with gentlemen. Meantime, in view of his explicit denial, no gentleman will repeat the charge against him, without having it in his power to prove that the charge is true. It is disgraceful to the profession of journalism to hold that the editor may do that which would put any gentleman under ban, and exclude him from the society of all honorable men."

These specimens of the views of the moulders of public sentiment, are sufficient. Many more might be given. What is said of this man, charged with signing the petition, is said of every one who actually did sign it. Is it indeed true that signing a petition against secret orders will disqualify a man from holding office, put him under ban, point him out as a narrow-minded, fanatical, and ignorant, and other like things? Do not these expressions show that secret societies deny to Americans the right of petition?

If Masonic editors are justifiable in saying such things, when has it been shown that secret societies are not now the same as they were fifty years ago when State legislatures did disqualify the members of these orders as jurors, and appointed committees to investigate the nature of the oaths of such societies? If they are better now than then, we all would be glad to know it, for then —1828—the legislature of New York appointed John Quincy Adams and other distinguished men to inquire into the nature of Masonic oaths, and Mr. Adams reported to the legislature in words like the following;

"The trials of the Masonic outrages in the State of New York have exhibited other expositions of Masonic law. Masonic jurors have been packed by Masonic sheriffs, for the express purpose not only of screening the guilty from punishment, but of falsifying the facts by presentments, and verdicts known to themselves to be untrue. Masonic witnesses have refused to testify, and suffered imprisonment rather than disclose the facts known to them, even when they did not criminate themselves. Nor was this all. When conscience, bursting the bands of Masonry, has constrained Masonic witnesses to testify to crimes in which they themselves shared, and to the secrets of the craft, solitary Masonic jurors have refused their assent to verdicts upon which all their fellows were agreed, on the avowed resolution that they would not believe any testimony of a seceding Mason."

The views of Mr. Adams against Masonry, given in letters and addresses, fill a good-sized volume. Fifty years ago Masonic editors did not have the audacity to say that it put men under "ban" and disqualified them for holding office if they opposed secret societies; for then secrecy was under ban, and justly, on account of the terrible disclosures that were made against it. But look what a change has taken place! Now these orders make the masses believe that it is narrow-minded, fanatical, ungentlemanly, and criminal for a man to oppose them in a way guarantied by our free government. The members of these orders now feel that they are doing a noble act by coming before the public and signing a paper rescuing a man from the charge of being opposed to the orders! The exclamation of Cicero is in place, "Oh, the times! oh, the morals!" and his question, "In what country do we live?"

But there is one political paper, more influential than all the others we have quoted which says of the case before us:

"Nor would the charge, if true, (whereas it is false,) be any cause for the political action of the Freemasons; for Americans have as much right to be opposed to secret societies as to belong to them."

By this expression the Cincinnati Gazette shows itself far broader and more Republican than the inferior political lodge organs which propose to put men under the "ban," and call them "fanatical" and "ignorant" for exercising the American right of opposing secret societies as well as any other thing.

We can console ourselves with the belief that the two great political parties will let their mutual jealousies prove the extinction of secret societies, as they did that of slavery. We see in Ohio more real bitterness between Democratic and Republican secretists over the record of Mr. Barnes than over any other question. Notice the following from the editor of a Republican paper who replied to the editor of a Democratic paper, with the remark in italics. "We say this as a Mason to a Mason." He says:

"We have seen the charge in Democratic papers, the editors of which we know to be Masons. To such let us say, fraternally, You are outraging Masonry. You are attempting to make your order a cat's-paw for politicians. You know this is not in accordance with the teachings of the order. Masonry stands aloof from the political world, and asks no man's politics. In our political relations we never stop to inquire if the candidate is a Mason. Standing on the fraternal floor of the order we forget politics. Masonry demands of us that we keep from her door the partisan squabbles that make up the life of a politician."

If it is true that Masons never stop to inquire whether the candidate is a Mason, why was there such excitement over the record of Mr. Barnes? The very effort to keep this matter out of politics is sure to bring it in. Anti-secrecy men can well afford to endure the stigma of their position while they see the great political parties hastening on to fight between themselves the battle over secrecy, as it was in the case of slavery. A few more petitions to Congress and the State legislatures will suffice to set Republican and Democratic secretists by the ears in so bitter strife as to cause the orders to dissolve swiftly.—Prof. W. O. Tobey in Religious Telescope.

Secularism, its Character and Tendencies.

BY REV. W. H. BREWSTER.

Under the name of Secularism a movement is going on in this country and in Europe that cannot be wisely ignored. The name has attractive qualities both for what it suggests to the thinking and what it conceals from the thoughtless.

But what is secularism as the term is now applied and employed? What does it cover and what does it reveal? What is the nature, tendency, and underlying philosophy of the movement it designates? Who and what are secularists? their views, modes and aims?

Secular is defined as "worldly, not heavenly nor spiritual," pertaining to the body and not to the soul." Worldly or worldism probably expresses its meaning more fully than any other term we can use.

Secularism is that movement which seeks as its ultimate aim to divorce the state in all its institutions, government in all its departments, from religion. In no way is the state to recognize even the existence of God, and much less his government over men and nations. The Bible and all recognition of God is to be banished from the common schools. No oath of office is to be allowed or required from the President down; no judicial oaths in courts of justice. No chaplains are to be allowed in our legislative bodies, in the army or navy, in prisons or hospitals controlled by the State. It is not a separation between the church and the state these leaders of the movement demand—certainly in this country, for there is here no connection existing and none desired by any Protestant church in the land. But it is a complete and absolute separation of religion and the state.

The state is in no way to recognize the existence of a God in any of her institutions, but is in all of them to be absolutely Godless. I am not speaking of individuals, but of the state as an organic body! This is certainly the aim set forth by Mr. Abbott, a leader, perhaps the leader of the movement in the United States. Thus it will be seen, I think, that "secularism" is but a new name for an old system.

It is a characteristic of truth in its conflicts with error to be open, frank, asking only a clear field and fair play. It never skulks or seeks concealment. It wears no mask and assumes no name to conceal its real character. Error carries on its warfare under false assumptions and deceptive names. The old names of infidelity, Atheism, Deism, are unpopular and hence the new name "Secularism." It looks like a lamb but speaks like a dragon. The tendency, whatever the design is to make the state atheistic, and the people will then soon become so.

It is hardly necessary to state and wholly unnecessary to argue that such views are an utter repudiation and abandonment of the views and principles of the Father and founders of our Republic and its institutions. The first settlers of this country, especially in New England, the birthplace of free and republican institutions, were profoundly religious. Religion, the church of Christ, was first and uppermost in their thoughts and purposes. They left pleasant homes, the society of cultured friends, the endearments of social life, for a life in a bleak wilderness, among savages, exposed to death from the tomahawk and scalping-knife, fatigue, hunger and cold, that they might find

"Freedom to worship God."

They believed what all history and experience proves; that the Christian religion is the basis of morality and morality of national prosperity. Religion must regenerate and purify the state and the state recognize and encourage, without seeking to control religious faith and forms of worship. Government existed quite as truly to secure in the state education, morality and religion, as national and financial prosperity.

The venerable Higginson, in an election sermon, in 1663, said:

"It concerneth New England always to remember that they are, originally a plantation religious, not a plantation for trade. And if any man among us make religion twelve, and trade thirteen, such an one hath not the spirit of a true New England man."

Rev. Increase Mather, in 1677, said: "It was the love of God that brought our fathers to this wilderness." Rev. Wm. Hubbard in 1682, declared that "The fathers came not hither for this world, for land or for trade, but for religion, and for liberty of conscience to worship God." President Styles, of Yale College, stated in 1783, that "It is certain that civil dominion was but a secondary motive, religion was the primary one with our ancestors in coming hither and settling these lands." "It was not so much their design," says Thornton, "to establish religion for the benefit of the state, as civil government for the benefit of religion."

And that statesman of noble renown, John Quincy Adams, said that: "The highest glory of the American revolution was this: It connected in one indissoluble bond, the principles of civil government, with the principles of Christianity."

That their views and legislations were sometimes extreme, we admit, but their zeal and extremes in the service of religion were not so extreme as this in the service of atheism, nor so hurtful as positive indifference. What if a young dandy under 21 years was not allowed to use tobacco? What though profanity, bathing or hunting on the Sabbath were forbidden by law? What valuable right was abridged? What valuable privilege denied? Was either the state or the individual harmed? Such legislation is doubtless unwise, and a law compelling attendance upon public worship more so; but I have often felt, amid a fog of tobacco smoke from mouths healthy and diseased, cleanly and filthy, when obliged to sit astride a small lake of saliva, to invoke Puritanic legislation.

How would a proposition to thus secularize the state, thus to ignore all dependence upon, or allegiance to God have shocked, not the clergy of that age, but such statesmen as John Adams, John Jay, George Washington, even Benjamin Franklin! Would he not have protested against unchaining the tiger, for if men are so bad with religion what will they be without it?

How Franklin viewed this whole matter is shown in the following incident:

The convention that framed and adopted the constitution met in Philade phia, May 14, 1787. The session continued four months, the discussions were heated. So adverse were the opinions that it was feared the convention would break up, leaving its work unfinished. It was then that Franklin, now eighty years old, his locks white like his unstained reputation, full of days and wisdom and honor, rose and proposed to employ a chaplain. He said: "I have lived a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it possible that an empire can rise without his aid?"

Shade of the mighty dead! In this same city, on this Centennial year a convention has been held, the aim of which was to bring the state to repudiate this speech and these sentiments of Franklin; to dispense with chaplains, oaths, judicial and official, and the appointment by the state, through its officers, of days of prayer or thanksgiving! Whatever the danger, the distress, the emergency, neither the President nor the governor of any State may by proclamation call on the people to assemble for prayer. No matter what the joy or deliverance, there are to be no more days of thanksgiving and praise!

Such is secularism in its native hideousness.

John Adams thus describes the first prayer in the first Congress in 1774:

"It was proposed to employ a chaplain. Some objected lest denominational preferences should be offended. John Adams, a plain Puritan, said: 'I will willingly join in prayer with any gentleman of piety and virtue, whatever his cloth, provided he is a friend of his country.' On his motion Rev. Mr. Duche, a popular Episcopal clergyman, was invited to officiate. The chaplain read the 35th psalm, and, carried by his emotions, burst forth in an extempore prayer to the Lord of Hosts to be their helper. John Adams writing to his wife said: 'It seemed as if Heaven had ordained that psalm to be read that morning. He prayed in language eloquent and sublime for America, for Congress, for the province of Massachusetts Bay, and especially for the town of Boston. It has had an excellent effect upon everybody.'"

But if secularists ever succeed there will be no more of such nonsense and the pictures of this scene which adorn so many parlor walls will be taken down. Such is secularism stripped and bare.

I go even further and affirm that no government exists now, or ever has existed among civilized men, wholly divorced from religious faith, and none can exist. As well expect a plant to grow without soil. I ought perhaps to admit one exception—the brief, memorable experiment of French atheists; an experiment infidels are not anxious to cite, nor we unwilling they should. Governments cannot exist; law cannot sustain its supremacy over selfishness and passion; justice cannot be administered nor maintained; property and life cannot be made safe in a state refusing to recognize a Divine Sovereign. Channing has said as truthfully as beautifully:

"Few men suspect, perhaps no man comprehends, the extent of the support given by religion to the virtues of ordinary life. No man perhaps is aware how much our moral and social sentiments are fed from this fountain; how powerless conscience would be without a belief of a God; how palsied would be human benevolence, were there not a sense of a higher benevolence to quicken and sustain it! How suddenly the whole social fabric would quake, and with what a fearful crash it would sink into hopeless ruins, were the ideas of a Supreme Being, of accountableness and of a future life to be utterly erased from every mind!

"Once let men thoroughly believe that they are the work and sport of chance, that no superior intelligence concerns itself with human affairs; that all their improvements perish forever at death; that the weak have no guidance and the injured no avenger; that there is no recompense for sacrifices to uprightness and the public good; that an oath is unheard in heaven; that secret crimes have no witness but the perpetrator; that human existence has no purpose, and human virtue no unfailing friend; that this brief life is everything to us, and death is total, everlasting extinction; once let men thoroughly abandon religion and who can conceive or describe the extent of the desolation which would follow."—Channing's Works, p. 529.

Justice would be prostituted, liberty overborne by anarchy; chastity would cease to be thought of as a virtue, nor impurity be held as a vice if sufficiently concealed not to offend decency. Churches would give place to saloons and gambling houses. The Sabbath as a day of rest and religious instruction cease; virtue perish and society dissolve and governments in the hands of a few become an instrument of oppression of the many.

If it be said many infidels are high-minded and truthful, I admit it, but claim that it is because they have not outgrown a mother's lessons and prayers. But while I admit this, I deny that a community of infidels can be found who are honest and high-minded. If it be said, while the Quakers do not take oaths they are proverbially truthful, I answer:

1. Their affirmation amounts to an oath.

2. They do not refuse to swear through an unwillingness to acknowledge God, but because their reverence for him and his word will not allow them to use our form of oath; because the Bible says "Swear not at all:" which they understand to forbid judicial and official oaths as well as self-imposed, thoughtless and profane oaths.

Thus to secularise the nation, all state and national institutions, not only shuts all reformatory influences from our prisons, but commits all our schools and institutions of learning to infidelity and atheism. Not to cultivate a field is to surrender it to weeds and thistles. Systematically to shut all recognition of God and religion and Bible truth from the schools is to deny that there is any God whose favor is life, for no man is stupid enough if he believes in a God who rewards virtue and punishes vice, a God of nations, to advocate such a course. Those who oppose any recognition of God by the nation do not themselves believe in a God, i. e., they are atheists, and wish to make the nation atheistic, and they adopt this course to accomplish it because it is popular. Error, true to its instincts, fights under a false name and false colors. A pirate-ship and crew never sail under a pirate flag; they hoist it only when about to murder and rob a merchant vessel and crew.

WLy not recognize tbe God of nations? Because that perpetuates faith in such a God! And it follows to refuse to acknowledge him destroys such faith, i. e., teaches and leads to atheism, and for no other reason do the leaders advocate it.

But we cannot stop here. If the Bible must not be read because it declares that "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," and made "man in his own image," then no readers must be used teaching similar doctrines. But instead of these we are to have school books teaching "evolution," "development," that "matter and force are eternal, and out of these have been developed all organisms and intelligence," or mind. In other words there is no such thing as an eternal mind or intelligence, but that mind is a development of intelligent matter. Darwin says, a single instance of design, if anything was made for and with a purpose—and his theory is at an end. What is that but denying that infinite intelligigence contrived the universe? Now one theory or the other will pervade our schools and nation; if God and his word are banished, "evolution" and development are enthroned, i.e., atheism becomes our national creed.

Secularism is the child of "evolution," or "Darwinism," holding the faith and doing the deeds of the father. Infidels in Europe, carried away with the publication of Darwin's theory, declare that they already see the end. "God is dead, or if not he is dying!!" At a Sabbath gathering of German secularists in Chicago, a speaker said: "We intend to leave the infernal regions to the devil, if there be any devil; and heaven to God if there be any God, and for ourselves use and enjoy this life and this world."

I may apply to secularism the language of Mr. Burr and Hugh Miller to evolution, for are they not father and son? Says Mr. Burr, "Let men say what they will, evolution, [secularism] means materialism; and so denies to man moral character, responsibility, personal immortality, and so denies the chief use of having a God." Hugh Miller says: "And thus, though the development theory [secularism, for is it not the child of evolution] be not atheistic, it is at least tantamount to atheism. For if man be a dying creature, restricted in his existence, to the present scene of things, what does it really matter to him for any one moral purpose, whether there be a God or no? If in reality on the same religious level with the dog, wolf and fox, that are by nature atheists—a nature most properly coupled with irresponsibility—to what practical purpose should he know or believe in a God whom he, as well as they, is never to meet as his judge; or why should he square his conduct by the requirements of a moral code further than a low and convenient expediency may chance to demand."—Pater Mundi, pp. 12, 13.

Now to secularize the nation is to banish the high moral sentiments of the New Testament for this code of selfish expediency; is to banish all sense of obligation to God; all fear or hope reaching beyond the death-bed from the minds of men. Are we ready for such a transition?

Reform News.

The Fourth State Convention of Wisconsin.

The Christian Association of Wisconsin held its annual convention at Delavan, Oct. 11th to 13th, as noticed in Cynosure, with a very good attendance considering the season of the year in which it was held. A deep religious feeling was manifested from the first, each session commenced with a half hour devoted to prayer and conference. Jesus met with and strengthened his people; members went to their homes stronger than when they came; the promise where two, or three, are met in my name there am I in the midst, was faithfully kept by the Master.

Bro. Hinman was with us and added much to the interest of the occasion. This good brother may not live to see our country freed from secret clans, and dens of darkness and corruption, but some of us may take the news to him in glory, and cheer his heart even there. Rev. J. P. Stoddard was with us, with that quiet trust in Christ which raises its possessor above the din of the conflict, in which the Christian warrior is engaged. Struggling for the mastery over wrong, and for the dispelling of darkness of sin, to that condition of being spoken of by our Saviour, when he said, "In me ye have peace;" that sweet rest in Jesus which belongs to the believer. Past Master E. Ronayne also was present, and worked the first three degrees of Masonry. This man of intellectual might, of historical research, consecrates himself to the work of religious reform, and in the name of Jerus dares to "beard the lion in his den," dares to tear the cloak of false pretensions from the institution of Masonry that its horrid pagan worship may appear; thunderbolt after thunderbolt hurled from his heaven-strengthened hand, pierces the old harlot as she sits on her throne of carnal security, realizing the falsity of her claims to charity and ancient greatness; for thus seeking to enlighten his fellow-beings he was egged and clubbed. Well might our convention pass the following resolution:

Resolved, that we have witnessed the exposition of the degrees of Masonry by E. Ronayne with satisfaction, and do heartily commend him to all who wish to obtain a perfect knowledge of this fraternity.

A seceding Mason was on the stage with Ronayne each evening and said that Ronayne worked the degrees as he took them.

The following was adopted:

WHEREAS, the family. the church and the state are divinely appointed for the good of mankind, and

WHEREAS, secret organizations are calculated to separate, supplant, and destroy each of these institutions; and

WHEREAS, their extensive prevalence and controlling power over the pulpit and the press is a just cause of alarm; therefore

Resolved, that we deem it the duty of all good citizens to steadfastly resist and oppose all systems of organized secrecy, and especially to labor for their exclusion from the Christian church.

Resolved, that we need a political reformation which shall bind men to justice and equality with each other, and prohibit all systems of favoritism, and all secret combinations of partiality, and such reformation is not to be expected from either of the great political parties.

Resolved, that in opposing organized secretism our reliance is on God and his word; and in the prosecution of this work in its social, political, and religious aspects, our motto shall be to do our duty and leave the result to him.

Resolved, that to support periodicals, either secular or religious, that support secretism either by active cooperation, or determined silence, is to support the system of secretism itself, and that it is a glaring inconsistency to speak against secret societies and at the same time support them with our money.

Resolved, that we approve of the course of the Christian Cynosure, and while we rejoice in its many and evident improvements we will exert ourselves to extend its circulation, and thereby aid in sustaining and extending its influence.

The Association chose officers for the coming year as follows: for President, E. L. Harris, Delavan; for Vice-Presidents, M. R. Britton, of Vienna, T. Davis of Sugar Creek, W. Hamlyn of West Bend. G. N. Willis of Clinton Junction, and Bro. Chittenden; for See'y., U. D. Lathrop, Sugar Creek; for Treasurer, J. Parish, Delavan. State Ageney left with official board. The commitee on finance are Russel Wait, M. R. Britton, Thomas Davis, A. C. Jennings, and H. Clark.

Dear brethren, will you as soon as possible see what can be raised in your respective neighborhoods to support a lecturer the coming year or a part thereof. A good man can be had it the means are forthcoming. Report amounts pledged, and send monies raised to J. Parish, Delavan. If we love our political and religious liberties as we ought, can we not sacrifice a little that we may help to turn back the dark death-wave that is sweeping on and over us? Let us in the name of Jesus do what we can now, while we have an opportunity, for "the night of death cometh when no man can work."

THE IOWA CAMPAIGN.—ALBION.

MARSHALLTOWN Iowa, }
Oct. 14, 1876. }

As no one from our community has reported our meetings in this county, I will very briefly give you an account of them.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard and E. Ronayne came to Albion on the 13th inst., and they each gave short lectures that evening in the Presbyterian church. Monday evening Mr. R. assisted by Mr. Stoddard and others, worked the first degree in the Seminary hall to the edification of a crowded house. Many of the fraternity were present, but kept their jewel, although the opportunity was given to defend themselves. Order pretty good considering the crowded state of the hall.

Tuesday evening he worked the third degree and killed Hiram and raised him from the dead in good Masonic style. He had for his candidate Rev. John Nickleson, D. D. He showed us that Masonry was a science. He taught the Rev. gentleman how to step first with the left foot, and showed how much better he could preach next Sabbath morning by learning this scientific truth. He pointed out many other important scientific truths that the candidate learns, which proves clearly to the audience its scientific claims, such as the candidate sees when the hood-wink is taken off in the first degree that both points of the compass are under the square, or in the second degree that one point of the compass is elevated above the square, &c. Oh! how they might sing

"Hail mysterious, glorious science,
Which to discord bids defiance
Harmony alone reigns here."

But strange to say the Masons say it is all lies. Well, Mr. Ronayne is a host in himself and no one knows any better than the fraternities how much harm he is doing them.

We met at Albion one week ago last night and organized a County Association auxilary to the State Association, and I understand the Masons have resolved to have nothing to do with any of us. But this is a weapon that will cut both ways, so they had better handle it carefully. Mr. Ronayne went from here to Bangor and worked one or two degrees there. Bro. Stoddard in the meantime was lecturing at different points, Bangor, Liscomb, State Centre, Hartland, Marshalltown, Le Grand and other points; and making good impressions and doing noble service to the cause wherever he went. The fraternity undertook to close the doors on him at Liscomb, but free speech triumphed and he administered a portion of his soothing balm to the hoodwinked brethren, which had the usual affect.

One thing more I wish to say before closing. From our experience here I think it decidedly better that Bro. Stoddard or some other good lecturer should go before Mr. Ronayne and give the people a little milk, so to speak, before you give them strong meat. The appearance of a man in Masonic habiliments is a little too strong a dose for a promiscuous assembly unprepared.

May the Lord bless those brethren in their labors. J. MCCLEERY.

FOOTFALLS AMONG THE WOLVERINES.

DEAR K:—My last left me in Lee's Corners with the elements in a ferment. When I entered upon my work there was scarce a square inch of standing place in the house, save on the teacher's platform where I stood. Tolerable order was maintained until I closed, when, after giving my usual challenge, a Mason and master of a grange sprang to his feet as a defender of the much abused "Old Handmaid." This champion of the idolators is known among the crafts as a "Little Jake!" and being gifted with any amount of confidence, opened his batteries on me, by calling me "a liar," for saying the name of Christ could not be found in the Blue Lodge ritual, and in the popular manuals of the day. He was going to prove his statement by the "documents," and suiting the action to the word he drew from his pocket a pamphlet, which he informed us was "The by-laws of Saginaw Valley Lodge," if I remember rightly. He then read from it a prayer, or part of a prayer, in which occurred the phrase: "Lion of the tribe of Judah!" and then turning to me with a most portentious frown upon his brow, inquired in thunder tones, "Who is the Lion of the tribe of Judah? Don't every one who knows anything, know that it means Jesus Christ?" "Little Jake" kept his eyes on me the while, as if expecting me to vanish, completely annihilated, from his sight, his crushing look gradually changing to one of pity for my expected discomfiture, and then to one of unmitigated surprise, as he saw me unbleeding, and unhurt, and smiling in his face. He was evidently puzzled. For some reason, past his understanding, this shot had failed to take effect. This was evidently his biggest gun. He had fired it, and the shot had somehow gone wide of its mark. He had no more ammunition—he must try something else. He was too much a soldier to give way at the first failure, and so he began to read about the Knight Templars, showing that they regarded Christ! Here I mildly suggested that I had already said in my lecture, that Templar Masonry did recognize a Christ and informed him that what he was reading had no bearing on Blue Lodge or Chaptoral Masonry, to which my remarks had been confined. This nettled him, and turning round, he said sharply, "You think you know more about Masonry than I do, don't ye?" To which I replied, quietly, "Perhaps you'll think so, too, before we get through;" or words to that effect. My coolness was having its effect on "Little Jake," as well as on his backers. But he tried to go on showing Christ and the cross in a species of Masonry, where I had already admitted it to be, as though that would prove it to be where I had said it could not be found. He came to the Latin motto on the banner of the Templars, and after two or three vain attempts to read it intelligibly I pronounced it for him "In hic signo vinces." The audience laughed. He then attempted to give us the English of the words, but from nervousness or some other cause, he failed to find it. After waiting a suitable time, I gave the translation, and urged him on. He then proposed to give us a history of the sign and motto, and here again he failed to have his tools where he could lay his eyes on them, and so I came a third time to his relief; for which my sole reward, save the conciousness of having assisted a fellow-creature in distress, was the bitter cry from the lips of Little Jake: "I suppose the gentleman wants to show his learning!" "O no!" I said, "I only did it to help a friend out of trouble." This was the one straw too much! It broke that camel's back, at least so far as the anti-secret portion of the audience was concerned. Very little more was said on this head, but our orator waxed eloquent our the wrongs of the farmers, and made a touching plea for the grange, with its three heathen goddesses—the chaste Flora at their head. When he had finished speaking his piece, he sat down mid the applause of his satellites. I then made short work with the Masonic guile in using, as it does, the words: "Lion of the tribe of Judah," in their petitions. The phrase, so far as I have examined, is not found in the prayers of the standard rituals, or manuals, so far as the Blue Lodge is concerned. Christians, as Christians, do indeed apply it to the Christ, but Masons as Masons do not. To insist upon such an interpretation, would drive every Jew from the craft. The Jew may believe in the Lion of the tribe of Judah, but he does not believe that Jesus of Nazareth is meant. I venture the assertion that no Grand Lodge in existence would grant a charter to any lodge with the distinct understanding that no man was to be admitted to membership who would not in the phrase above, acknowledge Jesus Christ. Such an act would destroy Masonry, and every intelligent Mason knows it. The use of those words in a Masonic prayer is a drop of "poverty sop" thrown to the Christian whale, found swimming in the foul waters of secretism, for the purpose of tolling them along, until the maelstrom current of false worship shall o'erwhelm them forever. It is an impious, infidel fraud, worthy of its parentage.

When I had closed, one of the grangers, who had expected to see me show the "white feather," cried out: "Mr. Barlow, are you not afraid?" To which I replied: "Not much, though I understand you have made threats to-day, that you would put a bullet through me. It is not easy to frighten a man who is not afraid to die, and by the grace of God I am not." Soon after this, an attempt was made to rush the crowd against, and overthrow me where I stood, which resulted in a failure. I was surrounded by too many who were disgusted with the developments of the spirit of organized secrecy. The maddened crowd after a while dispersed, and we were left in peace to start for home, not far from midnight, fully convinced that in that community the craft had been hoisted with their own petard. Correspondence.

Our Centennial Letter.

Philadelphia, Oct, 11, 1876.

The usual variety of character has presented itself since my last. The friends and foes have been quite pronounced, and there have been some sincere and intelligent enquirers verily desirous to look into this question of such rising importance.

One of the minor incidents of a pleasing character was that of a young man of about twenty-five years, who stood beside me on the street car one evening, an Odd-fellow, rough in his way; he was no Christian, he said, and as I said I knew from his language, but he did believe it was right to be one, and he wished he was. He was zealous and sincere in defense of his order, and was aided by a Mason beside us. He came Monday evening to your stand with a different aspect, got printed matter, and I have hopes that he will be useful in his sphere.

A teacher in Wannamaker's big Sunday school is not a Mason, but a Pythian, He got some matches to light his lamp. A Rev. clergyman from Ohio desired his son to call to see your establishment here. The young man is a bright sample of those in whom we may hope to find the future successful workers in this cause.

We were agreeably surprised and pleased by another visit from father Preston with whom we lunched. He has great vigor for his age, and since I saw him he had gone up the stairs to the top of the Capitol at Wasington, where he wrote a love letter to his wife! Pretty well for a youth of four score and four years! He left his blessing as we parted.

A Rev. M. E. indulged in the usual smart things of Masonic logic which it is unnecessary to report. I may merely say that when he boasted of an open Bible on every Masonic altar: "Yes," was the response, "you alter it. But you would use the Koran as the emblem in a Mohammedan country, for it is only an emblem like the compass and square."

It ought to be understood by your readers that the Bible is not to the Mason a "Divine Revelation," as that expression is understood by Christendom.

Another of some church took a different stand and is with us; and we had good cheer also from Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks of Chicago.

I heard an excellent address lately from Rev. McAllister, co-editor of the Christian Stateman, which was fraught with soundest Christian principles, enthroning Christ as Lord and Savior. Error may surge against the Rock of Truth, but He who is the Truth itself must finally prevail over all error, and then as now the only true universal bond of brotherhood shall be found in Christ as the head and life of his people. A Mason who I found had been an abolitionist used the "good men in it" fallacy, which was turned on himself in its application to slavery. It was amusing to see how he wiggled.

Several gentlemen from Allegheny Seminary who are with us took tracts, also a Rev. Methodist from Canada. Another Rev. gentleman got a Cynosure and thought it pro-Masonic, but when he found it anti said then, "Sir, I leave it with you," and off he went.

One evening I went to meet a Mason who had expressed a desire to know our views. It is not a religion he said, and in solemn language denied before some of his family that it swore its applicants for membership to conceal what they were to be told. The Grand Lodge stood towards the lodge as the Synod to Presbyterian churches. Mackey had no authority. The Grand Lodge had. I suggested the likeness it had to the Pope and Council who were the interpreters of Scripture, but would not allow their followers to follow their own reading. It was a strange doctrine apparently to him, that Christ only should be referred to as the master for every Christian, and that his followers may have various opinions about many things if they are united in the one faith, in the one Lord.

Rev. Mr. Stone, now of N. H., told of his acquaintance with Prof. Blanchard.

A member of one of the largest book auction establishments in N. Y. expressed himself in unison with our views.

A pleasant visit from our worthy friends W. R. Morley and lady of Fayette Co. Iowa, was a good offset to a Rev. Freewill Baptist, who began as an enquirer and ended as a defender of the Masonic religion.

Another Baptist had been at College under Colver, so I spoke as if he was of course a friend. Showed him the Lev. v. 4-5. He grinned and said he intended to join the lodge in two years if would they take him in! Then said I, you will violate the divine law at the first step.

I spied one who looked like an old friend on the sidewalk near the Centennial, and "went for him" to find if it was even so; we walked for half an hour through the Main Building, and when he saw the Cynosure he subscribed at once.

A call from a Frenchman, who joined the Masons, but did not like it when he got in, and with the usual mode of French dislike, shrugged his shoulders expressively. He had been told it was all exposed, and when he saw the engravings he again shrugged his shoulders and laughed; very much pleased to get the illustrations. He would write against it too. I am sorry I didn't get his name.

Oct. 16th.—I have given up all hope of getting permission to sell books, though things are sold at a hundred places in this building and it is too bad to be obliged to refuse books to those who are ready to pay for them, especially as many of those who are most anxious to get them are from distant parts of our own land or other lands where these books cannot be bought.

I have given away more than the $10 donation I received would pay for, hoping that donations might be sent to the Cynosure office to pay for them, especially as you offer them at the hundred rates and there probably will never be as good an opportunity to make our Anti-masonic literature servicable as that here offered. The tracts will do a mighty work in the way of opening the eyes of many of those who have never heard of our reform, but there are cases where a copy of Finney or the Hand Book or one of the many excellent published sermons would be of untold value to an intelligent Christian man.

Surely the friends of this cause only need to know the state of the case and some of the Lord's money will be sent to you to pay for these books. Believing this must be the case I shall continue to give away books in extreme cases where I see a chance of saving a young man from the lodge or reasonable hope of getting a candid Mason out of it, by giving awa, a book or two.

The big trunk full of tracts is getting low and I hope more are on the way [another lot were sent the 17th.]

The weather is getting cooler and the crowd increases daily.

Thos. Hodge.

The Guilt Edge of Freemasonry Fifty Years Ago.

The practical workings of the fraternity contrasted with their boasted charity may be seen in the following anonymous letter to Solomon Southwick soon after Morgan's exposure:

"You d——d old miscreant, is this the way you mean to run down one of the most heaven-born institutions ever known among men? You are notified that we have horses here as well as in Canandaigua, and carriages too; grey horses, if you please; and the distance from here to Niagara is not so great but you may take a ride. Now, sir; if you do not recant, haul in your horns and walk more circumspectly, we swear by the twelve apostles you shall be taken care of, let the conseqences be what they may." R. E. B.

Lodge Work not in the Ritual.

Yates City, Ill.

Editor Cynosure:—In my last letter I gave you the legal definition of the crime of perjury, and asked if Worthy Masters had authority to administer cut-throat oaths. Now in connection with this subject, and as illustrating how the lodge flourishes under the free ventilation system, I desire to say that Yates City lodge has initiated but one candidate for the last two years, and he has certified that he became a Mason for the sole purpose of ascertaining beyond all doubt as to whether Masons really took such obligations (or cut-throat oaths) as they were accused of taking. He has also certified that he is perfectly satisfied on that point, and does not propose to go any farther in Masonry. He has been an Entered Apprentice since early in the spring, and stubbornly refuses to go any farther.

I have reason to believe that there is a sad want of harmony in Yates City lodge; in fact that there are a great many of the members who do not cheerfully submit to the will and pleasure of the Worthy Master, and some of them are not on speaking terms with him. In fact one of them, Mr. Isaac Lambert, of the firm of Taylor & Lambert, bankers, has been lately suspended for contempt in refusing to obey a summons. It appears that Mr. Lambert has not been on good terms with his Master for several years, and although he has kept his dues paid up he let the lodge alone. There was a difficulty between two of the brethren, and a Masonic trial was had, in which trial Mr. Lambert was a witness. He informed the brethren that he had no objection to give his testimony to a committee, but would not set foot in the lodge while Dr. Hensley was Worthy Master. Thus the Dr. has got rid of one of his troublesome members, and I understand he now proposes to go for another.

It appears that the doctor has been quite anxious for the last two years to get rid of J. H. Nicholson, one of the charter members of the lodge, who two years ago made an unsuccessful effort to procure an investigation of certain charges against Benj. Kersey; in which charges Dr. Hensley was implicated. It appears also that Mr. Nicholson has a claim against the lodge for rent of the old hall, the amount of which claim is about $10. Now Dr. Hensley knowing the stubborn disposition of Mr. Nicholson, proposes to take advantage of it for the purpose of accomplishing his expulsion; and refuses to allow the claim for rent. Mr. Nicholson proposes to make his claim pay his lodge dues, and threatens that in case he is crowded on for dues to bring a suit against the lodge for rent.

Another sample or two of Masonic charity. Mr. Rufus Cleveland, a member of Yates City lodge, was a poor man, and in poor health, not being able to work at his trade (he was a painter) he proposed to start out and try his luck on a theatrical tour and in order to procure an outfit he mortgaged his home for $200. His adventure proved an unfortunate one, and in a few weeks he found himself sick and discouraged, with a family on his hands, at Clinton, Ill. He applied to the lodge at Clinton for assistance, which was refused until the W. M. had telegraphed to Yates City and received an assurance that Yates City lodge No. 448, would refund any money advanced to Bro. Cleveland. The Clinton lodge then furnished Cleveland $25, to pay his way home, and that $25 was the first debt Cleveland was obliged to pay out of the proceeds of the sale of his home, which went at a very low figure.

Another sample; S. S. Buffum was the first W. M. of Yates City lodge, and he was a stock-holder in the joint stock company that built the Masonic hall. This joint stock company rented the hall to the lodge for a yearly rent of $5.50 per share, which was paid to the stockholders generally in the form of lodge dues. Mr. Buffum died nearly six years ago, and his widow has never received a dollar in the shape of rent from the lodge; and besides, some of the brethren threatened the undertaker who furnished Mr. B's coffin with the indignation of the fraternity because he took (with her free will) a cow from the widow in payment for the said coffin. But I must draw this letter to a close, promising to write to you again when I can pick up a few items that I think will be interesting to your readers. W. H. ROBINSON.

FROM DR. BINGHAM.

YORK, Medina Co., O.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In my communication of Sept. 12th, I promised "more anon," meaning to write more very soon on the same subject—that of independent thought and action on the part of the people,—professors of religion especially, leaving it not to the clergy to do their thinking for them. This was the subject I introduced, intending to continue it but for a very serious error which occurred in that number. Your type setter made me use the word rejected, whereas in the manuscript I said no such thing. Repeated is the word.

Speaking of the clergy who stand in the way of our reform, the following is the sentence in which the error occurs: "Their thoughts, whether right or wrong, are diffused, and their words, outside the pulpit, are repeated and often exert a pernicious influence." Words that are improper, words that inculcate wrong sentiments, had better be rejected, but they are repeated and endorsed, thus neutralizing correct testimony against a vile abomination and indirectly endorsing the very spirit of anti-Christ with its visible embodiment.

If Freemasonry is not anti-Christ, then there is no anti-Christ upon the face of the earth. This the clergy well know. If they would honestly plead ignorance in this regard there would be some excuse, but of this they are deprived by the fact, that a full knowledge is within their reach, and a rejection of it, it would seem, can arise from no other cause than the "love of darkness rather than light."

When men of intelligence, whether ministers or others, in accounting for the decline of opposition to the secret orders, express themselves on this wise: "There is so much talk about it here that the people have become disgusted," what do they mean but to throw a damper on the whole thing? And when repeated by others, hitherto claiming to be staunch anti-secret men, what does it prove, but that they think not for themselves, but adopt the thoughts of others? Surely, ministers of the Gospel are assuming a fearful responsibility, when by such utterances, and corresponding action they throw themselves athwart the path of reform, and endeavor to stop the progress of God's chariot wheels of light and salvation.

Is it uncharitable then, to retort the question as some have done, "Why don't you stop preaching, lest some should be disgusted at your denunciations of sin, and advocacy of holiness?"

One more correction and I have done In the last paragraph, eighth line from top, the word carry is put for "array."

As long articles are not always profitable, I will close with the remark that no one minister is alone in the kind of negative opposition to our reform, but all, or nearly so within this country, occupy a similar position. None are outspoken—almost none are free from a kind of criminal conservatism in reference to the abominations of the lodge power. Our Methodist minister, than whom for social, genial qualities, apparent piety, preaching talent, persuasive eloquence, and external agreeableness, there are few to equal, is not only a Royal Arch Mason, but apparently, a conscientious advocate of the secret orders generally. What shall we do?

Yours truly, J. A. BINGHAM.

OUR MAIL.

G. C. Cooper, Albany, Missouri, writes:

"The visit of the Secretary and General Agent with Bro. Ronayne's public disclosures have given a new impetus to the work in Missouri. The local papers in the State are denouncing the disgraceful treatment of the reformers at Chillicothe and are thereby helping us to wake up public sentiment."

J. S. Perry, Thompson, Connecticut, writes:

"While many Masons say we don't know anything about Masonry, yet a Master Mason told me a few days ago that Finney's book was true as far as he knew. All we need to do is to show the people what Masonry is in all its bearings and objects and I am satisfied that it will soon be a thing of the past. A Master Mason Said to me, 'It will live until the Judgment Day.' But I think he made a slight mistake, as Christ has said: 'Every plant that my Heavenly Father has not planted shall be rooted up.' May the Lord hasten the day when the last root and branch of Masonry shall be rooted up and withered away."

F. Huber, Mount Heron, Darke county, Missouri, writes:

"I can fully endorse your platform. Please send me thirty or forty Walker tickets. By the help of God I will ever help to push the battle forward. I never belonged to any secret society. Three or four months before I saw your welcome paper I thought of joining the Masons, but, thank God, that is one sin I need not answer for now."

N. Green, Jr., Clayville, New York, writes:

"I presented Ronayne's affidavit to five different editors in Utica for publication. Some promised to publish it, but all backed out. Their excuse was it being an advertisement for a book. Some that read my paper would like to know what became of that lodge of independent Masons of Boston, and also something more about that lodge formed in New York city for the liberation of Ireland. I showed that affidavit to a Christian preacher. He read some and said he had no interest in the subject. I said I understood he was a Mason. He said he was, and if a man had taken the obligations Ronayne claimed he was not to be believed; he was a perjured wretch. I reminded him that in so doing he indirectly proved Ronayne's statement true. He then got so excited as to lose his jewel. He said the lodge was better than the churches; said Christ did not allow us or any man to worship him I said, 'You may as well throw away the Bible.' Said he, 'You don't know anything about the Bible.' I suppose that means that Masonry is the only sound interpreter of the Bible."

D. F. Newton, of New York, writes:

"We had a precious time with Prof. Fischer and his amiable wife. What a feast! And then to cap the climax of beauty the sweet little God-send of a baby, called by the best of names, 'Faith.' The Lord give the parents faith to train this precious gift of God in faith all the way, that this sweet little beauty of a girl may live and breathe faith, grow up on faith—faith that works by love and purifies the heart."

J. B. Nessell, Ellington, New York, writes:

"Our prayers offered in faith are a powerful lever to work with, accompanied with right action, and those actions must be in harmony with our prayers to make them available with God and our fellowmen."

A. Pattison, Birmingham, Iowa, writes:

"We are tired of the oppression of the lodge in this town. They have everything their own way. They control the whole town and the public schools. There is no scheme too low or base for them to resort to if they think it will win. They do everything they can to keep the trade in their own hands, and thus others are oppressed and kept under. It is one of the most tyrannical, wicked institutions upon the face of the earth."

E. W. Bruce, Hickory Corners, Barry county, Michigan, writes:

"Our cause is prospering here and we expect to push the battle to the very gates of the enemy. * * * As a family we are passing through deep affliction at present on account of the death of our little boy. He died September 21st, which was the sixth anniversary of our wedding day. A bright gleam of sunshine is taken from our circle here and the chain is tightened that binds us to God and heaven."

The friends who met Mr. Bruce and wife at the Chicago Convention last June will sympathize with them in their present affliction.

F. G. Coxson, Philadelphia, writes:

"While visiting the Exposition yesterday a tract was handed to me addressed to the 'Young men of America,' together with others of like import, also published by your house. The facts contained in those leaflets have impressed themselves very forcibly upon my mind, and as it had been since reaching my majority my desire and intention to connect myself with the Masonic order, I feel that, for one, I have been saved the shame and blasphemy of such a course by the timely reading of your tracts, and that under God I owe you he thanks which I herewith offer. I sincerely pray that He in whose cause you are working may crown all your efforts in this direction with abundant success."

Isaac Preston, who is traveling, writes from Greenwich, New Jersey, as follows:

"I found our good friend and fellow-worker, Mr. Hodge, at his post. He is doing good service. The pernicious ways and principles of the secret orders will be exposed in almost all lands through this instrumentality and I know great good will result."

Rev. J. W. Raynor, Montrose, Pennsylvania, writes:

"I want to ask through the Cynosure if the Granger's sign of caution as given on page 21 of Exposition is correct? A man claiming to be of that order stated to me before several individuals that it was not correct, and I want to be assured."

In reply to this question T. K. Bufkin Lynnville, Iowa, who was once Master of a grange, writes:

"What is represented on page 21 of Exposition of the Grange, the right hand top figure, written underneath 'Sign of Caution,' is only sign in the second degree. The sign of caution is correctly given in lower left hand figure. Should the person he is giving the sign to not notice this sign, as given on bottom left hand figure, page 21, then the person giving it is to let the tips of the fingers fall gently two or three times on top of shoulder in order to call attention more minutely."

The Sabbath School.

LESSON XLVI.—NOV. 5, 1876.—SAUL'S CONVERSION.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ix: 1-18. Commit 1 6.

1 And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest,

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

3 And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus; and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5 And he said, Who art thou Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

6 And he trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which were with him stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no man.

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did he eat nor drink.

10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus: for behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests, to bind all that call on thy name.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.

16 For I will shew him what great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord (even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest) hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received his sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

GOLDEN TEXT.—A new heart also will I give you—Ez xxxvi: 26.

Some facts respecting Paul's early life, as told by himself, may be found in Acts xxi. 37 to xvii. 3; xxv. 1-5.

The work which was given him: Acts ix. 15; xxii. 15, 16, 21; xxvi. 16-18.

What he endured as an apostle: Acts xx 23; 11 Cor. xi. 23 29; Tim. i. 11, 12.

THREE CHEERS FOR WALKER AND KIRKPATRICK!!

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.

2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.

3d Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.

5th. Civil Rights.

6th. Arbitration better than war.

7th. The Bible in schools.

8th. Monopolies discountenanced.

9th. A return to specie payments.

10th. Maintenance of public credit; protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.

11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—The re-publication of "Freemasonry at a Glance," on the political pages makes it necessary to put a part—the best part—on this page. Let this number of the Cynosure be widely circulated as a campaign document.

—Several letters of interest reporting the reform work in Iowa, Wisconsin and New York, wait till next week, among them that of the NiagaraCounty convention.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

How to Find Mr. Hodge.

The tract stand, where Mr. Thomas Hodge will welcome every friend of this cause is in the SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF THE MAIN BUILDING. Find either of the large Bible Society stands and they will point out to you the beautiful Cynosure Banner close by.

The Wesleyans.

These excellent men and brethren are in danger of proving true the reverse of the old maxim, so that it will read, When good men fall out rogues prosper. It is the purpose of the Cynosure not to intermeddle in the difficulties, remembering how Moses fared in his attempt to reconcile Israelites who differed. But the interest I feel in a denomination born and its cradle rocked in the storm which demolished American slavery, moves me to offer them the aid of my thoughts, which are these:

The Wesleyan rule of discipline excludes Masonry and Odd-fellowship, absolutely, from fellowship. In Sycamore, last year, a committee of the General Conference reported, recommending to keep the rule against Masons and Odd-fellows standing, and advise and remonstrate against Good Templars, grangers, and other lesser secret orders. After debate the case was remitted for decision to the lower conferences. The discussion in some of these lower conferences, though fraternal, yet is warm; and though the American Wesleyan handles the discussion judiciously, friction is, I fear, likely to generate more heat. This is the opinion of the Cynosure, and, with Paul, we beseech brethren to suffer this word of exhortation:

1. The difference between excluding Freemasons and Odd-fellows, and morally condemning the rest, and excluding all secret societies in the mass, is not sufficient, provided all are sincere, to make an issue and divide brethren. Consistency requires both sides to ACT together and alike. For, if Good Templarism and the grange are advised against, they ought to be got rid of as Paul's meat, which he would not eat while the world stood, if it offended his brethren.

2. It is a fallacy to call Good Templarism and the grange, "lesser evils," etc. The lesser evil may involve the greater sin. A brother, enlightened, sins more in joining the lesser order, than an ignorant one in joining the greater.

3. The distinctions "per se" and "per consequentia," never helped the slavery discussion. There is danger of losing the practical bearings of a thing in the mazes of its logic. If men are honestly opposed to secret societies, they will be anxious to get rid of all of them; and working straight toward that end will unite us.

4. Good Templarism merely adds secrecy and ceremonies to an open temperance society. Adding secrecy and ceremonies to simple, open New Testament churches, turned them into Popery and Jesuitism, and brought on the dark ages. Snakes' venom will kill, though ejected from the orifice of a tooth no larger than to admit a hair. In every secret society, there lurks somewhere the venom of Satan, who is called a snake.

5. The Good Templar lodge in Wheaton, Ill., sustained a leader by its vote, who went for licensing saloons, to get the German vote of the county.

6. If there are circuits so ensnared by the Templars and the grange, that they cannot eject them, their state will be made worse by arguing that secrecy is not sin "per se." The presumption is that much prayer, a little patience, and a united denomination will save those circuits.

7. In our slavery war, a union officer, who should have put on the secesh uniform on the day of battle, would have been shot by his own men. Regalia, secrecy and degrees are the livery or uniform of the lodge. Why should Wesleyans wear them?

Were I a Wesleyan (and I once thought seriously of joining), I would not vote to make laws for the church. Christ is the only law-giver and the Bible the only law. But I would vote to declare Christ's law and example against all secret societies, carry the vote if I could, be patient with infected circuits, but insist on their dropping the livery of the lodge.

Cynosure Politics.

The Cynosure has been faithful, from firm conviction, to the platform and candidates of the American Party. But it has treated such veterans as Hon. Seth M. Gates, Isaac Preston, Rev. I. A. Hart and others, who vote and advocate the Republican ticket with respect, not only their persons but their principles, It is neither wisdom or charity to ignore the truth, and the truth is that the Democratic party as it now stands before the nation, is as it was, confederate with the slave confederacy or its survivors. It has secured the secesh vote of the South, and in case Tilden is elected, it must be treacherous to its rebel supporters, or wink at their horrible persecutions of the blacks.

There are therefore reasons why we should wish the success of the Hayes' ticket; but these reasons are not sufficient to justify us in forsaking our own. Nor do we believe Messrs. Gates, Preston, and those who will vote for Hayes, if they could do so, would wish to undo what we have done, and put our ticket out of the field.

No reflecting man who understands the nature of the lodge can doubt that we must meet it at the polls, where it is sure to meet us, and we cannot adopt political action against this secret empire in our midst when no Presidential canvass is pending, to drop it till the federal election is past. We are therefore sorry to see the following from the pen of Prof. Wright in the Telescope and it is sufficient praise to say that it is about the only paragraph from the pen of that able editor which we ever did regret. He says:

Shame on hobby-riding! Its logic is not worthy of men of education and refinement. When we have so important an issue, one involving the dominance of the ex-confederacy and the victory of pro-slavery principles, we would scorn to turn aside to join wire-workers in schemes to set up titular dignitaries in the shape of unfit or hopeless candidates for great national offices."

We shall vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick if able to reach the polls, and we trust we may live to see "The Americans" a more popular political name than "Republicans," as a party name, is now.

—The Michigan Odd-fellow of Bay City, Mich., publishes an article from our friend A. Oldfield, reviewing the Masonic character of Wm. L. Webber, Democratic candidate for Governor of Michigan and for a number of years Grand Master of Michigan lodges. Bro. Oldfield thus struck a brave blow where it will be felt, although the editor disclaims any sympathy with his views.

—The able essay on secularism by Rev. W. H. Brewster of Geneva, Ill., read before the late meeting of the Elgin Congregational Association we print by his permission. It puts in a clear light the questions now being agitated by the National Reform Association, and shows the necessity of the great work undertaken by that organization.

—Prof. E. G. Paine of Wasioja, Minn., the member of the National Central Committee for that State wishes to make arrangements for Mr. Ronayne's approaching lecture course. Any friends who can arrange immediately for expositions and a good attendance will please write to Prof. Paine. Correspondence respecting the interests of the American Party is also solicited. Write to Prof. Paine for tickets, enclosing postage.

—The address of Rev. W. W Knipple is now Elwin, Macon Co., Ill. Friends writing to him will please notice.

—Rev. J. P. Richards of Bowensburg, Ill., recently elected assistant State lecturer is now ready to enter actively upon the work. He may be addressed at Bowensburg Hancock Co. We hope soon to hear of his movements in the field.

—We had the pleasure last week of a short call from Rev. D. S. Kinney, the publishing agent of the Wesleyan Book Concern at Syracuse, N. Y. Bro. Kinney has, after apostolic model, been on his annual tour among the Wesleyan churches. He is encouraged by the general manifestation of an earnest and zealous spirit among them, a growth of holiness and steadfastness for the truth. The Wesleyans will stand by their testimony against the lodge worship, and there is no doubt but atht the next General Conference will be unanimous in making the letter of their Discipline conform to its spirit. The collections for the new publishing house in Syracuse are affected by the stringency of the times, but are sufficient to keep the work in progress without incurring debt. The building has reached the third story and the fourth was begun last week. Friends of our reform will rejoice at this work, a monument of its progress and earnest of victory.

MAQUOKETA.

MAQUOKETA, Iowa, Oct. 17th, 1876,

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—There are several good sound Christian brethren in our vicinity, as brethren Stolon, Karkle, Blush, Phillips, Stevens, Roberts, Hinkley and Harrington, who have been reading the faithful reports and the exposures of Freemasonry, and have for a long time desired to have a fair exposition of Masonry given to our respectable public. The time has come, thank God; the truly Christian hero, brother E. Ronayne, came by our request and gave Masonry a dreadful ventilation. such as it never had before in this part of Iowa. We had some little fears as to our being able to get a suitable and safe place for the lecturer, but we put our trust in the Lord, and invited Brother R. to come. We were successful in securing as fine a hall as there is in northern Iowa, just built for such occasions, with a fine large rostrum, where all of the three first degrees were worked by brother R., and the poor help of his friends, in full view of the audience of at least 500, to the full satisfaction of all honest, intelligent people. Twice the number would have been in the hall if there could have been room.

All that we have heard express themselves were entirely satisfied excepting a few jack Masons, and a few of the Masons, who were sure to put in their appearance anywhere, but before Ronayne. That's just where they dare not place themselves,—under the muzzle of the gun. O shame on a citizen of this noble, God-given free republic of ours who dares not come to the front, and hear the precious truths of this great immortal religion. Is not this a religion that causes angels to weep, devils blush, and the blessed Son of God to implore with a more pitiful cry than when on the cross, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."

The way is fairly opened, the enemy are repulsed and victory for truth and righteousness, through the hope of God and his name, has been our blessed reward.

Our expectations have been more than realized, as this was our first effort The lectures and the wonderful farce of Hiram Abiff, have produced a great change on the public opinion. The great wonder is now: "Can it be possible that our ministers of Christ's Gospel, who present the consecrated emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our precious Jesus, to the members of Christ's church, can be guilty of such dreadful deeds and take such horrible oaths?" Yes, they do, and no wonder that the world is fast becoming infidel.

In behalf of the friends of the cause, DR. A. B. HARRINGTON.

Religious Intelligence

—A revival meeting of great interest is in progress at Genoa, Ill., under the preaching of Mrs. Jennie H. Caldwell, formerly Miss Hughes, a graduate of Wheaton College in 1865. The altar is crowded afternoon and evening. Sixty have professed a change of heart, and are rejoicing in a Savior's love.

—The Presbyterians propose to establish a lay college at Auburn, N. Y., to train Christian men and women to work in the church, the Sunday school, and the parish.

—The German Minister of Public Worship has issued an order directing that all orphanages in Germany at present under the exclusive control of Roman Catholic communities be placed under lay direction.

—At the Detroit Conference, Bishop Ames sustained the ruling of Dr. Pilcher, that under the statutes of the church no woman can be licensed to preach.

—The Bridgewater Baptist Association of northeastern Pennsylvania re-affirmed the resolution of previous years in regard to the lodge as follows:

"Resolved, That we continue to stand by our old Baptist land marks, among which are individual soul liberty, church independency, and church as distinguished from Christian fellowship or communion; anti-slavery, anti-rum, anti-tobacco, anti-organized secrecy, and anti-ministerial, titles of honorary distinction.

—It is suggested by some influential members of the United Brethren church that Pres. E. B. Kephart, of Western College, Iowa, would be a good successor to the revered David Edwards.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, the Wesleyan Methodist agent, preached at the dedication of a new Wesleyan church at Oakfield, Wis., last week, The building is convenient, comfortable and tasty, thoroughly built and without a debt; indeed, a surplus in the hands of the building committee is enough for horse sheds. A church thus started and free from the dreadful lodge entanglement, has a glorious future before it.

—Captain Henry Bundy has returned from his missionary voyage to the northern lake ports.

—The Religious Book Society of London has sold 2,000,000 copies of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress within a few years.

News of the Week.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade says the Turkish forces in Servia resumed the offensive Thursday and a battle began which lasted three days. It consisted of two distinct operations, one in front of Saitschar, and the other on positions commanding Deligrad. In the latter movement the Turks captured on Thursday thirteen redoubts, great quantities of arms and many prisoners.

The fight was long and bloody. The Turks continued to advance. On Saturday there was further fighting. Hafiz and Abdul Pashas opened fire before Djunis, and Fazli Pasha shelled Alexinatz. The Servian forces at Djunis under Horvatovich were routed with great loss. There are fears that Djunis, which is the key to the road through the Morava Valley, will fall into the hands of the Turks.

The Times dispatch from Belgrade reports that, in the fight near Saitschar, the Turks gained the day, having captured Bolevatz. Should the Turks make good their double advance on Paratkin, the Russo-Servian army would be placed in a serious position. The affair is not yet decided.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THREE CHEERS FOR WALKER AND KIRKPATRICK!!

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.

2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.

3d. Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.

5th. Civil Rights.

6th. Arbitration better than war.

7th. The Bible in schools.

8th. Monopolies discountenanced.

9th. A return to specie payments.

10th. Maintenance of public credit: protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.

11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—The re-publication of "Freemasonry at a Glance," on the political pages makes it necessary to put a part—the best part—on this page. Let this number of the Cynosure be widely circulated as a campaign document.

—Several letters of interest reporting the reform work in Iowa, Wisconsin and New York, wait till next week, among them that of the NiagaraCounty convention.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

How to Find Mr. Hodge.

The tract stand, where Mr. Thomas Hodge will welcome every friend of this cause is in the SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF THE MAIN BUILDING. Find either of the large Bible Society stands and they will point out to you the beautiful Cynosure Banner close by.

The Wesleyans.

These excellent men and brethren are in danger of proving true the reverse of the old maxim, so that it will read, When good men fall out rogues prosper. It is the purpose of the Cynosure not to intermeddle in the difficulties, remembering how Moses fared in his attempt to reconcile Israelites who differed. But the interest I feel in a denomination born and its cradle rocked in the storm which demolished American slavery, moves me to offer them the aid of my thoughts, which are these:

The Wesleyan rule of discipline excludes Masonry and Odd-fellowship, absolutely, from fellowship. In Sycamore, last year, a committee of the General Conference reported, recommending to keep the rule against Masons and Odd-fellows standing, and advise and remonstrate against Good Templars, grangers, and other lesser secret orders. After debate the case was remitted for decision to the lower conferences. The discussion in some of these lower conferences, though fraternal, yet is warm; and though the American Wesleyan handles the discussion judiciously, friction is, I fear, likely to generate more heat. This is the opinion of the Cynosure, and, with Paul, we beseech brethren to suffer this word of exhortation:

1. The difference between excluding Freemasons and Odd-fellows, and morally condemning the rest, and excluding all secret societies in the mass, is not sufficient, provided all are sincere, to make an issue and divide brethren. Consistency requires both sides to ACT together and alike. For, if Good Templarism and the grange are advised against, they ought to be got rid of as Paul's meat, which he would not eat while the world stood, if it offended his brethren.

2. It is a fallacy to call Good Templarism and the grange, "lesser evils," etc. The lesser evil may involve the greater sin. A brother, enlightened, sins more in joining the lesser order, than an ignorant one in joining the greater.

3. The distinctions "per se" and "per consequentia," never helped the slavery discussion. There is danger of losing the practical bearings of a thing in the mazes of its logic. If men are honestly opposed to secret societies, they will be anxious to get rid of all of them; and working straight toward that end will unite us.

4. Good Templarism merely adds secrecy and ceremonies to an open temperance society. Adding secrecy and ceremonies to simple, open New Testament churches, turned them into Popery and Jesuitism, and brought on the dark ages. Snakes' venom will kill, though ejected from the orifice of a tooth no larger than to admit a hair. In every secret society, there lurks somewhere the venom of Satan, who is called a snake.

5. The Good Templar lodge in Wheaton, Ill., sustained a leader by its vote, who went for licensing saloons, to get the German vote of the county.

6. If there are circuits so ensnared by the Templars and the grange, that they cannot eject them, their state will be made worse by arguing that secrecy is not sin "per se." The presumption is that much prayer, a little patience, and a united denomination will save those circuits.

The Revival.

MAJOR WHITTLE URGES TO SERVE GOD OR MAMMON.

One thing the church wants is to get rid of those who are not faithful in their hearts, and it would be a great deal better for those parties themselves. I would say to Christians, Cut loose from the world, from everything pertaining to Baal and be consecrated to the Lord. Here is the gospel of Jesus. Here is the life of Jesus. Here is the testimony of what this gospel will do for men. This gospel, if it is believed in if it is received into the heart will effect a great transformation; it will change men from evil and bring them into communion with God, and they will go through the world their faces shining with the light of heaven. On the other hand, suppose you are a body of Christians professing to be risen with Christ; the world looks on you, and you by your position give the lie to this gospel, and there are those who are perishing because you do. Ah, friends, that is the obstacle in the way. The vast body of us are so worldly that men begin to doubt whether there be such a thing as the Holy Ghost. Why this large body of Christians here if we were honest to our God — if we yielded ourselves up to him, and asked him to fill us with his spirit, this city of Chicago, this whole continent, the whole world, would be shaken by the power of the Holy Ghost shed abroad here in Chicago. You owe it to the world to settle this question. There are those in your families—there are those among your acquaintances—there are those in the business community—looking upon you and to them you are a false light on a shoal of breakers. There is not an acquaintance probably that might not have been influenced by you, if you had been an out-and-out consecrated Christian if you had been following God and not conspiring with Baal, and because you were not consecrated to God the opportunity has gone forever. Oh, sometimes it comes over me with tremendous force when I think back and remember the opportunities I have lost. Twenty years ago, when I came to this city, I remember an office in which I was employed. There were seven unconverted young men there. Five of them have since died—all young men, and all five without a hope in God—all passing into eternity without an interest in Jesus Christ. Oh they come up before me very often. I think if I had been a consecrated Christian, which it was my privilege to have been, it might have been different. I remember two years before I gave my heart to Christ that I rose in a church for prayer that I might become a Christian. For weeks I was under conviction. I thought I should have been a Christian, and I thought to myself why not come out? I went one day with my Bible in my pocket to see a man whom I knew to be a Christian. I hoped he would talk about my soul, but he talked of everything but that. I tried hard to get at the subject, but it was no use, because he avoided it. Two years went by before I gave my heart to God. Oh, it is a solemn thing to stand out before the world as a professing follower of God, and not be filled with the Spirit. You owe it to the world to settle this question: "How long halt ye between two opinions! If the Lord be God, follow Him, and if Baal, follow him." We have no idol Baal now—that is no graven image of Baal; but Baal has crept into the church and the community, and the spirit of Baal and worldliness keeps you away from God. Dear business men here to-night, you that might have such an influence for the Son of God in Chicago, you know very well what hinders you from being filled with the Spirit. You know it is worldliness. There is but one thing to do — not to compromise with it, but to give it up for the sake of God — for Christ and his cause. You know, Christian women here to-night, in your hearts what it is that hinders the work of the Spirit. There need be no quibbling about it as to what is right and what is wrong. Your part is to lay yourself on the altar of God. Don't discuss the matter, but in the light of this hour, when God is drawing near to bless, when a great flood of blessing is hovering over Chicago; don't I beg of you hold back. Don't hold back, I charge you for Christ's sake, for your children's sake, for the community's sake. You have held back a great while; the land is growing dry—we are three years without rain. Some of you can remember back to-night that it is three years since your heart was broken with conviction. Oh, in view of the drought of your soul hold back no longer. Come to the Savior. Give yourself anew to him, no matter what it costs. Once your decision is made, the Son of God will bless you, the heavens will open, and the power of God's spirit will descend, and as the world looks on they will shout as they did on Mount Carmel, "The Lord he is the God." God grant us all the baptism of the Spirit here to-night.

MR. MOODY ON CHRIST SEEKING THE HOST.

You who were here last night will remember that I selected for my text the tenth verse of the nineteenth chapter of Matthew: "For the Son of man is come to seek that which is lost." I did not say all I wanted to say upon the subject, and just want to take up where I left off. A great many people tell you, "I will become a Christian when Christ comes to seek me." I was talking to a gray-haired man, 55 years of age, in my native town not long ago, who, when I spoke to him about his soul, suggested that he would become a Christian when the Lord Jesus Christ came to him. He was waiting till he hunted him personally. And there is a class like him in every community. What more would you like him to do for you—what more than he has done already? I would like to ask you what you would like God to do more for us. He sent to us the prophets and we murdered them. He sent down his Son from heaven, who was sacrificed by us, and then he sent us the Holy Ghost, who has been in the world for the last 1,800 years, to try and give us peace and happiness. Would you like him to send his Son again to earth to suffer for your sins? My dear friends, what are you waiting for more? He has been looking for you and hunting for you from your cradle, and I would just like to tell you how he seeks. There was never a sermon which you have listened to but in it the Lord was seeking for you. That is one way. Some of you might have been asleep while the preaching has been going on, but he has been seeking you in that way. Have not some of you heard a sermon in which you were offered as a sinner the Lord Jesus Christ, and your conscience was troubled. You went away, but you came back again, and the Spirit of God came upon you again and again, and you were troubled? Haven't you passed through that experience? Don't you remember something like that happening to you? That was the Son of God seeking for your soul. You might have had a tract presented to you. You might have turned it off. It might have been headed with this text. That was the Son of God seeking for your soul. He has used a four-page tract —sometimes just one page—to seek to convert a man, and he is seeking through the Bible. I contend that a man cannot but find in every page of this book that he is seeking him through his blessed Word. This is what the Bible is for—to seek out the lost. He seeks them through his works; he seeks them through these ministers; through this building. What is this building for? Why that you may come here where Christ is seeking for your souls. Do you think that the devil put it into the heads of those business men, in these times of great commercial depression, to put this building up? Do you think Satan put it into their heads? It has not been put up to catch your money—no collection has been taken up yet. It is not to catch your money we are after; it is to catch your soul. Do you believe that it was Satan who put it into the hearts of those ministers to preach the Word and to come here night after night? Do you believe that was the devil's work? It is the Son of Man seeking for your souls. And this building and these crowds of people ought to act as a reminder and a warning to every man and woman walking those streets.

The Home Circle.

Peace.

Is this the peace of God, this strange, sweet calm?
The weary day is at its zenith still,
Yet 'tis as if beside some cool, clear rill,
Through shadowy stillness rose an evening
psalm,
And all the noise of life was hushed away,
And tranquil gladness reigned with gentle soothing sway.

It was not so just now. I turned aside
With aching head, and heart most sorely bowed;
Around with cares and griefs in crushing crowd;
While inly rose the sense, in swelling tide,
Of weakness, insufficiency, and sin,
And fear and gloom and doubt in mighty flood rolled in.

That rushing flood I had no power to meet,
Nor strength to flee: my present, future, past,
Myself, my sorrow, and my sin, I cast.
In utter helplessness at Jesus' feet;
Then bent before the storm, if such his will.
He saw the winds and waves, and whispered,
"Peace, be still!"

And there was calm! O, Savior I have proved
That thou to help and save art truly near;
How else this quiet rest from grief and fear,
And all distress? The cross not removed,
I must go forth to bear it as before.
But leaning on thine arm, I dread its weight no more.

Is it indeed thy peace? I have not tried
To analyze my faith, dissect my trust,
Or measure if belief be full and just,
And therefore claim thy peace. But thou hast died:
I know that this is true, and true for me,
And, knowing it, I come, and cast my all on thee

It is not that I feel less weak, but thou
Wilt be my strength, it is not that I see
Less sin but more of pardoning love in Thee,
And all sufficient grace. Enough! And now
All fluttering thought is stilled; I only rest
And only feel that thou art near, and know that I am blessed. [—Havergal.

No Compromise.

There never has been a time when Satan was not ready to compromise with the church. To-day, he has his allies in the church and out of it, who are ever and anon crying, "compromise! compromise! Don't be quite so radical, shake hands with the world, tone down the gospel, be a little more conservative," &c., &c. This spirit is so rife in many of our popular churches, that even the shepherds of God have succumbed and suffered themselves to be hampered and muzzled. While this tide of spiritual apathy and worldly conformity is bearing its thousands down to hell right from the sanctuary, compromising sinners in Zion are being rocked and dandled to death by a half-saved ministry and church. The voice of God is stifled, and the gospel rendered powerless, and the church paralyzed by this namby-pamby spirit of compromise. The world has crept into the church and smothered her altar fires and quenched her zeal until the spirit has been grieved and insulted and driven away, and "Ichabod" written upon her doors.

In many places God's professed people have a form of godliness and deny the power. Instead of seeking the honor that comes from God only, they are seeking honor of the world and of one another. A popular ministry, numbers and wealth are sought as a substitute for spiritual power. Men and women having a name in the church may neglect the prayer meeting, attend theatres, and dance and deck themselves in all the paraphernalia of the world without rebuke. "The offense of the cross has ceased." The world looks on and smiles approvingly, while Christ lies bleeding in the house of his professed friends. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. It is high time to awake out of this sleep of death and expel this destroying angel of death from the church. The demand of the hour is a red hot gospel and an uncompromising church. Let this league with hell and agreement with death, be broken at once. Let God's watchmen go forth, gather out the stones, cast up the highway, and lift up a standard for the people. Let the clarion notes of full salvation be proclaimed with trumpet tongue, until the church is waked from her deathly slumber, until she shall gird herself with God's almightiness, and put on her beautiful garments and go forward as terrible as an army with banners. Let there be inscribed upon her banners "Holiness to the Lord," "The world for Jesus," "No compromise."—Christian Standard.

The Living Christ.

The Rev. Alexander Clark, contributes the following to his paper, the Methodist Recorder: In all the churches of Antwerp, as in all the cathedrals of the continent, it is the dead Christ who is pictured, carved and worshiped. The Christ of Romanism is everywhere still hanging on the cross. You will see him at the altars of grand churches, in cloisters, abbeys, nunneries, monasteries—but he is dead. The nails still hold the body to the wood. The Christ of the Roman Catholics cannot get loose from the cross. He is yet mocked, yet scourged, yet reviled, yet bleeding; but he is dead! Along the highways of Germany, at the cross roads, at the corners of the street, I saw, in every direction, little images of Jesus with his arms stretched out, his feet pinioned, his head bowed—it was the Roman Catholic dead Christ. The Roman soldiers still have possession of him. He still hangs between two thieves. Mary alone has been exalted. Jesus is dead. Wherever we see pictures of Mary she is alive, she sees, she moves, she loves, she answers prayer, but Jesus Christ is dead, dead! And it is a dead Christ before whom the millions of Europe are bowing down, in a sort of dumb piety, as if the Lord still needed the sponge and vinegar!

But the Gospel proclaims Jesus who was dead, alive again! No cross pinions his dear limbs now. No lance pierces his side any more. No bloody sweat is upon his brow; no paleness on his lips, no thirst on his tongue. He had power to lay down his life, and to take it up again. Our Jesus lives. The eye of faith sees a far more beautiful picture than Ruben's "Elevation of the Cross,"—far more touching and sublime than his 'Descent from the Cross." It is his resurrection from the grave—his ascension into Heaven—his intercession at the right hand of the Father. Faith looks up and sees Jesus as he is! Why whould we be forever looking down to him as he was? If any body ever had a right to look about for a dead Christ it was Mary, his mother, and the other Marys who went to his grave. But the first answer to their question was, "He is not here; he has risen as he said. Come, see where the Lord lay." The true religion exalts Jesus, and worships him as the Living Redeemer. It needs no crucifix with an image of a dead Christ, no painting of his body, white, and still and cold upon the cross or in the tomb. He is not there. He lives. His arms are not stretched on the cross, but in heavenly benediction. The crown of thorns is withered long and long ago, and now he wears a crown of glory. He is Lord of all. Bless his dear name, he liveth!

Do not be Afraid of the Bible.

Its triumphs are certain. The owls may hoot at the rising sun, but the sunshine creeps on notwithstanding. Tribes may perish, priests may die, altars may crumble into ruin, but this blessed Book advances at a pace that never ceases; and if it ever retreats it is to cover its retreat with a greater glory than its advance. This Book, inspired by the Spirit of God, climbs steep hills and crosses broad rivers. It is found under the sailor's pillow; in the sailor's knapsack; and it soars with a wing that is not cumbered by polar snow, or relaxed under equatorial suns. It carries with it an earnest of its ultimate and everlasting victory. And this Book tells us what the real disease of man is. It lays its fingers on the very spot, and it tells us the blessed truth that there is no chance or accident; that all is settled and perfectly arranged, and even that ripple of sorrow that sometimes comes to the sensitive heart, as you will find, if you trace it backward, came from no earthspring to fret us, but from the fountain of living waters to strengthen, cheer, and encourage us.

My 12, 1, 7, 7 and 4 is a numerical adjective.

My whole is a verse in Canticles.

Cora M. Fisk.

"Then You Have a Father."

The Rev. Dr. Jonas King once went to visit the children in an orphan asylum. The children were seated in a school-room, and Dr. King stood on a platform before them.

"So this is an orphan asylum," said he. "I suppose many of you would tell me that you have no father, were I to ask you?"

"Yes, sir; yes, sir," said some voices.

"How many of you say you have no father? Hold up your hands."

A forest of hands were put up.

"So you have no father?"

"Yes, sir; yes sir."

"Now," said Dr. King, "do you ever say the Lord's Prayer? Let me hear you."

The children began: "Our Father, who art in heaven—"

"Stop, children," said Dr. King; "did you begin right?"

The children began again: "Our Father, who art in heaven—"

"Stop, again, children," said Dr. King. "What did you say? Our Father? Then you have a Father—a good, rich Father. I want to tell you about him. He owns all the gold in California; he owns all the world; he can give you as much of anything as he sees best for you. Now, children, never forget that you have a Father. Go to him for all you want as if you could see him. He is able and willing to do all that is for your good."

Be Kind to the Aged.

Age, when whitening for the tomb is a worthy object of reverence. The passions have ceased—hopes of self have ceased. The old linger with the young; and oh, how careful should the young be to reward them with tender affection and the warmest love, to diminish the chill of ebbing life. The Spartans looked on reverential respect for old age, as a beautiful trait of character. Always be kind to those who are in the autumn of life, for you know not what suffering they may have endured nor how much of it may still be their portion. Do they seem unreasonably to find fault or murmur? Allow not your anger to kindle against them. Rebuke them not for doubtless many have been the crosses and trials of earlier years, and perhaps their dispositions, while in the spring-time of life, were less flexible than your own. Do they require aid? Then render it cheerfully. Forget not that the time may come when you may desire the same assistance from others that you render to them. Do all that is needful for the old, and do it with alacrity, and think not hard if much is required at your hands, lest when age sets its seal upon your brow and fills your limbs with trembling, others may wait unwilling, and feel relieved when the coffin has covered you till the resurrection.

Hindrances for Boys.

The first grievous sin often is profanity. Boys quickly catch the sophistry of wicked men—saying: "I don't think profane swearing hurts anybody; it is not wrong because no wrong is intended." If you draw the edge of a scythe across a stone it blunts and dulls the scythe. So if you carelessly break this one commandment of God, you have taken the edge from your conscience—dulled the sharp edge intended to separate between right and wrong. Can a boy really love his mother and keep disobeying her? Neither can he really love his Heavenly Father and keep disobeying him. A profane word once spoken cannot be recalled. Repeat it a few times and it becomes a habit, hard indeed to break.

Disobedience comes next. Disobey your parents once and the next time it is not so hard to do. Repeat it a few times and this, too, has become a habit. Falsehood comes in the same train. Tell a lie to cover a fault and the wretched work has begun Repeat the operation a few times and the heart becomes dark with its stains. Profanity, disobedience of parents, falsehood, once well established in a boy's heart and practice, it is but a short step to theft. Then hatred is sure to follow, which so often leads to the taking of human life. Take one step in wrong-doing and you will probably take two. Take two steps in wrong-doing and you will probably take three, and more, till you have broken all of God's commandments.

It may not always be wise even to speak of secret sins. "A little self-indulgence—just a little!" I know a young man who began with that feeling, who cannot now govern his associations. He says, and perhaps truly: "My associates (of both sexes) are not worse than I am." He is enchained. He sees no way to escape from the burning, degrading consequences of his secret sins. Who shall arise to deliver him?

Thanks be to our Heavenly Father, he has provided for every boy a complete and effectual remedy. It consists in creeping above the whole heap of difficulties, perplexities and trials into the arms of the blessed Savior. He will then breathe contentment into your heart. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." When your heart has been cleansed and filled with God's Holy Spirit, everything that I have named: love, faith, virtue, knowledge, goodness, will spring out of it like water from the fountain; discouragement and despair are gone, and further, your fresh, loving heart will lead you to so think, talk and act, as to lead other boys and young men to the same fountain of cleansing.—Gen. O. O. Howard in the Advance.

Home and Farm.

A Cure for Colds in the Head.—It would seem as if the cure for those worst of all small nuisances, colds in the head, which Dr. Ferrier, of King's College, suggested in the Lancet, might prove to be a remedy of very great value. It is a snuff—a white powder—composed of the following ingredients: Hydro-chlorate of morphia, two grains; accacia-powder, two drachms, trisnitrate of bismuth, six drachms,—the whole making up a quantity of powder of which from one-quarter to one-half may be safely taken, if necessary, in the course of 24 hours. Dr. Ferrier says that with this snuff he has twice cured himself of very violent colds—once, indeed, by taking trisnitrate of bismuth alone, which is a very powerful remedy for catarrh of the mucus membrane, and is the most important ingredient in this snuff. Dr. Ferrier mentions two other persons who were cured of violent colds by the same snuff; and to these instances we may add that of the present writer, who, having a violent cold coming on, with the sensation of weight in the temples and the usual disagreeable feeling in the throat, as well as ordinary catarrh, made trial of Dr. Ferrier's remedy one evening, and got up on the following morning completely free from cold, which has not since recurred. The snuff, instead of increasing the tendency to sneeze, almost immediately begins to diminish it.

A Seasonable Hint.—A most beautiful and easily attained show of evergreen may be had by a very simple plan, which has been found to answer remarkably well on a small scale. If geranium branches taken from luxuriant and healthy plants just before winter sets in, be cut as for slips and immersed in soap water, they will, after drooping for a few days, shed the leaves, put forth fresh ones, and continue in their finest vigor all winter. By placing a number of bottles thus filled in a flower basket with moss to conceal the bottles, a show of everlasting green is insured for the whole season. They require no fresh water.

Apples.—There is scarcely an article of vegetable food more widely useful and more universally liked than the apple. Why every farmer has not an apple orchard where the trees will grow at all is one of the mysteries. Let every family, in Autumn, lay in from two to ten, or more, barrels, and it will be to them the most economical investment in the whole range of culinaries. A raw, mellow apple is digested in an hour and a half, whilst boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthful dessert which can be placed on the table is a baked apple. If taken freely at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing constepation, correcting acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions more effectually than the most approved medicines. If families could be induced to substitute the apple—sound, ripe and luscious—for the pies, cakes, candies and other sweetmeats with which their children are too often indiscreetly stuffed, there would be a diminution of doctor's bills, sufficient, in a single year, to lay in a stock of this delicious fruit for a whole season's use.

WHERE TO GET WALKER AND KIRKPATRICK TICKETS.—G. W. Needles, Albany, Gentry Co., Missouri, supplies Missouri; Rev. J. H. Vandevers, Mason City, Ia., supplies Iowa; E. G. Paine, Wasioja, Dodge Co., Minn., supplies his State, and C. A. Sexton, Topeka, Kansas, supplies Kansas voters.

Ezra A. Cook & Co. have mailed a package of American Party tickets to one or more persons in every town where the Cynosure is taken in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Massachusetts, Vermont, West Virginia and Nebraska, and will fill all orders for more tickets for those States by return mail.

MEN OF PENNSYLVANIA,

To-day we present you the electoral ticket of the American party. The names on it are of good men and true. The principles advocated by it are Christian, having in view the maintenance of righteousness, the consequent welfare of men, individual and social, and the overthrow of oath-bound secretism and the many evils that are originated and protected by the conclaves of darkness. Sound the bugle call of Christian freemen! Rally to the defense of truth and justice and right against the fraud and selfishness and ungodliness of the times. Let us all dare to do right, to protest against the protean forms of iniquity. Let us be true to God and humanity and seek to bring every interest of our country under allegiance to THE LORD. Call out every vote you can for the righteousness that exalts a

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

The Holy Bible on the altar is usually opened at the 1231 Psalm and the square and compass placed thereon, the latter open and both points placed below the square.

Preparation of Candidate E. A. Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.—He is ushered into the 'preparation room," where he meets the Junior Deacon and Stewards who divest him of all his clothing except his shirt. He is then handed an old pair of drawers which he puts on; the left leg is rolled up above the knee; the left sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, a hoodwink is fastened over both eyes, a rope, called a cable-tow, is put once around his neck, and a slipper (with the heel slip-shod) is put upon the right foot.

Due-guard of an E. A.

Penal Sign of an E. A.

DUE GUARD OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Hold out the left hand a little in front of the body and in a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open and palm turned upward. Now place the right hand horizontally across the left and about two or three inches above it.

PENAL SIGN OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly; at the same time raise the right arm and draw the hand, still open, across the throat, thumb next the throat, and drop the hand hand perpendicularly by the side. These movements ought to be made in an off hand manner, without stiffness.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD:—(The usual way outside the lodge.) Simply draw the open hand carelessly across the throat and let it fall down by the side.

Candidate taking Entered Apprentice Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—"You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked left knee, your right forming a square, your left hand supporting the holy Bible, square and compass, your right resting thereon, in which due form you will say, I, with your name in full, and repeat after me."

GRIP OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the first knuckle-joint of the first finger near the hand. If the person whom you are shaking hands with is a Mason, he will generally return a like pressure on your hand.

ENTERED APPRENTICE WORD—Boaz. It is the name of this grip.

ENTERED APPRENTICE STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of your right foot to the hollow of your left.

FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 7th chapter of Amos and one point of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation in Fellow Craft Degree.

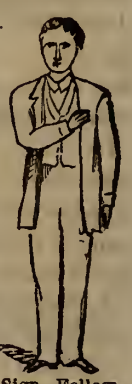
PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE:—He is ushered into the "preparation room" as before, and divested of all his clothing as in the preceding degree. In this case the right leg of the old drawers is raised up above the knee, the right sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, the slipper is now put upon the left foot, the left heel being slip shod. The hoodwink is again put over both eyes and the cable-tow is put twice around the naked right arm and an apron tied on, in which condition he is "duly and truly prepared" and led by the Junior Warden to the door of the lodge as before.

Candidate taking Fellow Craft Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked right knee, your left forming a square, your right hand resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass, your left forming a right angle supported by the square in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full, and repeat after me.

Due-guard Fellow Craft.

DUE GUARD OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Hold out the right hand a little from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest, the palm being open and turned down-ward; also raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow, from the shoulder to the elbow being horizontal and fore-arm perpendicular.



Sign, Fellow Craft.

SIGN OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly to the side and at the same time raise the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers a little crooked; then draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE GUARD.—(The usual way outside the lodge). Draw the right hand, palm open and fingers a little crooked, smartly across the breast from left to right and drop it carelessly by your side.

PASS GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the first and second knuckles of the right hand. Should the person whose hand you hold be a Fellow Craft, he will return a like pressure on your hand, or else may give you the grip of an Entered Apprentice.

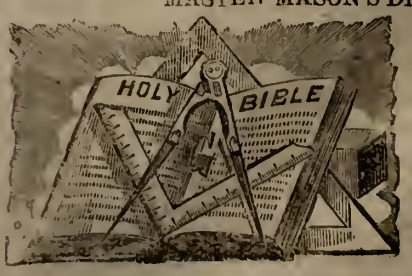
PASS OF FELLOW CRAFT—Shibboleth. It is the name of this grip.

REAL GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other by the right hand as in ordinary hand-shaking and press top of your thumb hard against the second knuckle. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Fellow Craft, he will return a similar pressure on your hand, or may possibly give you any one of the two preceding grips.

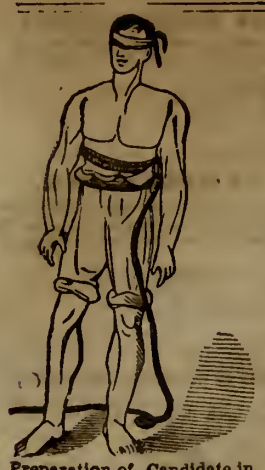
WORD OF FELLOW CRAFT—Jachin. It is the name of this the real grip.

FELLOW CRAFT OR SECOND STEP.—Step off one step with the right foot and bring the heel of the left foot to the hollow of the right; your feet forming the angle of an oblong square.

MASTER MASON'S DEGREE



The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes and both points of the compass elevated above the square.



Preparation of Candidate in Master Mason's Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.—He is conducted into the preparation room as in the preceding degree. All his clothing is removed as before; both legs of the drawers are tucked up above the knees, both sleeves of the shirt are tucked up above the elbows, both breasts of the shirt are turned in, making both breasts bare. The hoodwink is again fastened over both eyes and the cable-tow is put three times around his body. No slipper is used in this degree. Should the shirt be closed in front, it must be taken off or turned front-backwards, as both breasts must be bare. An apron is then tied on and worn as a Fellow Craft, and thus he is "duly and truly prepared."

Candidate taking Master Mason's Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate, "You will advance to the altar, kneel upon both your naked knees, both hands resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full and repeat after me"

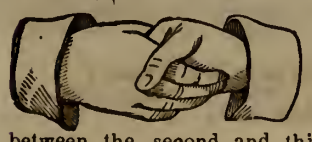
Due-guard Master Mason.

Penal Sign, Master Mason.

DUE-GUARD OF A MASTER MASON.—Extend both hands in front of the body on a line with the lower button of the vest with the palms open and turned downward, both hands being close together, thumbs nearly touching.

SIGN OF A MASTER MASON.—Made from the due guard by dropping the left hand carelessly and drawing the right across the body from left to right side on a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open as before, palm downward and the thumb towards the body. Then drop the hand perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD.—(Ordinary manner outside the lodge.) Simply draw the right hand as above described, carelessly across the body and drop it by the side.



PASS-GRIP OF A MASTER MASON.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the second and third knuckles. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Mason he may return or give any previous grip.

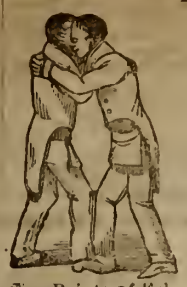
PASS OF MASTER MASON—Tubal Cain. It is the name of this grip.

STRONG GRIP OF A MASTER MASON OR LION'S PAW.—Grasp each other's right hands very firmly, the spaces between the thumb and first finger being interlocked and the tops of the fingers being pressed hard against each other's wrist where it joins the hand, the fingers of each being somewhat spread.

CANDIDATE AS HIRAM ABIFF FALLING INTO THE CANVASS, having been struck in the forehead by the setting maul of the supposed third ruffian, Jubelum.

Prayer at "Raising Hiram Abiff," (Candidate) See Ronayne's Hand Book

FIVE POINTS OF FELLOWSHIP.



Five Points of Fellowship.

Worshipful Master:—Which are the five points of fellowship?

Senior Deacon:—Foot to foot (Master and candidate extend their right feet, placing the inside of one against that of the other). Knee to knee (they bring their right knees together); breast to breast (they bring their right breasts together); hand to back (Master places his left hand on the candidate's back, the candidate's is placed by the Deacon on the Master's back); cheek to cheek or mouth to ear (Master puts his mouth to candidate's right ear thus bringing the right cheek of each together. See figure).

MASTER'S WORD:—(whispered in the ear of the candidate), Mah-hah bone, after which the candidate whispers the same word in the Master's ear.

Grand Hailing Sign, Second position.

GRAND HAILING SIGN OR SIGN OF DISTRESS OF A MASTER MASON.—Raise both arms perpendicularly above the head and let them fall by three distinct motions. The first motion brings the arms to the position as seen in the figure, from the shoulder to the elbow horizontal and from the elbow to the finger-tips perpendicular. In the second motion the arms from the shoulder to the elbow are nearly close to the sides, from the elbow to the finger-tips still upright, and in the third motion the hands are dropped to the side. The words "O Lord my God, is there no help for the Widow's Son?" are never to be given with the sign outside the lodge-room. They are given only in the dark or when the sign cannot be used.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

Translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

The friends of Michigan will take notice that the second anniversary of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secrecy, will be held in the M. E. Church, Hastings, Barry county, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of December. The meeting to commence on the afternoon of the 6th at 2 o'clock. Hastings is easily reached, being on the railroad between Grand Rapids and Jackson. Arrangements are being made to secure a good list of prominent speakers and a pleasant time is anticipated. Arrangements have been made by the friends of Hastings to supply a home for all from abroad. Let every true reformer make it his or her business to attend for THEY will be expected. No excuse allowable but sickness.

By order of Executive Committee.

C. B. REMINGTON.

Fentonville, Mich.

Past Master Ronayne expects to return from Dodge county, Minnesota, about Nov. 18th, when he will make immediate preparations to visit Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, etc. Will all the friends East therefore who wish to have public exhibitions of Freemasonry given in their respective localities communicate at once with this office that Mr. Ronayne may make arrangements and set the time. He wishes to hear from all those who wrote before.

Topics of the Time.

In his discourse last Sabbath evening Mr. Moody spoke on the "marriage feast," as found in fourteenth of Luke. In his sermon he made the following sharp contrast between the religion of Christ and the false system of the lodge:

"I remember some years ago of a man who had gone to sea. He led a wild, reckless life. When his mother was alive she was a praying mother. Ah, how many men have been saved by their mothers after they have gone up to heaven, and perhaps her influence made him think sometimes. When at sea a desire of leading a better life came over him, and when he got on shore he thought he would join the Freemasons. He made application, but upon investigation his character proved he was only a drunken sailor, and he was black-balled. He next thought of joining the Oddfellows and applied, but his application met with a like result. While he was walking up Fulton street one day a tract was given him—an invitation to the prayer meeting. He came and Christ received him. I remember his getting up in the meeting and telling how the Freemasons had black-balled him, how the Oddfellows had black-balled him, and how Christ had received him as he was. A great many orders and societies will not receive you, but I tell you he will receive you, vile as you are—he, the Savior of sinners, he the redeemer of the lost world, he bids you come just as you are."

The intolerance of Rome has turned like the tide in Spain now that internal troubles are quieted and liberalism has had its run like the mountain torrent. Not long since the signs or other placards announcing Protestant worship or schools or book stands were ordered to be taken in; and now it is said that the Bishop of Minorca has issued a new circular to the masters of primary schools not to admit the sons of Protestants and other dissenters. Thus gradually the cords of bigotry are being drawn around the evangelical population.

An event in Presbyterianism was the unveiling of the Witherspoon statue in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, on the 20th ult. The statue is of bronze, of colossal size, representing prominently both the civil and religious character of Dr. Witherspoon, who was a lineal descendant of John Knox, and came to this country in 1768 to take the presidency of Princeton College. In 1767 he was drawn into the political arena and bore no insignificant part. In the address of the occasion Gov. Bedle of New Jersey said that he devised the constitution of New Jersey, opened the first Continental Congress with prayer, and was the only clergyman who signed the Declaration of Independence. As a leader in his denomination he rendered great service in the formation of a general government of the Presbyterian church in this country. He called the first General Assembly to order and preached the opening sermon.

Friend Geo. W. Needles makes the welkin ring and Masonic ears tingle through Northwestern Missouri. With a full State ticket and nominations in several counties the Anti-masons of that section are nearer the coveted freedom from lodge control in public affairs than any other part of the country for they have reasonable expectation of success in their local nominations. A chart showing relatively the proportionate political integrity of the country would have its brightest spot over the district canvassed by this diligent reformer.

SONS OF FREEDOM.

BY J. L. BABLOW.

Sons of freedom! blest of heaven!
With a heritage, so grand!
Heed ye not the secret leaven,
Darkly working through the land?
Teach—these lodges—full salvation,
By the gavel, compass, square!
But the heathen transformation,
Proves delusion and a snare.

See the lodges! and the granges!
With the other schools of ill,
Work in church and State, such changes
As their mystic master's will!
All our guards, they've stolen from us,
Of the pulpit and the press;
Till the future has no promise,
Save increase of our distress.

Haste! then freeman! haste, and arm ye!
For the war we have begun.
Hell in arms, can never harm ye,
If thou fight for God, the Son.
On! for holy motives win you,
To the fields where Christ has trod!
Strike! with all the soul within you,
For the truth's sake, and for God.

Fentonville, Mich., Oct. 21, 1876.

THE ODD-FELLOWS.

The proud, boastful, sweet-scented next-door-neighbor to Freemasonry, I mean the "Independent Order of Odd-fellows," makes special claims to patronage and support, on the ground of not being oath-bound and yet thoroughly benevolent. Now, is this order a benevolent one, or not? What is benevolence?

Here in Ohio, where I now live, the Odd-fellow lodges and encampments have many methods of getting money. But what is given in return? The proper answer would be, nothing. "No member shall be entitled to the benefits of the lodge who is in arrears for dues." "Each member of an encampment to be entitled to benefits, must keep his dues paid in advance."

Let us reflect on such benevolence. It is not the kind our Savior taught. The poor Odd-fellow may have been paying money into the treasury of the order for fifty years, yet if his dues have fallen in arrears for a single week, he has lost all claim upon the encampment, and is no longer entitled to any of the benefits of the lodge. Possibly disease and disaster have combined against him in his hour of sore distress; but while he is sick some friend advances enough to settle the amount of the back dues. Will not that entitle him to some of the benefits? Not a bit of it. "A brother who by neglecting to pay his dues is deprived of drawing benefits while sick, cannot by the rules of the lodge be permitted while he continues sick to pay his dues so as to entitle him to benefits." Not a cent of what the poor fellow has paid is to be returned to him. His outlays for fifty years in the service and interest of the order, are not to be of any value to him and his family. His money is gone, and this benevolent society has received a great deal of it; but then, he hasn't kept his dues paid in advance, and so he has no claim upon this order which boasts of being "far more benevolent than the church."

Such a society is the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. Is it not brazen and daring effrontery before high heaven to call it a benevolent order? Admitting that the Odd-fellows are not oath-bound, (for none of us have accused them of taking such extra-judicial oaths as the Freemasons take,) still their much-vaunted benevolence is a humbug, a cheat, a fraud. They say that they educate orphans, provide for widows, and show favor to the sick and unfortunate, But who will show us an orphans' home reared and maintained by them? Who will show an asylum erected or supported by them? Who will show us the traces of their wonderful and strange benevolence?

I know that they make a great parade and show on funeral occasions, often running up expenses to a great amount, and leaving the friends and relatives of the diseased to foot the bills. I do not say that they always do this; but that there are instances in which they have done so, I presume no well-informed man would venture to deny.

None are received, in the first place, except such as are least likely to need help. "No person shall be permitted to become a member unless he be free from disease, and have some known reputable means of support." A man who is likely to need help cannot get in. This benevolent order is for the benefit of such as are not needy at all. The diseased and the poor may go elsewhere. Although the encampment has a "Golden Rule" degree, it is a degree entirely ruled by gold, and a man with a short purse had better refuse to take it.

I deny that the I. O. O. F. is a benevolent institution.

1st. From seeing the carefulness with which discrimination is made against all true subjects of benevolence.

2nd. From seeing the great outlays that a man must make to be entitled to the benefits of the order.

3rd. From seeing the provisions for forfeiture of claims, so carefully interwoven in the whole system.

4th. From seeing the pomp and display, the costly halls, expensive regalia, and lavish decorations, that so far exceed all the indications of benevolence.

It looks to me like obtaining money under false pretenses. I see no real good given in return for the money obtained by the order. Ten or twelve dollars for the degrees in the lodge; various assessments upon the members for funeral displays, etc.; a dollar a term for dues; outlays for regalia; contributions, &c. Twelve dollars for membership in the encampment; not less than four dollars deposited on application for the Golden Rule degree, and not less than five dollars for the Royal Purple degree, and not less than three dollars per annum besides for dues, with a variety of other outgoes for different purposes. The amount of money expended in this folly is astonishing. Few persons can begin to realize what a costly thing this honorable and benevolent order is. And yet the whole amount of information obtained by joining, is not worth twenty-five cents.

Masonry a Political Institution.

Editor of the Cynosure:—Thinking perhaps the following article would be acceptable reading matter to the generality of your readers I have clipped it from the daily Cincinnati Commercial of Oct. 20, and forward it to you for re-publication, if you see proper. J, H. H. W.

COLORED FREEMASONS.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 19, 1876.

To the Editor of the Commercial: The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons closed to-day, after a three days' session. The meeting was not marked by that harmony which has usually attended its sessions. The "irrepressible conflict" has undoubtedly firmly planted itself in the ancient and honorable fraternity, and it is not likely to be easily eradicated. It appears that there is a so-called Colored Grand Lodge of Freemasons in the State of Ohio, with some forty subordinate lodges, composed exclusively of colored men. It further appears that these colored Masons are not recognized by the white Masons as legitimate brethren of the "mystic craft.' It is claimed by the colored Masons, and admitted by many of the white Masons, that they are denounced as illegal simply upon technical grounds, which would not be allowed to stand in the way of their recognition if they were not negroes. Notwithstanding this, it is claimed by the white Masons, and it is the cardinal doctrine of the order that it does not discriminate against any country, sect or opinion, but that Masonry teaches the universality of the brotherhood of man in the broadest sense. The question of the recognition of these colored Masons has been before the Grand Lodge of Ohio in various shapes during the past twenty years. At the annual session in 1875, a report was presented by a special committee, composed of five of the most eminent and influential Masons in the State, setting forth that negro Masonry had a legitimate beginning in this country, as much so as any other Masonry; and that they practice the same rites and ceremonies as their white brethren, and offering a resolution recognizing an African Grand Lodge for Ohio, the object being to remove the stigma of "clandestine" or illegal under which the colored Masons now suffer, and to enable them to practice the rites and ceremonies, and inculcate and practice the principles of Masonry among themselves.

This proposition has created a most profound sensation among the brotherhood, and while it was ably advocated by many of the prominent and influential members of the order, including the Grand Master and Grand Secretary, it was bitterly and spitefully opposed by a majority of the members of the Grand Lodge.

Final action on the proposition was postponed until the present session, and the matter was somewhat indefinitely referred to the lodges to express their wishes on the important question. The "negro Mason question," as it was contemptuously termed by those opposed to it, has been the all-absorbing subject of discussion in the lodges and among the individual members of the order during the past year, nor was the excitement confined to Ohio, but it spread all over the United States, and even to Europe, and gave rise to considerable bitterness of feeling among "those who are used to dwell together in unity."

When the resolution was called up for final action at the session just closed, the question was raised that it was unconstitutional. The credit for making the discovery of this profound technical difficulty—for it is nothing else—is due to Brother Cunningham, of Newark, the Deputy Grand Master. The discovery was hailed, if not by a majority, at least by the most noisy and turbulent portion of the Grand Lodge with as much enthusiasm as ever shipwrecked crew welcomed the approach of the life-saving life-boat over the raging, destroying waves of a stormy sea. The Grand Master ruled that inasmuch as the Grand Lodge had entertained the resolution at its former meeting one year ago, and had recommended the consideration of the subject by the lodges, therefore, it was in order and properly before the Grand Lodge for action.

An appeal was taken from the Grand Master's decision, and the roll of the lodges was called, and upon the question, "Shall the Grand Master be sustained?" the vote stood seventy majority in the negative.

Therefore the present proposition to recognize the "so-called Grand Lodge" having been declared unconstitutional, was dismissed from the further consideration of the Grand Lodge. An interesting and rather exciting incident occurred in connection with the call of the lodges. According to the rules and regulations of the order the Masters and Wardens of the lodges are entitled each to one vote when present, or they may be represented by proxy, but in no case shall a vote be cast by a proxy unless the written authority of the officer giving it is first on file with the Grand Secretary. Many of the lodges, as usual, were only represented by one of their officers, without written proxies from the other two officers, consequently, in voting, all such lodges were entitled to cast one vote each.

Immediately at the conclusion of the case, and before the footings were made, "Brother Enoch" (Carson) of your city, moved that a canvassing committee of three, together with the Grand Secretary, should examine the vote and see that it correspond with the number that each lodge was legally entitled to cast, as shown by the roll of delegates on file with the Grand Secretary, at the same time calling attention to the fact that several of the lodges, naming them, had cast more votes than they had representatives registered. "Brother Enoch's" motion was promptly laid upon the table, whereupon he took his hat and said, "I now leave this Grand Lodge never to enter it again. If this Grand body permits ballot-box stuffing, and won't correct the fraud when attention is called to it, I will seek for fair play in a Democratic or Republican political caucus, where I will have an equal chance, for there the one that can do the most of it is the best fellow. Here we profess to be and should be honest, which throws a fellow off his guard," and away he went sure enough, and he did not return during the remainder of the session.

The action of the Grand Lodge in refusing to canvass the votes was most unbecoming, and especially so in view of the fact that several of the lodges had cast more votes than they were entitled to; and it gave color to the charge that the proposition to recognize the colored Freemasons was to be defeated at all hazards—even by fraud. It is not clear that the canvass of the votes would have materially changed the result, but it was the principle that disgusted "Brother Enoch."

As the matter now stands the proposition to recognize the so-called Colored Grand Lodge is defeated, disposed of for the present by a mere dodge, a parliamentary subterfuge. And the Grand Lodge has only put off until another day the meeting of the rugged issue. The "irrepressible conflict" will continue to trouble the fraternity until it does right. Demagogues were quite as rampant in the Grand Lodge as one could find them in any of the political organizations. And they were quite successful, too, in getting office.

An organized effort was made to beat "Brother John" (Caldwell) for Grand Secretary because he had favored the "colored brethren" and printed too much of what was called the "negro literature." We saw "Brother Enoch" at the Neil House in the evening, and he reiterated his determination never to enter the Grand Lodge again until it did itself and the Masonic fraternity justice by placing itself right in regard to his motion.

After hearing the brethren talk, last evening, of the exciting time over the negro question in the Grand Lodge, we thought, "how beautiful it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; it is like the precious ointment," etc. Yours,

EAVESDROPPER.

Is it Unsuspecting Innocence?

As an illustration of "sitting in darkness," I send the following article from the New York Tribune, copied into a Vermont paper:

One of the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, writes from Vermont:

Vermont is not a very large State, but it has sent out to build up the interests of other States thousands of her sons. Of adult persons born among the Green Mountains, half at least live beyond the borders of the State. Wherever they have gone, except into the South, they have always been heartily welcomed and kindly treated. But of those who have settled in the re-constructed States since the war, a number have been killed and others have been abused. The friends and relatives of many of these men still reside in this State, and the families of some of them have returned to their old homes. Generally they were honest respectable men when they left Vermont, and, my informant said, the memory of the treatment they have received at the hands of the Southerners, toward whom the North has been so generous, stirs the blood of the people of this State more than the recollection of many battles.

That is all so. The Coushatta massacre destroyed one of the Twitchell brothers and his four brothers-in-law, and the surviving brother is now at Newfane, having survived his recent wounds with the loss of both arms. Captain Dickinson of the seventh Vermont, murdered near Tallahassee, Fla., where he had settled after the war, and Capt. Fisher, of the fourth Vermont, who was driven from North Carolina, were men of too high character to justify the suspicion that they were other than innocent victims of organized terrorism. These things are not easily overlooked or forgotten in Vermont.—Burlington Free Press.

It appears then, from this Tribune article, that eight Vermonters, of excellent character, have lately been killed, frightfully maimed, or banished in the South, and this horrid fact is merely made use of to strengthen the interest of the Republican party! The people of Vermont must vote the Republican ticket, because their fellow-citizens are destroyed in the South. That is all.

It may be suspected, it is true, that these killed and outraged men were the "innocent victims of organized terrorism," but the partisan writer takes good care not to tell us that this "organized terrorism" is Freemasonry and nothing but Freemasonry, and that the American people ought to turn their whole attention to that evil. And why is the writer silent on that point? Is it not because this "organized terrorism" this Freemasonry runs the Republican party in Vermont?

"Oh," say the Masons, "but Masonry is very different here in Vermont from what it is in the South." But herein the Masons are mistaken. Masonry is the same everywhere; it is the same organized intimidation, persecution and terrorism wherever it may be found, and if it happens to be less murderous in one quarter than in another, it is due entirely to extraneous causes and not to the character of Masonry itself. By itself Masonry is full of hateful, barbarous oaths and murderous instigations. It binds men to commit murder; and nothing, save the Christian religion prevents it from being as slaughterous as the crafty Herod.

The very Vermont paper from which the article given above is extracted, bears ample evidence of being under the baneful influence, as a truculent agent of this "organized terrorism" of which it speaks. What shall we think—what must all men of honest, upright character think of editors of newspapers who find fault with "organized terrorism" in the south, while secretly, persistently and wickedly practicing "organized terrorism" themselves.

It is time for Vermont to discover that her most wicked and deceitful enemies are not so much in the South as they are in her own bosom. Let her expel "organized terrorism" from her own bosom, and then it will be time enough for her Masonic-republican editors to egg on the people of the State against the South. To make use of the blood and sufferings of these eight honest men merely to strengthen the Republican party, the crank of which is turned by Masonry, merely for grinding Masonry's own axe, is horribly wicked and selfish, and yet perfectly Masonic in all its characteristics. It gives us a beautiful illustration of the presumptous ignorance and hardened depravity of Freemasonry.

Has not Vermont something else to do besides saving the Republican party for the benefit of such editors?

AMERICUS.

THE NATION'S PERIL.

A million voters may be found to the ballot they will cast soon for day in the South who cannot read Presidential electors. Yet this terrible fact seems to produce no unusual alarm. We meet with no popular enthusiasm in reference to the immediate and universal education of this mass of ignorant voters. Account as we may for the present indifference to what should awaken in all thoughtful citizens the utmost consternation; the duty of the hour is to arouse public feeling and action in reference to this matter. A nation can afford to be poor, but it cannot safely have any large number of illiterate citizens who may be wielded by designing men to accomplish any bad purpose. The Netherlands were poor, and so were the American Colonies, but they were rich in intelligence and sentiments of honor. The permanency of our Government rests confessedly on the intelligence and integrity of the people. Where anything is trusted to the individual voter, and he is called to pass upon the gravest national and social questions, what can be expected if the grossest ignorance shrouds his mind, and he cannot tell whether or not he is casting the vote his instincts would lead him to prefer. When the war closed it seemed as if the nation realized its duty towards the freedmen, and for a while nothing was more popular than the educational work in their behalf. Schools sprang up everywhere throughout the South. Benevolent societies, with commendable zeal, sent forth a noble army of gifted teachers, and it looked for a time as if by means of such philanthropic efforts, and the hoped for provision of the States immediately concerned, the illiteracy of the enfranchised race would soon be removed. But the nation has fallen back from this advanced stage of interest and effort, and societies crippled in their resources have been compelled to curtail their educational work. At the present time, amid the depression born of the hard times, and the absorption of the public mind in political matters, the duty of educating the million of colored voters in the South has ceased to be either prominent or popular. Right here, then, is the question which should come once more to the front. In its behalf there needs to be enlisted the old time enthusiasm, which will alone gain for it the attention it deserves, and that adjustment which is possible. Note what the negro has been in South Carolina and Louisiana, where, because of his ignorance, he has become a demagogue, or the victim of demagogues. Note what our religious and educational organizations report as to the efforts of the papal church to win them over to its faith, and bring them under the rule of priests. Note the lessening work of such a valued agency as the American Missionary Association, through the failure of funds necessary to enable it to prosecute its splendid labors in behalf of the freedmen. These are the signs which attest the nation's indifference to its greatest peril, and show how careless it has become as to that illiteracy which is incompatible with free republican institutions. This is a subject of the gravest public concern, and we make our appeal to all lovers of our country to take up with renewed faith, and sustain with voice and vote and generous gifts, whatever promises to help to intelligence and a virtuous life this multitude of ignorant citizens. It is a question that needs to be taken out of the sphere of partisan politics, and remanded to the conscience and justice of the American people. —N. Y. Witness.

ARE SECRET SOCIETIES IN HARMONY WILH DISINTERESTED BENEVOLENCE.

It may be admitted that membership in such a society or club, does not determine the intent of each or any individual entering such a society. It may have been conceived by persons having none but benevolent prompting to a good work, a good end to be secured by such a covert combination. As in the case of temperance societies pledged to secresy in part respecting their modes and measures and doings, they may assay only to do a good work in that way, and their members may judge that to be the most feasible and effectual way to attain the end sought. And "as a man thinketh so is he" touching the benevolence of his intent. But if he has in any manner misjudged as to the wise and proper means to secure the end, so far the society as such is not in harmony with the highest requirements of disinterested benevolence. We are bound not only to seek to do good, but also to seek to do the utmost good we can, and avoid all the friction and every hindering cause as far as we are able. We are bound to make endeavor that "our good be not evil spoken of." We are bound also to "let our light so shine before men that they seeing our good works may glorify our Father who is in heaven."

Now, virtuous deeds concealed lose this part of their moral influence: And for a society to seek to cover its ways from sight lays it open to suspicion, whatever may be its pretentions. Those that "walk in darkness" and do deeds of mischief and evil never profess to be seeking to do evil.

When a society or club, therefore, is ever seeking to cover its works and ways from the sight of others, it becomes a matter of question whether there be not some selfish aim mingled with the professedly benevolent aim. And the more such society squirms and wriggles when this inquiry is pressed home before its members by investigation the more the outside public have occasion to apprehend that it is because there is something rotten hidden there. Many a one who had a membership in secret temperance societies, has left in disgust because there was so much that was dissipating and corrupt being engendered in their lodges. And very many declined all such alliances because a man may openly love his neighbor as himself, and without concealment do all that he is able to do for his neighbor's good and for the welfare of society, and the more he is known to be pursuing such an end, the more does he find himself standing approved in the sight of both God and man.—Christian Reformer.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SECRET SOCIETIES IN NEW YORK FREE METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The signs are clear that organized secretism is on the increase with all the elements of its evil power.

The late mammoth Centennial displays of Freemasonry in its various developments and of Oddfellowism, with their exulting reports and jubilees, are proofs of this.

The immense mass-meetings of Freemasons and Odd-fellow magnates at Philadelphia, must tend to give an impulse to these organizations throughout the world and especially in this country.

In view of these facts, and of our former positions, which are confirmed by the convictions and results of each succeeding year, we will, as a Conference, with this Centennial, renew our aggressions against these institutions, by assisting, as God may give ability, the various efficient anti-secret agencies at work in ourland.

We commend the Free Methodist, the Earnest Christian, the Cynosure, for their unqualified utterances against these evils.

And we bid God-speed to those men who have renounced these associations, and who, more nobly than that, count not their lives dear unto themselves in denouncing and exposing them.

We would advise our brethren, while treating secretism with no favor, to be careful against introducing undue discussion of it into their pulpit ministrations, and not to indulge in untimely allusions and flings against it without presenting proofs, as an injudicious and intemperate handling of this subject tends to irritate and to repel from our meetings and influence, rather than to convince and reform.

THE NIAGARA COUNTY CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Proceedings of the Niagara County Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, at its Semi-annual Meeting in the Baptist Church, in the Village of Wilson, SEPT. 5 and 6, 1876.

In accordance with previous notice the above Association convened in said place on Tuesday evening, September 5th.

The meeting was called to order by the President, H. F. Laughlin. Exercises were opened by singing "Coronation," and prayer offered by the pastor of above church, Rev. Mr. Packwood. The President then introduced to the audience Rev. J. L. Barlow, of the Baptist connection, and State Lecturer of Michigan, who spoke on the origin and religion of Freemasonry.

After some introductory remarks, the speaker proceeded to prove by the highest Masonic authority, such as Mackey, Sickels and others, that Masonry, notwithstanding its wonderful pretensions to antiquity; claiming among its ancient worthies, John the Baptist, King Solomon, Hiram Abiff, etc., and the great flourish of trumpets made by some of its clerical defenders concerning its existence from time immemorial, really had its birth in a grog shop in London, June 24, 1717; that for several years it made little progress because its originators were of so low and disreputable a character that but few were found debased enough to join them in their secret midnight orgies, or desired to associate with them in a common brotherhood; that its religion, when divested of its show of mystery, is pure theism, and claims to be able, through the wonderful purifying power of tools, as the square, compass, gavel, etc., to purify its members' hearts and consciences and fit them for the Grand Lodge above, and that, too, without the aid of Jesus Christ, the world's Redeemer.

After the lecture the meeting adjourned to meet the next day at 10 A. M.

WEDNESDAY.—Meeting called to order by the President and opened with singing and a season of prayer. C. Swick and T. Allen were appointed a committee on finance. After the transaction of business appropriate and timely remarks were made by Rev. C. C. Eggleston, pastor of the F. M. Church, Lockport, and the President.

The opening exercises of the afternoon were followed by an address delivered by the lecturer, Bro. Barlow, on the Relation of Masonry to Politics, its methods and manner of working by which it has obtained nearly all the places of profit and power in the Government. He then appealed to Christians of all denominations and every one else who loved their liberty and manhood, to unite to expose and thus crush this secret despotic power, that boasts of 500,000 adherents in the United States, and actually has 10,000 well drilled and armed men, not only ready but sworn to do its bidding; and who hold their allegiance to Masonry as superior to that of the government under which they live. What does it mean? Why all this military preparation? Why this midnight drilling of men? We would naturally suppose Masonry would be satisfied with holding nine-tenths of the offices in the land. But did you ever know a miser to be glutted with gold or the despot to be satisfied with power? Neither will Masonry be satisfied until it rules our nation with tyranny the like of which the world has never seen, and opposers like Morgan have been silenced by death.

The evening meeting was called to order by the President. Prayer by Rev. W. Jackson, pastor of the F. M. Church, Wilson. Subject this evening "Obligations of Masonry." After showing from their own authority what Masonic oaths and obligations are the lecturer then clearly proved from the Bible that an intelligent Mason (that is one who has read Masonic literature, and knows what Masonry really is) cannot at the same time be an adhering Mason and a Christian. Also that every Mason when he takes the oaths they administer forswears himself and is therefore commanded in the Word of God to confess his sin.

The lecture was listened to attentively by a full house. The able and fearless manner in which Bro. Barlow handled the subject proved him to be the right man in the right place. Indeed the time has come when it requires Christian courage and nerve to publicly grapple with this secret, unseen foe to civil and religious liberty. When Christian men are afraid, not only to speak their sentiments in public, but even to have Masons know that they are opposed to their order, and so much so that they dare not treat their brethren from abroad with common hospitality while attending an Anti-masonic convention in their village, is it not about time that Christians of boasted free America rise in their might and by the help of God destroy this secret inquistorial oligarchy.

Maquoketa Meetings.

Maquoketa, Ia., Oct. 17, 1876.

Perhaps it is not my business to report, but I would like to say a few words briefly for the good work. A wonderful thing has happened in Maquoketa. A thunderbolt has fallen. It struck hard and unexpectedly. The people are awake and astir for miles around. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Mr. Ronayne was here on the 9th and 10th and such a skinning alive and tearing in pieces and holding up to public view as the Masonic lodge received I did not expect to see. That man Ronayne is a wonder. I can account for it only in this way: He is God's man and God works by and through him.

On Monday the large hall was full and he held them quiet for four hours. On Tuesday night the hall was jammed full, standing room and all, and men stood there almost motionless for five hours, sometimes still as death, sometimes uproarious with applause; not a hiss, not a groan, not an unkind word. Masonry was struck dumb; the Antis are jubilant, the craft are ferocious. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." The women understand it. The boys in the streets understand it. Every body understands it. The power of the Beast is broken in this town.

Now friends of this reform get Ronayne; by all means get Ronayne to lecture in your town. First secure a large hall if possible. Don't put him into a meeting house if you can help it. He must have room to work the lodge. Then raise a little money to pay expenses; get every thing ready, then send for Ronayne and the Lord will bless your labors.

O. C. Stoughton.

The Storm Gathering in Minnesota.

On Monday evening, October 9th, Rev. J. M. Snyder, of Illinois, gave us a lecture. He stated and defended the following proposition: "Masonry has no right to exist."

The points which he urged in proof and illustrated at lenght with a telling force, characteristic of the man, were:

1. Masonry is a disturber of the peace.
2. Masonry strikes at universal brotherhood.
3. Masonry rejects Jesus Christ.
4. Masonry is a religion—not that of the Bible—hence idolatrous.
5. The absolute monarchical character.
6. Masonry garbles the Bible.
7. The idolatry of the lodge is of the meanest kind.

We expect the cauldron above referred to will boil over when Ronayne comes. However the wood is all cut so I suppose it will have to boil. Respectfully,

E. G. Paine.

A Glorious Victory at Morrison, Ill.

Dear Cynosure: Mr. Ronayne met his appointments promptly at Morrison on Oct. 18th and 19th. The first evening was pleasant; Library Hall well filled; order and attention good; the craft well represented, while Ronayne worked the Entered Apprentice degree. The audience looked aghast at its foolish, sacrilegious performance, while the craft scowled. On Thurday evening, though rainy, the hall was well filled, when Hiram was raised on the five points of fellowship. Some of his points brought the house down with cheers

Mr. Ronayne, on his way to the depot, met a prominent citizen, who remarked, "I was in last evening and heard your lecture and expose." "How did you like it?" asked R. "I liked it well. You gave it correctly; just as I received it. I know all about it; I have taken the Royal Arch Degree." I think that we have won a great victory in Morrison. O. S.

A Word from the Wisconsin Convention.

Delavan, Wis., Oct. 16, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Expecting others to give you an account of our State meeting here last week, I wish to add that the Masons and others are expressing their indignation at the outrage, and anxious that the matter should be brought before the legal tribunal. Please give this demurrer all the weight it deserves.

The meetings have greatly enlightened and developed public sentiment; there is more willingness to talk and read, and numbers want more lectures. From the time Mr. Baird put in the breaking plough until Mr. Blanchard's cross-ploughing, and from then until Mr. Stoddard's dragging, progress has been slow and uncertain. But now that Mr. Ronayne has pulverized the soil, we feel to thank God and take courage. Let the seed be sown plentifully and cultivated faithfully and prayed over earnestly, and may we not wait believingly for an abundant harvest?

It was urged in our meeting that if we were able to take but one paper that it should be the Cynosure.

Now would it not be a greater inducement to Sunday-school workers and families to do this if the amount of Sunday-school matter and the children's departments could be increased and enlarged?

Truly yours, J. F. McKee.

Past Master Ronayne's Letter.

Morrison—Ames—Delavan—Masonic Ingatitude.

Dewitt, Iowa, Oct. 20, 1876.

Friend Kellogg:—As you will see by my heading I am back again on the war-path in Iowa and temporarily resting at the house of Bro. Smith on my way towards Iowa City and West Branch in Cedar Co. I left Morrison, Ill., this afternoon, having worked the third degree there last evening and the Entered Apprentice degree the evening previous, and I must confess that for a people who are in full possession of such a very good commodity as Freemasonry the Masons of Morrison are an exceedingly inconsistent and unreasonable body of men. Just think of it, I went to Morrison for the express purpose of instructing the people of that town in the true principles and doctrines of the "Ancient Craft," and strange as it may appear the Masons not only did not thank me for it but got quite angry and called me some pretty hard names. This singular conduct on their part appears to be the more inconsistent when we consider the sentiment expressed in the following quotation from Robert McCoy's General History of Freemasonry, page 298. "There is that latent in Freemasonry which makes it exactly the institution most needed in this age. But to be an effective agent in elevating and advancing man to a more perfect condition the sense of its mysteries must be better understood by Masons." Now then what have we got here? What does the celebrated Bro. McCoy desire to teach us in the foregoing extract? That Freemasonry is an exceedingly good institution, that it is in fact so good that it is exactly the institution most needed in this age and that if the sense of its mysteries be better understood it will advance and elevate man to a perfect condition. This is exactly what is needed, this is just what we are all earnestly seeking after; perfection is the good we all aiming at; to be perfect is assuredly a something hitherto unattained by man and if Masonry is the institution most needed in this age and withal an institution that elevates and advances man to a more perfect condition here below, then most undoubtedly it is the duty of every Freemason to see to it that a thorough knowledge of this celebrated system of moral ethics be extensively circulated through the entire length and breadth of this land and in fact throughout the whole earth. Then of course being "exactly the institution most needed in this age," it must necessarily follow that women, girls, boys, old men, black men, crippled men, deaf men, dumb men, blind men, poor men and especially criminal, wicked men and women ought to be admitted, and doubtless will be, to the incalculable privileges and benefits of this wonderful institution; and any man who leaves his home, his family, his business, his comforts and goes out through rain and in sunshine, through foul weather and in fair to spread knowledge of this glorious, "elevating," advancing moral machine and thoroughly instructing all classes of the people both rich and poor, great and small, black and white, maimed and whole,—I say the man who does this ought to be looked upon by Bro. McCoy and the rest of the Masonic fraternity as one of the greatest if not the greatest benefactors of the age. How is this, brothers, do you thus regard me for striving with such earnestness and at so much personal inconvenience to scatter broadcast all over the country a thorough knowledge of your divine institution and to explain in their fullest and deepest sense the nature and meaning of your wonderful mysteries? You do not! Well, then, I must candidly confess you are a set of very ungrateful fellows. You must be supremely selfish to keep or try to keep so good an institution all to yourselves and not even let your wives, sisters, mothers, daughters, or even your aged fathers know the least thing about it. Just think of it, friend Kellogg, I went to Ames in this State on the 19th of last month and worked the degrees of Masonry thus spreading a knowledge of the craft among the hundreds of people, men, women and children assembled to hear me, and the Masons, headed by a little picayune editor, called me all sorts of bad names. I went to Delavan, Wisconsin, on the 11th of this present month; travelled many miles of rough railroad; was fatigued and weary and on that evening in the presence of about one thousand people worked the Entered Apprentice degree,—and what do you think but the Masons got quite angry over it and would not even so much as say "thank you, sir, you are indeed doing a noble work. Masonry is good and it ought to be more extensively known."

On the evening of the 12th I worked the Fellow Craft degree and illustrated fully a knowledge of the seven liberal arts and sciences as ex emplified by Freemasonry and still the Masons were angry and kept on getting worse and worse until the evening of the 13th, when I worked the third or sublime degree of Master Mason. I confess I used my very best skill in this performance. I moreover explained the principles of the Ancient Craft thoroughly and truly. I demonstrated beyond a doubt that Masonry rejects Jesus Christ and that every man joining the institution must of very necessity deny him; that all the ceremonies of the institution are heathen, in every respect being an exact representation of the Osirian and Eluesinian mysteries, that every part of the Masonic obligations from first to last are in direct conflict with every duty we may owe to God, our country, our neighbor, our family, ourselves; that every man who becomes a Mason is sworn to lie and must from the very nature of the case utter a wilful falsehood when speaking to an outsider of Freemasonry should he stictly adhere to his obligations; that he has sworn away his own life, although it was not his to give; that he has sworn to maintain and support the constitution, laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge and of his own lodge, whether right or wrong; that he has sworn positively under certain contingencies to become the assassin of his neighbor, his friend, his brother, or even of his own father; that he has solemnly sworn to shield the criminal from justice, if that criminalbe like himself a member of the glorious institution of Freemasonry; that in fact Freemasonry is a pre-eminent moral institution, forbidding adultery only with the female relatives of its own members, and not even with them if the immaculate and impeccable brother does not know them to be such. All this and more I faithfully and at considerable length demonstrated to that large audience assembled at Harmony Hall on the night of the 13th inst., to the evident delight and satisfaction of all, but the Masons themselves, ungrateful wretches! The only thanks they gave me was to pelt me with pieces of stove-wood and fresh eggs.

But I am determined with God's help to keep right on. Bro. McCoy and Bro. Mackey and the Voice of Masonry, know more about all this business than those little pinfeather Masons who live away off in our rural towns and who are not yet out of their Masonic leading strings, and inasmuch as McCoy, Mackey & Co., are of the opinion that "Masonry is exactly the institution most needed in this age and that its mysteries if better understood will assuredly elevate" and "advance" man "to a more perfect condition," it is the plain duty of the Cynosure to publish, and my duty to go out into the high-ways and hedges and disseminate Masonic knowledge and explain Masonic principles to all classes and conditions of men, women and children.

News of the Week.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—Russia on Thursday informed the Powers that she had no objection to a clause being added to the six weeks' armistice, providing that it might eventually be prolonged if required by the state of negotiations. This clause, to be only permissive, and to fix no term to the prolongation; but the latest information is that Russia has all but consented to make the first prolongation one of six weeks and obligatory. The German Government, which was first informed of Russia's concession, has already expressed its adhesion, and recommended other powers to do the same. It is thought that Russia's action will be influenced by a desire to disarm the suspicion of Enrope.

In Constantinople the conviction grows that Russia is not seeking a pretext for rupture, but is making a serious effort to bring about an arrangement which will allay the excitement of the Russian people, and at the same time establish Russian ascendency in Turkey on a solid and permanent footing.

—A telegram from Vienna reports that Prince Auersperg, President of the Austrian Council, declared that Austria's policy was, above everything, to maintain peace. Consequently any aspiration toward the acquisition of foreign territory was out of the question. Count Andrassy would continue to resolutely strive for the maintenance of peace, and the amelioration of the condition of the Christians in Turkey.

—The liberal newspapers of Berlin are almost unanimous in their vigorous declarations against the establishment of Russian power in the Turkish provinces. The Volks Zeitung urges the propriety of placing the reforms under the English instead of Russian control.

Correspondence.

OUR CENTENNIAL LETTER.

The drums beat, and martial airs fill the ear as the Republicans one day and the Democrats the next, rejoice over Ohio and Indiana, respectively, and each party congratulates itself on its prospects of victory and takes but little notice of the candidates who most fully embody the principles upon which the very foundations of our liberties are based. Whatever may await the names of Walker and Kirkpatrick as candidates, they will at least hold a high place in the esteem of those for whom they are the standard bearers Let every supporter of Walker and Kirkpatrick act not for an immediate harvest, but rather to break up the fallow ground, and to plant the seed hopefully for the future.

From this Centennial tower we have spied afar the pilgrim ship laden with her precious freight, and again see her start forth on her voyage. Let storms assail her, she is steered in safety. Let her captain and crew manifest their courage, and they are rewarded with great success, and their passengers shall emancipate tens of thousands from a thraldom of the moral and intellectual nature, in comparison with which merely physical slavery might be regarded as a blessing. If a tax on tea caused a rebellion, what shall occur to set aside the tax on tongue, the loss of free speech, and to loose the captive conscience, and restore their Bible and Christ undimmed? Why should the control of the great nation be surrendered to secretism? Must it be so, that Jesuitism or Masonry are destined to reign over us? Freemen of every name, the insidious foe is among you and it would be a blessing to the future of the nation that you should at this time give your serious attention to the claims upon your suffrages of Walker and Kirkpatrick as President and Vice-president of these United States.

Since I wrote, your exhibit here has been visited by people from all directions. I wrote you several friends have sent you contributions direct to Chicago, as the Superintendent interpreted the rules so that accepting them here would be like an infringement upon the rule concerning sales. It is, however, of no great consequence I fancy, and I may state that the Supt. Gen'l. of the Main Building has shown us every courtesy, and acted as a perfect gentlemen. We receive orders and subscriptions for the Cynosure and for the other publications of which we have pleasure in sending you occasional proofs.

I was sorry to hear that the German Evangelical Zion church in your city has a strong body of Masons in it, although they do not yet control it.

A hearty friend broke in upon a chat with another man with the tremendous assurance that "Masonry is the work of the devil," emphatically reasserting, "and I believe it." He approved of the yellow tracts or leaflets issued from some eastern office.

Three men, two Masons, the other an Anti-mason, but a member of another secret order. He however heartily condemned Masonry. He is an active Baptist, and you may expect to hear from him from an eastern province of Canada.

I have just had a call from the Rev. W. O. Tobey of the Religious Telescope, and Rev. J. S. Mills, who require no encomiums. I have a number of names such as Rev W. J. Betts, Baptist of Mc Lean, N. Y.; J. P. Dysart, U. P., Ohio, to report as hostile to Masonry, because of its incompatibility with Christianity.

I must notice the visit of the Governor General of Canada, Lord Dufferin, a gentleman of very popular manners, and those who have read his voyage into High Latitudes know that he is not an effeminate aristocrat. He has returned from a tour through the great country on our north, and in his position as representative of the British Queen, has shown admirable qualities. Philadelphia has done herself honor through her prominent citizen John Welsh, Esq., in giving such a reception to him at the Academy of the Fine Arts last Saturday. Lord Dufferin has ever shown the same spirit to American guests in Canada.

Speaking of this province, a Montreal friend, a reader of the Witness, gave hearty expression to our principles. Quite a number of the enquiring sort, look, take tracts, and go, no doubt many of them to ponder at home over the truths they contain. Truths—lies—yes, one or the other; and just as I was writing these last few words a gentleman came up, and said, "Do you remember me?" "Yes!" "Well," said he, "I submitted your statements to a most devout clergyman in the city and he pronounces them utterly false." "In what? would you specify?" "That Christians are required to deny the Saviour!" "Favor me with the name of the reverend gentleman." "No." "Will you return? Shall I see you again?" "Yes." So off he went.

E. P. Hammond, the great evangelist, has just past—gone before I knew his name. I pointed him to Milton's Bible.

A Baptist minister from Maine used to be opposed to Freemasonry, but is now a Mason. "No, it is not a religion." Wonder if he prays in the lodge! Wonder what passage of Scripture justifies him in being an oath-bound brother in a fraternity which fellowships infidels, towards his Christ. Wonder if he shall become like a former Free Will Baptist who told me to-day that he did not believe in God; and, alas! another of the same class soon after came up, who had a Methodist mother, and had tried to "get religion," but did not. He could not join the Masons, but favored spiritism! I fancied this last one honest, and he admits that if one can believe in the Heavenly Father as he is manifested in Christ, it must be very comfortable, the most so of any faith. Poor souls, do they prefer the arctic regions to the summer zones? or the husks which swine eat to food in their Father's home, when the bread which feeds life eternal may be enjoyed in abundance?

I had the pleasure of giving pamphlets, &c., to a Lutheran minister. A candid Mason, an M. E., with the keystone at his vest, accompanied by two ladies, halted. On being shown Mackey, he acknowledged frankly the teaching, and the genuineness of the book, although he confessed that he had not so seen the matter before.

Almost immediately succeeded another who, in challenging Ronayne's truthfulness was met by the fact that he himself was not entitled to so much confidence as Ronayne inasmuch as the latter was free to tell the whole truth, and he was yet oath-bound! He was caught, and actually trembled as he tried to assail Ronayne. Nor would he admit even Mackey as evidence. Poor man, he was greatly exercised as he passed off, others remained to hear some of Mackey's teachings, showing his impardonable offense of "wilfully and deliberately and with malice aforethought" cutting out the all-important words, "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" from the extract, professedly correctly made, from the Thess. iii. 6. It has been not the least pleasant part of our time here, when ladies have shown an intelligent appreciation of the work and the principles at stake. And so it was on this occasion. A Baptist lady had unobserved heard the remarks and gave kindly congratulation and encouragement in the right.

A gentleman from Mass., who had renounced Masonry, believed that God had blessed him increasingly ever since. An M. E., was on hand when another was conveying distrust concerning those who renounced, and so invited him to a quiet aside talk, willing to give reference, &c., and destroyed completely even this poor consolation to the defeated man. Shall we hope that he may also renounce?

Next a verdant gentleman, who had not been long a Mason, and like one in the honeymoon, was quite enamored at the painted old hag which he imagined as "a thing of beauty," and "a joy forever." Perhaps one of the pleasures of the visit of Bro. Mattoon to the Centennial may be to have had this specimen surrender to him. He had not got properly cured as a Mason; not enough saltpetre in his pickle.

It was a pleasure to find the Supt. of Education in Newark, N. J.. Mr. Sears, an opponent of secretism.

October 19th.

The Masonic ghost which has been glaring at your case daily watching a chance for a pretext to interrupt the good work made his probably final assault yesterday by asking if I took subscriptions to the Cynosure. I answered, "I'll take a subscription from you if you like." He then ordered the case locked up and put me to the trouble of going to headquarters a couple of times and caused the delay of an hour or two. Our good brother Hebbard, of the Bible Society, interested himself in my behalf, and the case was only shut up an hour or two. After a statement of the case to the head official (Capt. Hodges) I left with the assurance that the petty official (my Masonic ghost) would be instructed as to my rights. As I turned to leave the office there he stood with eyes glaring at the escape of his prey. And so I go on again with colors flying.

I have had pleasant calls from Mr. Stone of Illinois, Rev. Foreman, Free Methodist, and others; and many very interesting conversations with Masons, some of whom are sick enough of the order, but I cannot attempt to give an outline of it now if ever.

October 21st.

I was very agreeably surprised by a visit from Philo Carpenter this morning, whose munificent donations and noble labors in this reform need no commendation from me. Soon after I received a call from another friend of the cause quite as well known to the Cynosure readers and especially its publisher, accompanied by Ezra A. Cook, Junior, a bright little fellow of a year and a half, who may in after years be very proud of having visited the great Centennial Exhibition. It would be a precious legacy to such future citizens of the nation to have a Centennial group of the portraits of the veterans of this reform, and judging from the specimens of manhood's noblemen that I have seen here I think they would compare favorably with the great collection of Prof. Fowler.

It gives me great pleasure to find that not a few candid men who have been drawn into the order and have neglected to investigate its character are astonished when shown by standard Masonic books that it professes to be a soul-saving religion, without Christ and mutilates the Scriptures to expunge his name, and some of them unhesitatingly declare that they have visited the lodge for the last time. On the other hand it is sad to find men who seem so infatuated with the order that they are not able to reason on the subject in a common-sense way.

A Royal Arch Mason who asserted that Freemasonry was Christianity, tried to maintain the assertion by declaring that Confucius was the author of the principles which Christ adopted and therefore Christianity as well as Freemasony existed before Christ. This sample of imbecile reasoning came from a man of respectable appearance who proved himself capable of believing in the solar system without the sun.

A young gent undertook to prove the fallacy of your tract concerning Washington's neglect of the lodge. He showed me an extract from a Masonic record in a neat little pocket pamphlet to show Washington's approval of Masonry, and he reasoned thus: "Your tract has reference to Washington's connection with the English lodges, but what of his standing in the American lodges?" Thus it is that the plain import of even Washington's letter cannot be admitted by Masonry.

Several contributions have been offered which were declined, but some at once enclosed their offerings to you direct. I have had the pleasure of meeting John Torrance of Mich ; Mr. Morrison of N. Y.; Rev. Mr. Garland, Maine; Mr. Leach of N. J.,and one,a farmer, declined to give his name, but declared he was for the right and as he parted reverently said, "God bless you." You have good friends in such names as Slosson of N. Y., a young relative of Bro. Post, Bushey of Pa., Beggs of Pa., &c.; Stone of Ill. &c.

I met a minister from the West who had heard Ronayne. He said it was such tomfoolery that he wondered how any sensible man could continue in Masonry. He had often been asked to join the lodge—it was nonsense to say they don't ask—and all expenses would be paid for him. Thus are preachers caught, but this gentleman could never see any use he had for it. May we not desire such men to do more than this? Is there not danger to young men from their silence?

The Presbyterians have had a gala day at the Centennial, and erected a magnificent statue of that staunch Scot, the Rev. Dr. Witherspoon of Princeton University, so celebrated for his stirring speeches and encouragement in the interests of the Revolution. He entered Congress at the age of fifty-four years, preached as opportunity offered, was an able writer on divinity, and helped by his judicious advice to make the Constitution of the United States. His death took place at the age of seventy-three after some years of blindness during which he continued to preach from memory. Surely a worthy subject for the monument which shall perpetuate his name and services.

It may be regarded as a curious fact that 150 cart loads of sweepings are gathered daily from these beautiful walks which appear so clean to the multitudes who daily enjoy them.

The Seceeders List.

Eds. Cynosure:—Some gentleman at Ashley, Ohio, on one of my printed slips headed thus:

"Give the name and post-office address of all out-spoken seceded Masons of whom you have knowledge on this slip, and return to J. H. H. Woodward, Cincinnati, O.", has filled out a list as follows,and sent me, without signing his name thereto, and I am unable to ascertain who he is. These are the names and addresses reported:

J F Doty, Ashley, O.
Joseph Dixon, Ashley, O.
L Starr, Bennington, Morrow Co. O.
George W Rosevelt, Ashley, O.
Albert Gardner, Bennington, Morrow Co. O.

I send you this list for the gentlemen herein named, or some of their friends, to respond to and say, whether they have once been Masons and seceded, or whether they are simply Anti-masons, never having been initiated into the mysteries of the order.

In quite a number of instances I have received lists with names thereon, as if the parties had once been Masons and renounced the institution, but on probing matters have found that such parties had really never been Masons, but were Anti-masons only.

The importance of the seceders' list is not properly appreciated, or a greater and more determined effort on the part of the friends of the Anti-masonic cause would be put forth to make the list as large and universal as facts would warrant in the case. In this connection I will call attention to a point not perhaps often thought of why this effort should be made and persistently continued until crowned with a grand success. Suppose that in the course of time, a hundred or more suits-at-law arise in as many different localities throughout the conutry,between Masons and non-masons, wherein the obligations of Masonry are offered and proven in open court so as to show a community of interest so thoroughly concerted and existing between the members of the fraternity as to disqualify them for service on bench and panel, and that the points of these obligations after they have been thus offered and proven, are in each instance argued at length by counsel in open court, what must be the ultimate effect on every such community where a cause is thus tried? Does any one doubt? Every such suit would be worth more than a hundred different Anti-masonic newspapers in developing and spreading Anti-masonic sentiment and light, and spreading the cause with an impetus beyond definite calculation. The public look at facts. The obligations of Masonry proven in open court is something the fraternity could not get away from nor lie out of. It is a matter which above all earthly things they do not wish ever to see happen, and yet the very thing that should claim the attention of the entire outer world, and frequently occur in order to throttle Masonic subversion of justice. Look at the State canvass just closed in Ohio. See how the Masonic sheets all over the State howled at Milton Barnes, the Republican candidate for the office of Secretary of State, for having at one time introduced into the Ohio Legislature a petition praying for a law to be passed to make Masons, Odd-fellows and other secretists ineligible to service on bench and panel on the mere challenge of a party to a suit not a member to a secret society who should happen to be joined in an issue with a party who was. Observe, too, how that petition was smothered in committee and no bill ever reported. The only difference between such a law and the existing statutes of Ohio, is this: under present laws, in order to get rid of Masonic judges and jurors the obligations of Masonry must be offered and proven and a community of interest between Masons therefrom shown to exist of extent sufficient to bar for favor or partiality. Under the law proposed it would have been unnecessary to prove the obligations, a mere challenge for membership being all that was necessary. Yet these society men, controlling the Legislature of Ohio, and who claim their respective institutions never subvert justice, would not put on the statute books of the State a law to prohibit that which they say never happens, though a large body of the public claim to know that it does happen, and that every day of the world! Arrest the power of Masonry in the courts and you break her back, and this fact the craft well knew. Barnes is elected, though by a majority considerably below the average of his ticket. Whether he was cut by Masons for having introduced the petition above alluded to or by Antimasons for denying the fact and the part he took in the transaction, the undersigned has no means of knowing outside the city of Cincinnati. His name was scratched in this city, by at least two hundred Masons. He probably suffered loss to some extent from both sides through the State. He is the only candidate the undersigned voted for in the State election, endorsing the following words on the ticket deposited: "I vote for Barnes because he introduced a petition against Masons and Oddfellows in the Legislature—so says the Inquirer." The Masonic judge who took the ticket deposited it in the box, muttering that "the charge was not true, or he would fling Barnes higher than a kite." I retorted that "it was true or Barnes could not get my vote," that "I always hunted the Masonic animal whether in the Republican or Democratic ranks, and that no Mason could ever get my vote." This ended our parley. If Barnes is recreant to principle for the sake of office, it only proves in an additional instance the unreliability of human nature.

But this matter is a slight digression from the purpose of my communication. Let attention be paid to the seceder's list and good results will follow. I have been informed that in no less than four suits already, in as many different States, steps are being taken to purge bench and panel of all that pertains to Masonry. This, if done, will involve the proving and arguing the points of Masonic obligation, and in each of these communities the outside public from sworn evidence in court will know what the obligations of Masonry are and also their infamous character. Let the ball roll and the light shine.

J. H. H. Woodward.

P. S. Several gentlemen have suggested the propriety of giving names and addresses of good and reliable Anti-masonic lawyers throughout the Union, who should be employed in preference to Masons. Hubbel's Legal Directory seems to be a Masonic ring arrangement. Every lawyer whose name appears in that book is believed to be a Mason. Let the outside public beware of them, and all other lawyers who are Masons. Select only men of the profession who are not under cable-tow allegiance, and all will be well.

Notes and Observations.

Seemly, Ill., October, 18, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Yesterday, being in Milford, quite an intelligent young man introduced himself to me and said in a few days he should want an Exposition of Masonry, remarking that I had a few days before given him a tract on the train; thus illustrating the benefit of circulating our tracts. As I keep a standing advertisement in a local paper for the sale of expositions of Masonry, Odd-fellowship and the grange, as a result the postmaster at Milford ordered Morgan of me for a young man who contemplated joining the Milford lodge, and who wanted to "look before he leaped." The result is it saved him from the lodge. The postmaster (deputy) remarked that the young man got from that book all he wanted of the lodge, but he declined to give the young man's name as he did not want to be known. I inferred that this young man had even sent up his petition; at any rate it saved him from the lodge.

If there is any hole or moral quagmire in this section it is this self-same F. and A. M. lodge in Milford. A season hardly ever passes but the community or town is stirred to the bottom with some social scandal with leading lodge-men as principal actors—yet nearly all the Methodist ministers who have been preaching here of late "meet on the level and part on the square" with these brethren."

A Mr. Patterson, quite an intelligent colored gentleman and barber at Hoopeston, but whose home is at Attica, Ind., reports himself a Mason, and indirectly admitted the truthfulness of the exposures with regard to Masonic chastity, and even went so far as to defend it. Mr. Patterson also remarked that during the war his brother belonged to a colored regiment, and being out with positive orders to spare none, as their needs were urgent; but coming to one house where the men were all absent, and seeing a Masonic book on the mantle, inquired whose book it was. The lady saying it was her husband's, and that he was a Mason, they gave the lady money and ordered nothing to be disturbed. Suppose that if in every house which they entered a Masonic book had been on the mantel, then, so far as Masonry had cared, our army might have starved. But in those houses where Masonic books were not to be found, provisions were no doubt taken without mercy to make up for what they should have taken at Masonic houses. The non-Masons were virtually robbed, and yet in the face of positive orders to spare none! The Masonic law and usages sets every other law, both human and divine, aside, and is therefore treasonable in every sense. How long before the American people will see the necessity to shave this great wart off of the body politic?

Ronayne Sustained.

This is to certify that I was regularly initiated as an E. A., passed to the degree of F. C., and raised to the Sublime degree of M. M. in Marshal Lodge, U. D., Marshal, Minn. I have witnessed the work of the degrees as given by Mr. E. Ronayne at Delavan, Wis., during the State Convention, held there Oct. 11th, 12th and 13th, where he worked the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry, and I cheerfully testify that such Masonic work as performed by him was literally correct, being just as I received it in Marshal lodge.

John T. Trenary, Belmont, Wisconsin, writes:

"Being a reader of the Cynosure and a warm friend of its cause I thought I would write to you and let you know of my willingness to do what is in my power to help forward the American cause. As to the American platform I like it, and to its friends I would say, Away with secretism and God speed the American cause"

A friend writes Bro. Stoddard in reply to a letter respecting lectures in his county seat:

"Things are all quiet here. I do not think it is just the right time to stir up the 'monster,' as Mr. ——— the master of the lodge is gone and there would be more danger of violence when he is away. We discovered in the Sunday lesson yesterday that the same spirit that urged on the mob that stoned Stephen is in the lodge to-day. They could not withstand the arguments he brought forward to convince them of their errors any more than the lodge can withstand the arguments brought against them, and their resort is to violence."

Is it true that anywhere in this nominally free country an American citizen is compelled to depend upon the protection of the "master" of a secret lodge while exercising one of the dearest rights of a freeman? Where are our laws and those appointed to enforce them? Are they all sworn into secrecy and silence so that "cowans" are simply compelled to take the place of suppliants and receive from the hands of "worshipful masters" their rights or go without them? Americans should look to this matter before it is too late.

Mrs. O. Vorce, Alden, Ill., writes:

"I would almost as soon do without my daily bread as without the Cynosure. It grows better every week."

W. S. May, Clarence, Cedar county, Iowa, writes:

"Anti-secretism is gloriously progressing in Iowa."

E. Darling, Point Creek, Mich., writes:

"I have just made a journey of some two hundred miles to Newaygo county, Michigan, where I traveled seventeen years ago as a Wesleyan missionary. It was then an almost unbroken wilderness. * * Hesperia, a flourishing little village, has sprung up on White river, where seventeen years ago was but one log house. Here conflicting religious sentiments prevail. The Methodists have a small house of worship here; Baptists and Materialists or no-soulites, grangers, and to keep things in good running order the Masons are in the ascendant. * * I am no more opposed to Masonry now than forty years ago, but I want the paper; it is my weapon to meet the foes of God and man with. I am alone in this struggle; the indifference is truly amazing, but I shall soon leave the conflict, for I am eighty-one years old."

Albert Tuttle, Maple Rapids, Clinton county, Michigan, writes that Odd-fellowship books are in great demand there.

D. B. Turney, Butler, Richland county, Ohio, writes:

"My good wife assists me in the distribution of Anti-masonic literature. We are sowing the seed of a future glorious harvest, and go fearlessly into the work setting up our banner in the name of the Lord."

Her husband also and he praiseth her.—Prov. xxxi. 28.

W. B Gardner, Elyria, Lorain county, Ohio, writes:

"I lived in the days of the Morgan murder and heard a Royal Arch Mason say they had put him where he would tell no more tales. I am a renouncing Mason of three degrees."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson XLVI.—Nov. 12, 1876.—Saul's Early Ministry.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ix: 19-30. Commit 20-25. Primary verse, 20.

19 And when he had received meat he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

23 And after that many days were fulfilled the Jews took council to kill him:

24 And their laying wait was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him.

30 Which, when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY. NOV. 2, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

The Sullivan Murder Trial.

Alexander Sullivan, an Irish Catholic, went to the house of Francis Hanford, principal of a high school, demanded that he should retract a certain paper; and, on being refused, assaulted Hanford, and in the melee drew his pistol and shot him dead. The public generally concur with the statement of Col. Van Armin, one of the prosecuting counsel, after the trial was over and the jury had disagreed: "It was a cold-blooded murder, without one mitigating circumstance."

The jury on the first ballot stood eight for acquital, two for murder, two for manslaughter. One man alone finally held out against the eleven, and so the jury disagreed, and Judge McAllister has given Sullivan his liberty on $8,000 bail. Dr. Dyer, the quandam abolitionist, was first on the bail bond.

The conduct of McAllister on the bench, was disgraceful in the extreme; and the court-room at times resembled an Irish row. O'Brien, counsel for Sullivan, was formerly of Peoria, and in an extensive revival professed conversion, and we believe, joined for a time a Presbyterian church there. He seems now nearly or quite demoralized, vulgar and abusive.

Twelve hundred members of the Board of Trade, as soon as the result was known, signed a petition requesting McAllister to resign and leave the bench. As the Sullivan and Hanford quarrel sprung at first from the struggle to remove the Bible from Chicago schools, public feeling was for a time influenced and colored by that fact. But the progress of the trial seems to have sunk every other consideration but the one, that justice has been outraged, Chicago and the country disgraced, and human life cheapened and made insecure by the assaulting and shooting a civil, quiet, and respectable citizen in front of his own door by a man who went there armed with the weapon with which he killed him; and backed by his brother, and his wife who stimulated the quarrel.

Whether McAllister will resign remains to be seen. The juryman who stood out to the last for convicting, was brow-beaten and threatened with personal violence in the jury-room, by members of the panel, and by the gang of ruffians who infested the court. His name is F. J. Berry, a native of Maine; and jury trial is not a failure as long as such men can be found for jurors.

Huxleyism, or Science Falsely So-called.

The latest champion of that haughty science which despises the Bible, has recently visited this country and spoken at Buffalo, Nashville, Baltimore and New York; and he thus sums up his teachings concerning our globe and its occupants, vegetable, brute, and human. We extract from the printed lectures.

Mr. Huxley says his "hypothesis of evolution" "supposes that at any given period in the past we should meet with a state of things more or less similar to the present, but less similar as we go back in time: that the physical form of the earth could be traced back in this way to a condition in which its parts were separated as little more than a nebulous cloud making a part of a whole in which we find the Sun and the other planetary bodies also revolved, and if we trace back the animal and vegetable worlds we should find, preceding what now exist, animals and plants not identical with them, but like them, only increasing their differences as we go back in time, and at the same time becoming simpler and simpler, until, finally we should arrive at that gelatinous mass, which, so far as our present knowledge goes is the common foundation of all life."

Stripped of his dreamy and entangling verbiage, this scientist tells us that our globe came from a "nebulous cloud;" and its plants and animals from "a gelatinous mass." But where, or what, or by whom the "cloud" and "mass" came from he does not deign to inquire; has no opinion. It might for ought I see be the chaos of the Bible. Now idolatry is a doctrine as well as a fact; a theory as well as practice. And such false science is the theory of idolatry. One gets rid of God by substituting an idol for him; and the other by ignoring his existence, defining his laws and landing us in a "nebulous cloud;" that is to say, in fog. But the point we make is that these hypotheses of science "falsely so-called," are the creeds of false worship, and work to the same end, viz: to dispense with the true and living God, and set aside his Word. Under their influence there was a time before Chalmers when it was said, every scholar in Scotland was an infidel, and every peasant a Christian.

Rev. Le Roy Hand.—We have received an interesting call from this excellent brother, a graduate of Wheaton College, and now pastor of the Congregational church in Polk City, Iowa. He is an excellent and efficient pastor, and a consistent and conscientious Christian; one whose ministerial influence is wisely and fearlessly given to the cause of reform.

Rock River M. E. Conference.

This body met in the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, October 11th. Some years since, when it consisted of two hundred and sixteen preachers, one hundred and ninety-three were Freemasons. The numbers now we cannot give. The preachers who are members of the lodge become more sby and secretive as the lodge grows unpopular. Dr. Goodfellow, while stationed at Wheaton so effectually concealed his lodge membership that he was not known as a Mason till he went to St. Charles. While at Wheaton he shunned Masonic funeral processions, and by contemptuous expressions concerning them, and by courtesy to Anti-masons, made the impression on many that he was himself an Anti-mason. As soon as he got to St. Charles he threw off the mask. He is now presiding elder of the Mendota District. The hypocrisy which the lodge thus breeds is fearful.

O. H. Tiffany, who read a Christless, written prayer, which he held up in the crown of his hat when Andrew Johnson and the lodge laid the corner-stone of the Douglas monument, was chairman of an important committee; and many prominent Masons were equally prominent in this Conference. Thus while the lodge rules and runs the Conference, the only allusion to it in the minutes is the following contemptuous allusion to a brother: "J. Hawkins had departed to some kind of an Anti-masonic church."

Before Finney and others had revealed Freemasonry there was some excuse for ministers entangled in the lodge. Now they have no cloak for their sins. They know that hundreds and thousands who look on them know that they are under oath to conceal the crimes of Masons; that they have been stripped, knocked down, fooled over and raised from the dead by a mixture of fun and blasphemy; that they are unequally yoked with unbelievers in the lodge where they practice a Christ-dethroning worship. Can it be that these men suppose that God or men are blind to their sin and shame?

A Visit Among Old Friends.

I have just returned from a meeting of the old Galesburgh Association, now "Central West," Ill., whose cradle was rocking here in the prairies thirty years ago, when I first came to Knox College. The meeting was in Roseville, a rightly named village on the R. I. & St. Louis road, twelve miles out from Monmouth. A few of the pioneers are left. Spencer, Parker and others are gone "across the river, while Wright, Miles, Bascom, etc., are in distant fields. I went down to preach a quarter-centennial sermon for the Roseville church. The pastor, Rev. I. D. Wycoff, and his amiable wife, both graduates of Knox College, have done a good work for Christ there, and the church is in a sound and good condition. Their children, an interesting family, walk in the piety of their parents, and all but the youngest are members of the church. Thirty years ago what is now Roseville was a green sea of grass. Dea. William Dilley, then lately from Pennsylvania, lived in a prairie cottage, and often started, after night, to carry escaped slaves some thirty miles across to Galesburgh, on their road out of the United States to a land of freedom. Now the United States is a land of freedom; and I found Deacon Dilley in a tall and handsome farm mansion, still in health and vigor, surrounded by children and grand-children, taking from his shoulders the burden of cultivation on the homestead or with farms of their own, "rising up and calling" their grand parents "blessed." His barns, his cellar with separate apartments for milk, vegetables, etc., piles of beautiful apples, separated according to their kinds; his short-horn and graded stock; these all, with more than I can enumerate, kept crying aloud in the silence of my thoughts, "Blessed, blessed is he that considereth the poor." This Deacon Dilley was hated and maligned as an 'abolitionist" then, but he "considered the poor," and the haughty worldling professors who despised him, or their children, may now eat bread at his table. Mr. John A. Gordon who went there later, with the same principles, is a notary public and principal business man in the village, and pillar in the church. The good Deacon Tuttle, still living two miles out, his heart growing young in the cause of reform all the while, came to me for Walker and Kirkpatrick tickets, an unpretentious prairie prophet and seer, he sees so clearly that Freemasonry or free government must go down, though he hates the party of secession and rebellion, he will vote as he prays, while Republicans vote as they shot in the war, and, four years hence, "Republicans" will be "Americans," and the aliens, of the lodge, like prairie-wolves unearthed, will lear and look the other way when in the society of men.

But I must not forget the "godly women." Grandmother Dilley, I found the same as when thirty years ago. She thought as husband acted, and she insisted, caring less for her danger than for his, in taking a night ride by his side up to Galesburgh, once in a while, in front of the wagon, while the trembling fugitives, mothers and babes often among them, nestled under the wagon-cover behind. Her woman's instinct, feeling, perhaps, though not in the shape of words, that her husband, while she was along, had less to apprehend from slave-hunting Democrats on the road. It is not wonderful that guardian angels are pictured in the shape of holy and quiet women.

In my historical sermon for the church and the Association, I did not forget the history of Congregational action against the idolatry of the lodge. I gave Dr. Edward Beecher's language at Ottawa, in his report to the State Association in 1867, where he says: "By it (i. e. the lodge) Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted," and had the satisfaction of seeing a good set of ministers back the strong utterance by their looks of approbation. Only think what a storm that report of Dr. Beecher would produce if read in the Moody tabernacle, and in a meeting where men are seeking salvation by Christ, whose name is cut out of Scriptures cited in the lodge! Only think of Mr. Moody being surrounded and aided by Methodist Masons, who exalt Christ in the tabernacle, and to use Dr. Beecher's words, "dethrone" Him and "exalt Satan" in the lodge.

Mr. Moody is a hero, and, what is far greater, a Christian. In Philadelphia and the New York Hippodrome, he declared God's word explicitly against Christians and unbelieving Freemasons being "yoked together." Yet the Rock River Conference, which is run by Freemasons, lately, by formal vote, invited Moody and Sankey to lead their conference prayer-meeting, thus forcing light and darkness into fellowship to aid the M. E. Church. "Doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? And shall he not render to every man according to his work?" My sermon was requested for publication and may be inserted in the Cynosure soon.

SECEDERS' LIST.—Friend Alex. Needels of Sparta, O., corrects the list published Oct. 19th. Of those names Louis Powers, Marcus Phillips, Peter Doty, Alex. Needels, and John Manville never were Masons, they are better than that—outspoken opponents of the lodge. Friends forwarding names will please take care to have it correct. Send on the names, and be diligent in collecting them and in making seceders to swell the roll of honor. Address the office editor of the Cynosure, H. L. Kellogg.

—The Agent and Secretary has gone to attend the two Pennsylvania Conventions and other meetings at the East. He will soon have something to say for our Carpenter building fund.

—Rev. A. H. Springstein writes that pastoral duties in his new location will prevent his accepting many invitations to lecture, and thinks that his name cannot honestly remain on the list. We remove it reluctantly and we hope but for a short season.

—Bro. Hinman is now in Wis. He lectured lately in Dundee and Carpenterville in this State.

—Friend Leggett of Watson, Mich., sent a brief note of Elder Barlow's visit to that place and speaks highly of his labors for the reform.

—In a letter to the Gen. Agent Bro. Moffatt of Albion, Iowa, says that a spirited meeting was held there lately and new names added to their local organization. The sifting process is going on in the churches, and one hypocritical seceder has been shown up to the people. A large and enthusiastic canvass nominated a local American ticket last week.

—Pres. Grant has issued his annual proclamation appointing Thanksgiving day. It falls this year on Nov. 30th.

—Bro. Needles keeps the ball rolling in Missouri. Following the conventions and nominations made two months ago, he, with other friends has arranged a series of campaign meetings beginning at Higginsville, Gentry county, October 24th. Addresses for the American local, State and National tickets were appointed, followed in the evening by an Anti-masonic lecture, and this plan to be followed up till November 4th, in Alanthus and eight other towns of the county. Such work deserves success and we believe it will be achieved in a large measure.

—A friend signing himself "K," with no post office address given writes for a number of books. If he will send full name, etc., the order will receive attention.

—The glimpse of sweet fraternity offered by the Cincinnati Commercial's Ohio Grand Lodge correspondent on our second page will be reviewed next week. We have long desired some description like this of "color" fight among the Freemasons of that State.

THE CONNECTICUT CONVENTION report did not reach us in time for publication this week. Bro. Conant wishes the friends in that State to know that a political meeting was also held and the following electors nominated: At large: J. A. Conant, Calvin Hatch; 1st Dis., Philip Bacon; 2d, I. J. Gilbert; 3d, George Buck; 4th, Miles Belden. As the candidates on the State ticket of the Prohibition party are opposed to Freemasonry it was thought best by the Convention to adopt that ticket.

Religious Intelligence.

—At the late meeting of the Fox River Union of Congregational ministers a report was given of the late State Convention at Jacksonville, and a resolution adopted deprecating the lodge system.

—Roupell, a member of the British Parliament, who was sentenced for forging a will to a long imprisonment, has just been discharged from Portland Prison; during the last years of his confinement he devoted himself to missionary work in the prison and will probably continue to work as city missionary.

—The revival meetings are having a good effect in at least one direction. Rev. Mr. Herford, a Unitarian clergyman, objected to Mr. Moody's preaching about the blood of Christ and placarded the city announcing a reply. Thus the truth is felt. At the temperance noon meeting more than a score of men remained for private conversation how to be rid of their vicious habit. Mr. Moody's child being sick he did not attend the meetings on Monday.

—The Rev. Edward Hitchcock, pastor of the American Chapel in Paris, estimates the present number of Protestants in France at 800,000. Last year $400,000 were spent in France by Bible, Sunday school and missionary societies.

—Mr. John Tyler, Jr., a son of ex-President Tyler, has become a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

—The Chinese Recorder says there are 436 missionaries in China, of which 310 are women. Of the 100 missionaries in Japan, forty-four are ordained, four are medical, and fifty-two are women.

—Fifty years ago there was not a native Christian in the Friendly Islands. Now 30,000 regularly meet for Christian worship, and pay $15,000 a year for religious objects.

—Sixty years ago there was not a solitary native Christian in Polynesia. More than three hundred islands of Eastern and Southern Polynesia have now abandoned idolatry.

The articles in the National Sunday School Teacher for November which relate to the lessons are "Paul," by Rev. Chas. F. Deems, D. D., and "Clean or Unclean," by Prof. J. T. Hyde, of the Chicago Theological Seminary. Prof. W. S. B. Mathews, who is a recognized authority on music, contributes a spicy article on "Sunday School Songs," which will be followed by another in the next month's issue. The lessons are full as usual, saving the teacher days of labor, by boiling down and putting into useable shape the information given in commentaries, Bible dictionaries, and encyclopedias, the most of which are out of reach of the average teacher. Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

COR SEC'Y AND GENERAL AGENT.—J. P. Stoddard, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

ASSISTANT COR. SEC'Y.—Mrs. M. E. Cook, 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Revival

CHRIST SEEKING THE LOST, ILLUSTRATED BY MR. MOODY.

I remember while in Philadelphia a man with his wife came to our meetings. When he went out he wouldn't speak to his wife. She thought it was very funny, but said nothing, and went to bed thinking that in the morning he would be all right: At breakfast, however, he would not speak a word. Well, she thought this strange, but she was sure he would have got all over what was wrong with him by dinner. The dinner hour arrived, and it passed away without his saying a word. At supper not a word escaped him and he would not go with her to the meeting. Every day for a whole week the same thing went on. But at the end of the week he could not stand it any longer, and he said to his wife: "Why di you go and write to Mr. Moody and tell him all about me." "I never wrote to Mr. Moody in my life," said the wife. "You did," he answered. "You're mistaken; why do you think that?" "Well, then, I wronged you; but when I saw Mr. Moody picking me out among all those people, and telling all about me, I was sure you must have written to him." It was the Son of Man seeking for him, my friends, and I hope there will be a man here to-night—that man in the gallery yonder, that one before me—who will feel that I am talking personally to him. May you feel that you are lost, and that the Lord is seeking for you, and when you feel this there will be some chance of your being saved.

When I was taking my family South last Summer, I heard of a man who would not go to church, but would go to a theatre. He was a hard case—he was a drinking, swearing, gambling man. He heard that a minister was going to preach in a theatre, and he went. When he heard the preacher talking the man was convinced that he was preaching at him, and he went out swearing and stamping, and told all the people outside that he had been insulted by the minister, and he intended to wait for him and give him a good licking. When the minister came out he was seized by the collar and the man greeted him by saying, "Why, sir, you have insulted me." "I don't know you, sir," said the minister. "Why," replied the man, "you have picked me out among all those people, and told them all about me." It was the Spirit of God seeking him, and the result was that the Spirit got hold of him, and lately I heard of him, and he was going all through the South, telling the people what God had done for him. And, my friends, to-night, if you believe in your hearts that you are a great sinner, it is the Son of God who is after you—who is seeking for your lost soul."

BLIND BARTIMEUS.

In Major Whittle's sermon on Blind Bartimeus, occurred the following striking passages:

In the story of Bartimeus we have just the way recorded of getting blessing from God. In the first place we have got to want the blessing. Bartimeus felt his need, and that is the first step in his getting sight. He knew he was a blind man, and was thus led to cry out to Jesus to give him sight. It didn't need any argument to convince him he was blind. Down in Arkansas, at a blind institution, I saw several blind men, some of whom were born blind. If you asked them what color so-and-so was, they would have answered you, and if you asked them how they knew they would have said, "the teacher says so," and if you asked did they believe what he says they would have answered, "Yes." Ask them what eyes are for? "To see." "Can you see?" "No." "How do you know then, eyes are for seeing?" "I believe other people can see, but we are blind." So this Bartimeus was blind. There might have been a good many blind men there who might have held a convention and have said something like this: "Whereas, We can't see; we have no use for what people call eyes. We hear other people talk about these things, but they can't prove it to us;—Resolved, therefore, that there is no such thing as sight; that to call the sky blue and grass green is a delusion, and we stamp it as such." Such a resolution would be perfectly consistent, just as much so as for infidels in Chicago who have never seen any of these spiritual things to resolve that, because they have not realized them, there is no such thing. Bartimeus could not be affected by such an argument. He believed God made eyes to see, and if he could not realize the beauty of the sky and the landscape, he knows that a great calamity has come on him; he felt it and wanted relief from it.

The scene is just a picture of what the dispensation of the Lord is. Jerusalem was the city of the king and Jericho the city of the curse. As Jesus was going up to the city of the king he stands still in the city of the curse and invites the sinner to come to him. So to-day, in the day of grace, he demands his disciples to call sinners to him before he goes to judgment. Ah, brethren, so it is—God works through us, his instruments, and we by our conduct, are charging sinners to hold their peace, and the Lord rebukes us and commands us to go and bring these sinners to him, as he did at that time. How quick they are now to go to him. They say now to Bartimeus, "Be of good comfort. Rise; he calleth thee." Now, what is Bartimeus going to do? Jesus was standing still. The thing, therefore, for him to do was to obey the command, and he did. We read that he arose and came to Jesus. His garment hindering his coming, he had to throw it away. So to-night there are garments hindering Christians from being consecrated to God – they neglect family and secret prayer; they get into habits and society they ought not to be in. Here you are called to cast away these things and come to Jesus. There are sinners here who cannot come to Christ because garments hinder them. Some of you have the garment of morality, and think you can climb to heaven without reference to the atonement of Jesus. The command is, "Come to Jesus." And, dear friends, when Bartimeus cast aside his garment Jesus stood still. So with us to-day, there is no use in talking to sinners about salvation until we first make them believe there is a blessing for them. Then that garment becomes worthless. Bartimeus cast it away and arose and came to Jesus. He might have said, why not Jesus come to him? Many a Christian is saying, "Why don't the Lord fill me with the Holy Spirit?" Dear friends, you are to obey him—to consecrate yourselves to him—to throw away your garments and come to him. Many a sinner says, "If the Lord wants to save me, why not save me in my house—why go down to that meeting of Moody's?" Although this meeting—these things in themselves—can't save you yet you must be ready to give up everything in order to get the salvation, you have to place yourselves in the right attitude towards God to get his spirit. There is no mystery here to-night to the sinner or to the Christians as to how they may be blessed. It is very simple indeed—turn from your sins seek the Lord and receive the blessing. O sinners, O Christians, Christ would not give us this blessing if it were not in his heart to do it. He would not come into this work if he were not going to bless Chicago. O look at Jesus waiting for the blind man and saying when he came forward, "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?" The blind man answered, "Lord, that I might receive my sight." Jesus says, "go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole." O, my friends, when his eyes were opened, there was but one way for him to go. I don't believe he went home or to his business, I believe he just followed Jesus."

The Home Circle.

Cross-Wearing.

The following is a noble protest of Dr. Bonar against the use of the Cross as an ornament:

I am crucified with Christ—
With Him nailed upon the tree;
Not the cross, then, do I bear,
But the cross it beareth me,
Solemn cross on which I died,
One with Him, the Crucified.

Shall I take that blood-stained cross,
Cross of agony, and shame,
Cross of Him who fought my fight,
Cross of Him who overcame?
Shall I deck myself with thee
Awful cross of Calvary?

Shall I drag thee through the crowd,
'Mid the laughter that is there;
Whirl thee through the giddy waltz,
Bound upon my neck or hair!
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I make that lowly cross
Minister of woman's pride,
Drawing eyes to me that should Fix upon the Crucified?
Awful cross of Cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I call this glittering gem,
Made for show and vanity—
Shall I call this gaud a cross,
Cross of Him who died for me?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Family Prayer.

The grand infirmity of family prayer, or of what is sometimes called family religion, is that it stands alone in the house, and has nothing put in agreement with it. Whereas, if it is to have an honest reality, as many things as possible should be soberly and deliberately put in agreement with it; for, indeed it is a first point of religion itself, that by its very nature it rules presidingly over everything desired, done, thought, planned, and prayed for in this life. It is never to finish itself up by words, supplications, or even by sacraments, but the whole customs of life and character must be in it by a total consent of the man. And more depends on this a hundred times, than upon any occasional fervors, or passionate flights, or agonizings. The grand defect will in almost all cases, be in what is more deliberate, viz., in the want of any downright honest casting of the family in the type of religion, as if that were truly accepted as the first.

See just what is wanted, by what is so commonly not found. First of all the mere observance of a kind of piety, that which prays in the family to keep up a reverent show or acknowledgement of religion is not enough. It leaves everything else in life to be an open space for covetousness and all the gay lustings of worldly vanity. It even leaves out prayer, for the saying of prayers is in no sense really the same as to pray. Contrary to this there should be some real prayer for the meaning's sake, and not for the shell of religious decency, in which the semblance may be kept. This latter kind looks, indeed, for no return of blessing from God, but for only a certain religious effect, accomplished by the drill of repetitional observance. There is also another kind of drill sometimes attempted in the prayers of families, which is much worse, viz., when the prayer is made every morning to hit this or that child in some matter of disobedience, or some mere peccadillo into which he has fallen. Nothing can be more irreverent to God, than to make the hour of prayer a time of prison discipline for the subjects of it, and nothing could more certainly set them in a fixed aversion to religion and everything sacred. This kind of prayer prays, in fact for exasperation's sake, and the effect will correspond.—Dr. Bushnell.

What Discontent Does.

This is a monster that is creating terrible devastation with human happiness. Being invisible, its advances are unperceived until it has effected so firm a lodgment that all efforts to exercise it are unavailiug.

Its field of operation is large, embracing nearly every condition of life. It enters the cottage of the laborer and embitters his toil. It is found in the home of the wealthy, where it renders unenjoyable the blessings of wealth. Under its influence the kind husband becomes morose and irritable; the loving wife peevish and complaining. Wealth loses its desirableness and poverty becomes unendurable. Single life is dull, and matrimony galling and intolerable. Labor is irksome and idleness is purgatory. Young man, do you feel a certain vague dissatisfaction with yourself—your position—your finances? Are you envious of some one who who has surpassed you in some particular? Beware! These are unmistakable symptoms of discontent. Alter your circumstances if you will, but do not sit down and brood over supposed ill usage at the hands of fortune.

Husband, shut, bolt and bar every avenue by which the terrible monster may enter your thoughts; for if discontent get posssession of the remotest corner of your heart, he will not rest until he has routed every vestige of domestic felicity. If you are poor, energetic effort will remedy the evil. Discontent will add nothing to your bank account, but will make your poverty doubly burdensome.

And you, young wife, allow me to suggest the importance of your giving no place in your heart to this foe to your peace of mind. Is your position an humble one? Adorn it. Are your burdens heavy? Discontent will add to their weight an hundred fold. Is your husband depressed and inattentive to you? You will agree with me that discontent affords no remedy. Try a little kindly, cheerful conversation. Remember that a smile has far greater power to dispel gloom than many words of chiding or complaint.—Selected.

Impatience.

The eager desire to press forward, not so much to conquer obstacles, as to elude them; that grumbling with the solemn destinies of life, seeking ever to set success upon the chances of a die; that hastening from the wish conceived to the end accomplished; that thirst after quick returns to ingenious toil, and breathless spurrings along short cuts to the goal, which we see everywhere around us, from the Mechanic's Institute to the stock-market—beginning in education with the primers of infancy, deluging us with "Philosophies for the million," and "Sciences made easy;" characterizing the books of our writers, the speeches of our statesmen, no less than the dealings of our speculators, seem, I confess, to me, to constitute a very diseased and general symptom of the times. I hold that the greatest friend to man is labor; that knowledge without toil, if possible, were worthless; that toil in pursuit of knowledge is the best knowledge we can attain; that the continued effort for fame is nobler than fame itself; that it is not wealth suddenly acquired which is deserving of homage, but the virtues which a man exercises in the slow pursuit of wealth—the abilities so called forth, the self-denials so imposed; in a word, that labor and patience are the true schoolmasters on earth.—Bulwer.

Prayer-Meeting Hints.

Sit near the front.

Hold sacred the evenings of your prayer-meetings.

"Boil it down." A great deal can be said in three minutes.

Welcome strangers who drop into the meeting. A kind word to such has often done great good.

Did you ever hear any one complain that the prayers were "too short" in a prayer-meeting?—Sowing and Reaping.

Faith and obedience are inseparable in the life of the Christian, just as in a web warp and woof are inseparable.

Old-fashioned Proverbs.

"If you knew what age would crave,
Youth would then both get and save.

He that would thrive must rise by five;
He that has thriven may lie till seven.

In the same case to others do
As you would they should do to you.

An idler is a watch that wants both hands;
As useless when it goes as when it stands.

One to-day is worth two to-morrows.
By doing nothing we learn to do ill.

Standing pools soon fill with filth.
All habits gather by unseen degrees.

All brooks make rivers; rivers run to seas.
Pay no moment but in purchase of its worth."

Teasing.

My nephew Harry is a boy brimful of fun and life. He keeps things lively in the house, and there is usually some laughing to be done when he is around, but he has one trait which I wish was not quite so prominent.

He likes to tease, and he contrives to do it in some way almost all the time. Sometimes it is his elder brother whom he annoys so much that his presence becomes perplexing. Sometimes it is his elder sister whose good nature he imposes on until she half cries with vexation, but most commonly it is his younger brother. Fred is a fine little fellow, bright, but extremely sensitive, and so peculiarly liable to be excited by anything that annoys or perplexes him.

The other day when I was at brother John's house, I found Freddie standing by his mother's knee with traces of tears on his face, and a look of trouble that touched me. When we went out his mother told me that it was the old story—Harry had been teasing the child till he was all worried and nervous, and had come crying to her for comfort. One thing which he had said and which she repeated made a deep impression on me.

I have brought it to bear on Harry, I hope for his good. "Mother," said Freddy, "I have lately been trying hard to control my temper." It was said so earnestly and sorrowfully, that it brought tears to her eyes. It was a revelation of a battle that the little fellow was waging within his bosom.

A day or two after I had a talk with Harry, and it was somewhat after this fashion: "Harry," said I, "I wish that you had seen and felt what I did a little while ago."

"What was it, uncle?"

"It was a bright little fellow whom you love, standing beside his mother with tears in his eyes and a troubled look on his face, and telling her of a trouble that he had, and a fight that he was fighting."

"Who was it, Freddy? What had he been fighting about? What was the trouble?"

"Yes, it was Freddy, and I guess you had a good deal to do with this trouble and his fight."

"How, uncle, could that be? I am sure that I wouldn't make him unhappy or spoil his fun."

"Well, perhaps you didn't intend it, but I am afraid you did both these things. Don't you remember, day before yesterday, when you were teasing him about his boat, making all sorts of fun of it, how angry he got and finally went off crying to his mother?"

"Yes," said Harry, smiling, "I remember that, but I didn't intend to make him cry."

"But he did cry, and felt badly enough to put his head on his mother's shoulder and sob. But there was one thing which he said that I wish you had heard. It was, 'Mother, I am trying to control my temper.' Can you imagine, Harry, why he said that just then?"

Harry looked a little embarrassed, but replied, "I suppose he meant that I had been trying his temper."

"Yes, that was undoubtedly his meaning. But you say that you had been trying it. Was it trying to make it better?"

"Not much," said Harry, laughing.

"But don't you think it was a fine and brave thing for little Freddy to do when he tried to get the better of his temper? And don't you think that it was a little, just a little mean and unkind in his big brother not to help him, but even to make it harder for him to do it?"

"I suppose it was. But I didn't think of that."

"I know that, and it is just the reason why I am talking to you about it. If you saw Freddy in trouble, and oppressed by bigger boys on the street, you should be the first to turn in and help him. But any difficulty he might have there will not compare with what he has in his own bosom, and to make himself better. You ought to help, not hinder him there too."

"I only teased him for fun. I didn't think of hurting."

"Just think a moment. Didn't the fun begin when he began to get angry, and didn't it culminate when he got so enraged that he kicked at you, and finally ran off crying to his mother?"

"Yes," said Harry, laughing, "I suppose so."

"And it was then after his crying was over and under his mother's kiss and caress, he had got calm again, that he said, 'I am trying to control my temper.'

"Now, Harry, you have been doing an ungenerous and even cruel thing. Here is a little fellow that wants to be a good boy, to be the Savior's child, to get the better of the evil within, who prays in his childish way for it, and you his brother, who love him, find your pleasure in pushing him back and down. Is that not sad, and something to be ashamed of?"

Harry's eyes filled with tears, and I did not press for an answer. I only added: "Harry, my boy, you are too good and noble to do willingly a mean thing. I am sure that you want to do all you can for your brother, and I know that you will hereafter help him. You will not try to get your pleasure out of his heart struggles, and out of his sorrow and tears."—The Christian Weekly.

Home and Farm.

A thick paste of strong gum-arabic, into which plaster of paris is stirred, makes an excellent china cement. Apply with a brush and let the article stand three days.

Preserve eggs by a quick dipping in boiling water, and packing in fresh salt, small end down.

To japan old tea-trays, scrub clean with soap and water and rottenstone, dry, and apply copal varnish mixed with bronze powder to the denuded parts. Set in an oven at about 300 degrees, until dry. Two coats needed.

Rub the buckwheat cake griddle with half a turnip, to make the cakes come off nicely. This is better than fat.—Scientific American.

Good Vinegar.—Take four quarts of soft water; add one pound of sugar, one teacup of good yeast. If the vinegar is required very strong, add more sugar. The more sugar the longer it takes to work.

Crab Apple Jelly. Cut out the blossom ends and quarter the apples, but do not peel or core them. Put into a stone jar, covered well, and set in a kettle of tepid water, with a block or small tin in the bottom. Let it boil thus nearly all day, leaving it in the covered jar until the next morning. Then sift through a colander, and afterward strain through a jelly bag. Allow a pound of sugar to a pint of juice. Boil the juice twenty minutes, add the hot sugar, stirring well, and let all boil up together two or three minutes. Some crabapples seem very dry, and require the addition of a little water to the juice.

Hogs Need Sulphur.—Whether hogs require sulphur as an essential to health, or whether it is sought by them as a condiment, may not be discovered. But one thing is true, they devour it with greed whenever it is to be found. It is for this purpose probably that they can eat large quantities of soft coal, which contains a large amount of sulphur. Perhaps this is the most economical method of supplying hogs with sulphur during the winter, when they require a good deal of carbon. But in summer it is best to feed it to them in substances which contain less carbon, on account of their producing less heat. Mustard is one of the best things for this purpose, and some of it should be sown in every pasture into which hogs are turned. If hogs are kept in, or are in small yards, it is well to supply them with the wild mustard that grows in the fields or highways, or to cultivate some of the better varieties for them. They will eat its flowers, seeds and stalks.

How to Keep Apples.—Mr. Ralliff, an old fruit-grower of Wayne county, gives us his method for keeping winter apples as follows: At the proper season, before they are fully ripe in the fall, pick carefully from the trees and bury them in shallow pits in the ground, covering them over with three or four inches of earth over that. He assures us that he takes them out the next spring, as late as May, perfectly sound, nice, and plump. He is particularly successful in this method with the russet. The freezing in winter seems to be a benefit instead of an injury to them. When good apples will bring from one to two dollars a bushel in May, it pays well to take this trouble in preserving them. It certainly is a less expensive plan for keeping a few hundred bushels than building a fruit house, and according to our friend's experience, it is quite as safe and successful.

THREE CHEERS FOR WALKER AND KIRKPATRICK!!

THE AMERICAN PARTY NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
JAMES B. WALKER,
OF ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
DONALD KIRKPATRICK,
OF NEW YORK.

The platform was revised and adopted at Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1875. It contains the following live issues:

1st. Christianity against infidelity and heathenism.

2d. A proper observance of the Sabbath.

3d Prohibition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

4th. The withdrawal of Masonic charters and prohibition of Masonic oaths.

5th. Civil Rights.

6th. Arbitration better than war.

7th. The Bible in schools.

8th. Monopolies discountenanced.

9th. A return to specie payments

10th. Maintenance of public credit: protection of loyal citizens; justice to Indians.

11th. A direct vote for President and Vice-president.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6 That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—Geo. Heaton of Iowa, an old soldier and seceding Mason, does not wish to fight single-handed, and writes about the Iowa electoral ticket. One has been nominated, and Bro. H. will find a goodly array voting for it on Tuesday next.

—Our able correspondence suggests nearly all that can be said for election day. Read it and every worker adapt the hints to his own circumstances.

—Give one day at least in four years to the reform, and stand at the polls with Walker and Kirkpatrick ballots and Anti-masonic tracts. You will be surprised at the result of faithful work in eternity.

PAIRING OFF.

A GOOD SUGGESTION FROM PROF. WHIPPLE.

WESTFIELD, Ill., Oct. 26, '76.

Let any anti-secrecy Republican who proposes to vote for Hayes, bargain with some anti-secrecy Democrat who proposes to vote for Tilden so that both may vote for Walker, thus strengthening the American vote and leaving the two rival parties unchanged. And by all means let every anti-secret citizen of Illinois vote our State ticket.

ELLIOT WHIPPLE.

Hundreds can do good service for the reform by acting on this hint.

TO NEW YORK VOTERS!

Your State law requires the ticket to be differently arranged from those issued from this office. New tickets will be sent to those who have ordered and paid for them. OTHERS must paste blank paper just above the names of electors; write at the top "ELECTORS." An inch lower down and just above electors' names write: "FOR ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES."

LAST WORDS BEFORE ELECTION.

Next Tuesday will see another great quadrennial American election. Let the last words of the Cynosure be to every Anti-masonic voter, Do your duty before God without fear or favor. Be of good courage and doubt not, for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." We urge again and for the last time the importance of maintaining our reform position and voting for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Professor Whipple gives us a good one. Follow it up and double the reform vote without infringing on any other issue. Unless some local paramount reason interfere by all means vote your State and local ticket where one is nominated. Watch the returns and report immediately to the Cynosure.

The controversy between Walker and Hayes has been carried on with spirit but without acrimony. It is a noticeable omission that none of our correspondents have advanced the claims of Tilden. We have not ignored the grave reasons presented by our Republican friends, yet believe, as Bro. Hiel Lewis put it, that so long as Freemasonry rules in our politics there can be no peace or reform.

Differ as we may on this point it does not follow that any one is going to follow his Republicanism into the arms of the lodge. About that system we all speak the same thing and shall.

The communications published in this number are such as seemed best suited to the time. Their authors will remember that all could not speak at once, and pardon any omission they may discover. There are yet a large number of letters on politics which are seemingly like desert flowers; their goodness seems wasted. Among these are letters against the American party movement by W. O. Nicklas, of Martinsburg, W. Va.; John C. King, Chase City, Va.; Jonathan Phillips, Coatsville, Ind.; Isaac Stearns, Mansfield, Mass.; and O. Wilbur, Vineland, N. J. Some of these withhold their approval only temporarily. On the other hand we have had to refuse Bro. J. C. Graham, of Viola, Ill.; E. W. Bruce, of Mich.; J. W. Raynor of Pa.; S. D. Greene of Mass.; Geo. S. Chamberlain of Mich.; E. Tapley of Miss.; D. S. McConihay of W. Va.; John P. Dops of Kan.; A. J. Sheridan of Mo.; J. A. Thomas of N. Y.; J. A. Gibson of Vermont, and Geo. Heaton, of Iowa. These letters have been read with great interest and would do service to the reform if they could appear seasonably.

We shall continue to publish political news during the month, so that the department will not immediately lose its interest. Nor must we allow the interest aroused during the past few months to subside, but turn it to other projects for pushing on the glorious work to which we have given our labors and prayers.

AMERICANS—NOT KNOWNOTHINGS.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Permit me to ask you through your columns to explain to your readers, Why the party who have nominated James B. Walker for President, and Donald Kirkpatrick for Vice-president, is called the "American Party?" Why this name "American?" I ask this question, because such designation causes every thinking foreigner to look at the party with suspicion. It is still fresh in the minds of many that the Know Nothing Party, a few years ago, appeared at first with the same name, "The American Party." Its theory being that America should be ruled by native born Americans; thus cutting off the foreign population. The fate of that party is recorded, and now if it is your design to take up the same principle you may expect every foreigner to oppose you. I do not, myself, believe this to be the idea of the name, but I have found others who did and yet in other respects favored the party and were in harmony and sympathy with its principles as enunciated in its platform. And believing that an explanation would do good, and that you would cheerfully make it, I write. A READER, D. J.

This question is natural to those acquainted with the history of the "Know Nothing" movement, but not with the principles of the present organization for political opposition to the lodge. The platform of the American Party keeps back nothing of its principles, and there is no anti-foreign mark in it.

The reason for adopting the name "American" may be best explained by reference to the arguments in the convention at Syracuse, where it was adopted. It was objected to there: because of its Know Nothing associations; that it was assuming that we were Americans and others are not, which might be untrue in the sense of allegiance to the government. The name "Free Americans" was suggested as more nearly expressing our position—as Americans unshackled, free from entanglements in societies hostile to the principles of our government and its religion. But the idea finally prevailed and was unanimously voted that since we do loyally maintain the principles on which our nation is founded and which are its glory, as opposed to the infidel and despotic lodge system, it was just that we should take the name. That of itself is a protest against the usurpation of our courts, legislatures and cabinets by the lodge. It was a marked feature of that discussion that the foreign born members of that convention favored the name most heartily. We are Americans! Pledged to uphold our free government, our free institutions and every precious liberty bequeathed us by our fathers in truth and purity.

A WORD TO ANTI-SECRET MEN OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Till very lately I have held myself free to vote the Republican ticket in case neither of the candidates proved to be lodge-bound, believing that grave living issues turn on the election of a Republican president. At last to my supreme mortification and disgust I find Hayes is still in the slime-pits of the lodge in order to "add daily to the number of his friends!" Is this a clear record? Oath-bound souls, bound to despotic rule, for president? I vote nay, so far as in my power. How a sound anti-lodge man can vote any other than the American ticket, as matters prove to be, is hard to see.

Some of our anti-secret men have been wheedled into the Prohibition ranks. What need of this since the American platform contains as good a prohibition plank as can be sawed out by the intelligence and benevolence of the land. Men or angels could make no better, and a more energetic band of temperance men don't live than the anti-lodge men. Why should they vote for the lodge-bound souls thrust upon us by Masonry to catch our noble temperance men?

Since neither of the parties can elect is it not more consistent for us to vote for as many of the "living issues" as we can, if we vote at all? Why vote for a secretist to represent our noble temperance reform? Do this and Masonry will respond, "So mote it be."

It is often said, "These mild orders such as Good Templars, grangers, etc., amount to nothing," while many who have been defiled by them, concede that they are contemptible and ridiculous. Though contemptible and loathsome to sincerity and mature reflection, they do amount to a great deal. We might look down with loathing contempt upon the potato slug and say, "You insignificant nuisance of a thing!" and walk on in indifference, thinking they may consume the foliage and stalk but they won't interfere with the bulb, the potato; but somehow Nature has her way of doing business even in the potato patch. Behold "small potatoes and few in a hill." The old R. A. winged bug drops the seed in Masonic style; the slug does most of the eating and sucking out the vitals of the plant till the blight of death spreads over the whole.

But for the Masonic spawn of Odd-fellowship, grangers and the legion progeny of the sublime, great, grand, ancient and honorable (?) bug, Masonry would to-day be a thing of the past. These minor orders upon which men are willing to smile and to apologise for are all that saved the day to the parent of all these clans from the grange to the Ku-Klux and the Mollies of Pennsylvania notoriety.

I cannot trust so important a thing as my ballot with a lodge-bound man. It is but one it is true, and so I must use it reflectingly in the fear of the God of nations. Had I thousands I might risk one, perhaps, for another party, but as it is money cannot buy it, importunity cannot gain it, nor threats and ridicule keep it back from the platform with all the planks in and all of them sound. Amen. NATHAN CALLENDER.

A Clear and Candid View of the Situation.

BY REV. GEO. CLARK.

OBERLIN, O., Oct. 26, 1876.

As to the wisdom of voting the Anti-masonic ticket next month, there is, as was to be expected, a difference of opinion, and we must not be discouraged if the vote is small. This I think is to be expected. If I mistake not the great majority of those heartily in sympathy with us against the secret den of iniquity reason somewhat after this way:

1. We have little hope of controling the election by voting the Anti-masonic ticket.

2. We cannot consent to commit the control of the nation to those who lately did their utmost to destroy it—the composite Democratic party made up of "hard and soft," Copperheads and "Ku-Klux," murderers of Republicans and their backers, Jesuit conspirators, the solid Catholic church under allegiance to a foreign prince, the whisky-ring, Tweed thieves, in short nearly all the worst elements of society with a less following of virtuous and truly loyal men led by unscrupulous politicians.

3. An Anti-masonic vote for President under present circumstances in the absence of numerous local organizations to work for it, and in the presence of present perils will be small and thus make a false impression as to the real strength of the Anti-masonic movement.

4. Our local elections stand on different ground. They do not embrace such vast interests and there we can make ourselves felt, and when extensively organized also in the presidential election.

5. We helped compel the Republican party to nominate good men who are not Masons. It is not therefore contrary to our principles to vote for them, etc.

These views will be largely held by many Anti-masonic friends.

On the other hand there are others who quite as earnestly believe that the best interests of the country require an open manifestation of the growing strength, principles and purpose of the Anti-masonic party and therefore will vote its presidential ticket. Now each of these classes are honest men and will act up to their own convictions of duty.

My only object in writing this is to express my earnest desire that the Cynosure will do what it can to keep those two classes good-natured toward each other, so far as it can, with special reference to future co-operation, sympathy and work. I have been absent some six weeks but so far as I have seen I have been greatly pleased with the spirit of the Cynosure on this point. The Lord bless and guide you.

The Last Shot.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote that every Mason guilty of the crime of murder shall be tried and hung.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote that every Mason guilty of the crime of robbery, perjury, or thievery shall expiate the some within prison walls.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote, truly, to "let no guilty man escape," even though he can give the talismanic signal and pronounce the Shibboleth of Masonry.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote that every Mason owing an honest debt and worth the amount he owes, shall be made to pay that debt nolens volens.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote that secretism is a crime, and shall be banished from the councils of the nation.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote to end all ring swindling, justice, perversion, and national, state and municipal stealing.

A vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is a vote to sound the death-knell of all lodge power.

The evils and curses of the hour, as they now exist will be continued pretty much the same for the advantage of Masonry in the continuation of either of the great political parties in power. These evils are about as onerous and serious now as they will be at any time within the next four years. It does not seem the part of wisdom to vote a continuance of present evils to avoid imaginary contingent ones which are apprehended to arise in the future. Neither the Republican or Democratic parties are adequate to any genuine reform. No party can be that is spell-bound with the curse of Masonry, and both these parties have this incubus resting upon them. The American party points out the only sure road to a permanent relief, and the restoration of sound morality and correct principles among the people. Shall we desert this party? Shall we throw our votes to the party which at the earliest possible moment under the lash of Masonic whip and the application of Masonic spur made haste to invigorate and vitalize the Democratic party by removing the political disabilities of Southern rebels and traitors and restoring to them political rights? Shall we sustain that party which has made Democratic ascendency a possibility? What good is to result to the un-masonic portion of the people of the United States by adopting a time-serving policy and voting Masonic art and craft into power.

"Let the ax be laid unto the root of the tree." Let us keep our eyes steadily upon Masonry, and with its disappearance will disappear every other evil now afflicting and distracting the American body politic. It is the root of all our disorders and woes.

In conclusion let us bear in mind that a vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick is an aggression upon Masonry, and that a vote for Hayes or Tilden is "hands off."

Shall We Support the Candidates of the American Party?

BY REV. J. P. RICHARDS.

Is the American Party one of right principles?

It seems to me this is the question for every Anti-mason to answer for himself, and to act accordingly. Great as my respect is for Father Preston, I must dissent from his advice to Anti-masons to vote for Hayes and Wheeler. Taking it for granted that the Democratic party was and is one of the most corrupt organizations that ever cursed our country, we will not attempt to show, for the fact is too clear.

But what of the Republicans? If it be denied that the Republican party is a mass of political corruption, then the fraud and corruption which have been disclosed, go for nothing. Admitting that the Republican party crushed out the Rebellion with the aid of thousands of good Democrats; enfranchised the freedman, and did many other good acts; are these sufficient reasons for supporting a party after it has become so corrupt that its stench almost equals Hiram Abiff?

For the space of fifteen years the Republican party has been in power, some of the time almost absolute; and yet that foul disgrace to the United States Government still remains in Utah. Is there power in this Government to put away Polygamy? If so, why has not the disgrace been wiped out? I venture to assert that when the American party comes into power, as it one day will, that Polygamy will be put away in less than thirty days from the time that our President takes his seat.

The fact is that members of our Congress, and some of the Cabinet, have been engaged too deeply in fraud and corruption, salary-grabbing and whiskey-rings to purify Utah.

But suppose that we all give up Walker and Kirkpatrick, and go with all our might for Hayes and Wheeler? Does not our good and aged friend know that Hayes and Wheeler would not be the Republican party? They cannot reform the Republican party. Besides, Hayes, it is well known, is a secretist, and Wheeler is not known to have any sympathy with us.

No, I think it is a good time to vote as we pray, let the case go as it will, whether Democratic or Republican candidates be elected. Let the country know that this warfare shall never cease until Masonry is laid on the shelf, a dried-up mummy, or laid in its grave with Hiram Abiff. Let the country know, once for all, that there are men engaged in this anti-secret conflict who will "never give up the ship," and that they can never be coaxed or driven to the support of men, who, if they even should sympathize with us, are too cowardly or time-serving to train in our company.

Bowensburg, Hancock Co., Ill.

Our Duty at the Polls.

BY REV. N. R. LUCE, CLYMER, N. Y.

We are soon to stand as American citizens in the highest and noblest place ever occupied by members of any government. The destiny of a nation is in our hands as suffragists, and if the two great parties in the field, bloated with lodgeism, corruption and rotten whiskey are to hold in untrammeled sway the future of this great Republic, what can we look for in the administration of civil law? Nothing but corrupt administration to succeed corrupt administration. To say that these political parties are rotten to the core is but expressing the conviction of every intelligent being, and repeating the history of these parties, and the responsibility of corrupt rule must fall on the supporters of corruption. Am I, as an American citizen, to be dragged to the polls and urged to sustain one of these masses of lodge corruption, simply for fear the other will succeed? Nay, verily, let them die, as die they ought, in in their polluted nests, but as for me there is but one path to tread, and that is to perform my highest pleasure, my privilege, my duty, let results and consequences be what they may. God and humanity require every American citizen with vote in hand to go to the ballot-box and there, without consulting anybody's policy measure, vote for God, truth, and humanity. VOTE THE RIGHT IF YOU VOTE ALONE, and never swerve from that standpoint.

When shall we begin to vote as we know we ought to, now, or a half century hence? We have already waited too long, entirely too long, and I do not propose to wait any longer. Now is the time, 1876. Let every vote tell for the right. The same cause that will keep any man from voting the American ticket this fall will keep him from voting it a year, ten or one hundred years hence. We are citizens, many of us Christians, and none the less citizens because we are Christians, but citizens of the highest order and noblest rank, because we stand radical in and upon reforms that are the nation's hope. The power that we have has been entirely too latent. Wake up! wake up! American freemen, lest our enemies bind us hand and foot. The enemy is now as fearfully subtile as his arch majesty can devise, and they shall be but straw, if we only do our duty and do it now. This war has but just begun. The minds of hundreds of thousands in the lodge and out of it have never given this question of reform a passing thought, and those favorable to lodge-existence have come to their favorable opinions by ideas conceived of the many good men in the lodge that are acting up to their acquired principles, acquired by habits of industry and honesty, the result of Christian parentage and faithful teaching, and are not visibly carrying out the demoniac obligations and vicious principles of the many rituals under which many of our noblest citizens have sold their "birthright" for less than a "mess of pottage." Oh! let us up and work for God, humanity, and the pure principles of our holy religion and our civil government.

Who Will Act?

BY G. A. BROWN, NEKOMA, ILL.

This important question urges itself upon us very forcibly at this juncture, for the time is hastening on when, if our heart be in this glorious reform, we will manifest it at the ballot box.

In my circle of acquaintances there are some who have been very Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $1.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH:

Translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

zealous in the reform movement; but, as the election draws nigh, they begin to lose their zeal, or, as it is sometimes expressed, "back down." They have not the stamina now to "go forward." Brethren, if you have espoused a noble cause, never back down; but if you have discovered that you have got on board the wrong craft, of course you cannot do better than to get back, as soon as possible, to the point whence you started, and start again. But the universal plea is, that if we do not support the Republican party, the Democracy will gain the ascendency and ruin to our Republic will be the inevitable result. Well now, brethren, this must depend on whether God is the Lord or not.

Some of the good brethren say they faced the cannon's mouth, in order to gain the establishment of the principles of the Republican party, and they cannot conscientiously vote against that for which they imperilled their lives. I am on the same boat, so far as taking up arms in defense of my country is concerned. I have always voted the Republican ticket, since I have been a voter. But the present political campaign finds a new and more desirable platform, inviting the patronage of all moral reformers. And the question is, Who will act in this matter of reform? I am an admirer of thorough work. Some might pronounce me somewhat ultra. But ultraism, I think, is what is wanted in the present crisis. Those who are so wedded to the old ruts that that they cannot forsake them for something better will not do for reformers. Now, as we said some months ago, through the Cynosure, we say again: We want men of stamina. Men who are not afraid that the Lord's hand is short that he cannot save. Men who are not afraid to do right and leave results with God.

I was once a Baal worshipper, and know something of the evils of secretism. I thank God for his grace that enabled me to break loose from the iron grasp of that cruel and remorseless tyrant, LODGEISM, by which I was held in meek submission, for many years. By the same grace of my Heavenly Father my lot is cast with the American party, and with it I stand or fall, the Lord being my helper. And now, brethren, who is on the Lord's side? If God be the Lord, serve him. Come, let us bring our prayers to the ballot-box; and God will surely hear in good time. But do not, I entreat of you, be so inconsistent as to ask God to destroy the lodge-power in our land, and then act in conjunction with that same power whose destruction you asked God to accomplish. Raise your hand and voice against the monster. Let neither the timidity of friends, nor the sophistry of the enemy dissuade you from your purpose.

Vox Populi.

The following extracts taken from a few of the many letters ordering tickets, will show the feeling of friends of the cause.

Rev. A. Shambaugh, Bear, Wis., orders tickets and says: "We expect to make a nice beginning this year, and after having begun will push the reform in time to come in a way that will tell for success and victory."

Hiram Preston, Linclaen, N. Y., orders tickets and says: "I may be alone in voting, yet there would be others were it not for party ties. One man said he would vote the ticket if he knew that Hayes would not be elected without him.

Alfred Osgood sends 25cts. for 100 tickets and says: "I voted alone in this town the last election. I think we will have twenty-five this time. Truth will ultimately prevail. The stone cut out of the mountain will continue to roll till it fills the world."

Rev. A. W. Curtis, Coldwater, Mich., sends 25 cts. for tickets and says: "I am anxious to vote at the November election so that I shall not regret it at the judgment of the Great Day. You will therefore please send me a few Walker and Kirkpatrick tickets for Michigan."

Rev. J. Excell, Limaville, Ohio, sends 25 cts. for 100 tickets and says: "I do not intend to vote any other ticket if I should be alone in our precinct. I must vote anti-secrecy."

S. Bingham, Newark, Ill., orders tickets and says: "I am in favor of the principles of the American Party with all my heart. I can't vote the Democratic ticket and I don't see how a man can pray for upright rulers and vote the Republican ticket."

Rev. C. T. Hussan, Assension, Ind., acknowledges the receipt of tickets, and says: "I shall vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I am the only man in the county that I know of that will vote that ticket. There are a number of Anti-masons here, but they are afraid to speak out. I shall vote as I pray. I fear we have far too many ministers that are milk-and-water on the subject of secrecy. They will pray, in the pulpit, for the downfall of error and go and vote to fasten it more closely because it is popular, or for fear that their bread and butter will be cut off. I pray God to hasten the time when Gospel ministers will speak in thunder tones long and loud against this monster evil."

S. B. Daniel, Summerfield, Ill., writes: "As I did last Presidential election, I expect to vote the American ticket clear through."

Hibben Cheyney, Waterloo, Ind., expresses regret that on account of his absence at the time of the State election he and others were unable to vote the American Party State ticket and order an additional supply of Walker and Kirkpatrick tickets for Waterloo, and also for the U. B. pastor at Butler, and closes by saying: "I shall do what I can to get up a club for the Cynosure, which is pounding the life out of the monster mischief-maker of the world."

E. Bryan, a student at Mount Union College, Mount Union, Ohio, to whom we had previously sent 50 tickets, writes: "I received the tickets which you sent yesterday. Glad to get them. There is a favorable sentiment manifested among the students here, and if you will send 50 more I will distribute them. We agitate in literary society, on the street, in the cars, etc."

Daniel Leggett, Allegan, Mich., orders tickets and says: "I am an Anti-mason of the old stamp. I am determined to vote a reform ticket if I vote alone: but I am in hopes to circulate a few of them in our own town and the towns adjoining."

Robert Berry, Carbondale Pa., pays for 100 tickets and says: "I intend to do all I can for the cause of truth. I have listed for life. That won't be long. I am almost seventy-eight years old."

James Shigley, Hart, Mich., pays for 100 tickets and says: "I will do my best with them and report to the Cynosure.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

The friends of Michigan will take notice that the second anniversary of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secrecy, will be held in the M. E. Church, Hastings, Barry county, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of December. The meeting to commence on the afternoon of the 6th at 2 o'clock. Hastings is easily reached, being on the railroad between Grand Rapids and Jackson. Arrangements are being made to secure a good list of prominent speakers and a pleasant time is anticipated. Arrangements have been made by the friends of Hastings to supply a home for all from abroad. Let every true reformer make it his or her business to attend for THEY will be expected. No excuse allowable but sickness.

By order of Executive Committee.

C. B. REMINGTON.

Fentonville, Mich.

Past Master Ronayne expects to return from Dodge county, Minnesota, about Nov. 18th, when he will make immediate preparations to visit Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, etc. Will all the friends East therefore who wish to have public exhibitions of Freemasonry given in their respective localities communicate at once with this office that Mr. Ronayne may make arrangements and set the time. He wishes to hear from all those who wrote before.

Topics of the Time.

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States has called the attention of Minister Cushing to the oppression of Protestants in Spain. Germany has already protested, and if our Government and Great Britain join in the admonition, and demand religious liberty from that Jesuit-ridden monarchy, it will be an act for which all Christians can add another psalm of gratitude to God on our approaching Thanksgiving day. The Alliance committee put the case on the grounds of simple justice in their appeal to the Spanish Minister: "In Protestant countries like Great Britain and Germany, where the Protestant religion is established by law, and in the United States of America, where the population is Protestant by a vast majority, the people who adhere to the Roman church are protected, equally with all others, in perfect freedom of their worship; and it is an obvious principle that the same right should be conceded to Protestants in Roman Catholic countries." It was this same justice that so roused the great Protector against the minions of Rome, who were filling the Piedmontese vallies with the horrors of persecution. The great Protestant nations can stand as firmly as he; while we have the satisfaction of knowing that their protest will be heeded without the threat of war Cromwell shook with terrible earnestness at the Duke of Savoy.

In his Thanksgiving proclamation the President's acknowledgment of the providence and guidance of God in the history of the nation must be rather unpalatable to such secularists as Drs. Patton, Speer, etc.; while all humble and pious people will be adding the proclamation to the number of things to be thankful for. They would add another if they could be assured the President would show a decent respect for the Day which has been set apart by that Almighty God for himself, instead of spending it in looking through the Centennial Exhibition as he did lately. The act was not only a disgrace to Pres. Grant personally in thus violating the regulations of the Exhibition almost universally approved by the people, but was a cutting dishonor to the nation. No chief magistrate of these States should allow himself such indulgence at the expense of national reputation.

To-morrow, the 10th inst., closes one of the greatest enterprizes of the century, in American estimation—the great Centennial Exhibition. For six months its gates have turned to let in a continually increasing crowd until the admissions have been numbered by the hundred thousand with a wonderful regularity. The profits have been, some time since, estimated at a million and a half or more, which the stockholders will probably get in spite of the provision accompanying the appropriation of Congress. In this as well as in almost every other feature American pride is satisfied in excelling everything of the kind yet attempted. The closing exercises are to be on an imposing scale, to correspond with the opening day, and Pres. Grant will formally shut off steam, put out the lights, and lock up.

As we go to press our great nation is deciding another quadrennial election, the close of a long struggle—in some places bitter and sanguinary, everywhere carried on with a partisan spirit tending to weaken the bonds of good neighborhood. It is well we do not have to pass through this storm any oftener than once in four years, and if the term was extended to six, eight, or even ten, the chances of benefit to the whole people would be worth more than a light estimation. It is impossible that the evil of this strife, and eager defamation, and exaggeration or depreciation of issues, resolutions and promises can be easily counterbalanced. The vast machinery of parties is as un-American, as it is powerful. If the poem of Whittier on election-day is true, our party system is most wretchedly false; for its "Grand Councils" and committees, ring within ring, have made the voter a mere cog in the wheels of the machine which grinds at the turning of persons like Chandler, or Tilden, or Morrissey, and last but not least, like Albert Pike.

Much as our indignation may be aroused against Turkey for the fiendish barbarity of her troops, it must not be forgotten that her real enemy, Russia, is not altogether perfect. No doubt the action of American missionaries in Turkey who have petitioned the German government to interfere in behalf of religious toleration in Russia, will cause some surprise among their friends here. But not more than a remarkable address lately given in Boston by Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, a returned missionary long resident in Constinople. Not without some inconsistencies in his speech he champions Turkey, and believes that the Moslem rule is preferable to the Russian, which is represented as akin to that of the Catholics in Spain. These gentlemen have certainly a personal experience to give weight to their words.

The Bible, read with a sense of the Lord's loving presence, and with united prayer for mutual blessing, brings the dew of heaven upon a family, and diffuses through it the spirit of heavenly love and kind consideration, which affects for good, even the physical being.

HYMN FOR THE CENTENNIAL.

BY SEWALL S. CUTTING.

Face by thy might, O God,
We sound thy praise abroad
In grand acclaim!
Through storm and tears,
Through dark and bloody years,
More than all strength that cheers
Was thy great Name!

So ever led by Thee,
Right on to liberty
Our fathers strode!
Their children owned thy hand,
And o'er our goodly land
Uncovered, reverent stand,
To worship God!

Free in the vows we speak—
Free in the laws we make—
Here freedom's seat!
Fair cities rise in might,
Fair fields the eye delight,
Truth free upholds the right—
O joy complete!

Rise sons of liberty!
Rise, maids and matrons free!
Rise, children, rise!
Hail now the Hundredth Year,
Hail with resounding cheer,
Let all the nations hear
Freedom's emprise!

Sacred the tears we shed,
Over the honored dead
Of that great time!
Shout we adown the years,
Ye who are freedom's heirs,
Guard ye the ark that bears
Our hope sublime!

Faith, law, and liberty,
Triumphant trinity,
By thee we stand!
Long as the rivers run,
Long as endures the sun,
Our flag and country one—
God keep our land!

FREEMASONRY AND ROMANISM COMPARED AND EXAMINED.—IV.

BY P. M. R.

As will be readily observed from preceding articles there is an astonishingly close affinity existing between Freemasonry and Romanism, both in doctrine and practice, but in order that this affinity or coincidence may be clearly and distinctly understood, both by Masons and Antimasons, and especially by those who arrange themselves on the Protestant or Anti-catholic side of the question, there are two essential points which must never be lost sight of. One must have a full and distinct knowledge of the two systems both in their religious and political characters, and also be thoroughly familiar with the doctrines of the Christian faith as it is defined and expounded in the Old and New Testaments. Without this knowledge it becomes almost impossible for any one to determine, with any degree of accuracy, the religious coincidences existing between Freemasonry and Rome, or to satisfactorily demonstrate either to himself or others, in what respect the political influences of both institutions are detrimental to the best interests of the nation. A knowledge of the Bible is absolutely indispensable then to enable one to refute either the doctrines of Rome or the doctrines of the lodge, while it is equally important that the entire Protestant public, whether Mason or Anti-mason, should be fully informed as to the teachings of either system, and more especially should we be conversant with the real nature of Masonic doctrines. I am fully persuaded both from observation and by personal experience that the great majority of Master Masons are but very slightly acquainted with the real meaning of Masonic doctrine, while they know little or nothing of the doctrines of Rome, and hence it is very desirable that all who read these articles should call the attention of their neighbors and especially of their Masonic minister neighbors to the various coincidences discussed in these articles existing between Freemasonry and Romanism and ask them how can they consistently reject and protest against the doctrines of Rome, while they believe, adhere to, practice and even swear to support the very self-same doctrines and practices in the Masonic institution.

The readers of the Cynosure have already discussed with me the following coincidences between the chapel and the lodge—all of them fundamental doctrines in both institutions and all of them in like manner diametrically opposite to the plain, positive teaching of Christ and his apostles.

Romanism rejects Jesus Christ as the only Mediator between God and man.—Creed of Pope Pius IV., Art. 19. Freemasonry rejects Jesus Christ altogether and has no Mediator at all, nor, according to its teaching, does it acknowledge any necessity for one.

Romanism insists that all its votaries, upon pain of eternal damnation, shall yield private judgment.—Creed of Pope Pius IV., Art. 14. Freemasonry also positively requires and emphatically insists upon its members without exception yielding private judgment upon pain of expulsion or excommunication. "Contumacy or disobedience is the one unpardonable crime in a Mason." Webb's Monitor, page 196; Pierson's Traditions, page 30.

Romanism bases its belief for almost all its doctrines and practices upon ecclesiastical tradition.—Creed of Pope Pius IV., Art. 14. Freemasonry is founded altogether upon Masonic tradition—not having a shadow of foundation from either sacred or profane history—neither does it pretend to be based upon the Bible nor upon any of the Jewish writings.

Romanism teaches and, as is well known, practices prayers for the dead.—Creed, Art. 18. Freemasonry in like manner prays for the dead, and for that purpose uses stronger and more emphatic language than that which is found in any Roman Catholic prayer book in the country. See Mackey's Manual, page 207.

And lastly Romanism claims divine origin by assuming that it is the only true church "without which no one can be saved, founded by Christ and his apostles and suppositiously built upon the apostle Peter. —Creed, Art. 22 and 24. Freemasonry constantly boasts and sings its traditional humbug of

> Hail Masonry divine,
> Glory of ages shine.
> Long mayest thou reign, etc.

But although the coincidences in each and all of the foregoing points be strikingly manifest and most clearly indicate (without the least possible chance of controversy on the subject) the common origin and character of both, yet perhaps in no instance is the similarity between Freemasonry and Romanism so glaringly apparent as it is in the doctrine of "Good Works;" to a discussion of which I now cordially and earnestly invite all readers of the Cynosure.

GOOD WORKS.

By this doctrine the Roman Catholic church teaches that a man by his own good works may entirely satisfy God's justice for sin, and not only so, but that a person may perform a superabundance of good works; that is, more than is really necessary to make satisfaction to God in his own particular case, and so transfer the balance over and above what he may require for himself to the souls of his friends in purgatory, to be applied on their special account. These good works so performed and transferred are called "works of superogation." On this subject permit me to quote a few brief extracts from the Creed of Pope Pius IV.

"I also profess that there are truly and properly seven sacraments of the new law.....and that they confer grace."—Art. 15.

I constantly hold that there is a purgatory and that the souls therein detained are helped by the suffrages (that is the good works) of the faithful. - Art. 18.

I also affirm that the power of indulgences was left by Christ in the church, and that the use of them is most wholesome to Christian people. —Art. 21.

And again from the "Grounds of Catholic Doctrine," page 47, "What do you mean by purgatory? A middle state of souls who depart this life in God's grace, yet not without some lesser stains of guilt or punishment which retard them from entering heaven." What sort of Christians then go to purgatory? 1st. Such as die guilty of lesser sins which are commonly called venal; and 2nd, Such as have formerly been guilty of greater sins and have not made full satisfaction for them to Divine Justice," and of these souls in purgatory it is further asserted page 49, "that they shall be saved indeed, yet so as by fire; that is by passing first through purgatory."

Now from all this and a great deal more of a similar character, which may be easily quoted, it will be readily inferred that man can satisfy God's justice for sin by what may be called his own good works; that the sacraments, indulgences, purgatorial fire, alms deeds, fastings, penances, holy water, holy oil, holy salt, extreme unction, the mass, and a vast amount of other such rubbish is put in the place of Jesus Christ, and that Romanism distinctly teaches us that salvation can be obtained by these means and without any reference whatever to the passion, death and resurrection of our Divine Redeemer.

Now, then, let me quote from Freemasonry on this same subject. But first it may be well to observe that every brother who dies in the Masonic faith, on being Masonically buried, is quietly laid away in the silent tomb, "in favorable expectation that at the general resurrection his immortal soul may then partake of joys which have been prepared for the righteous from the beginning of the word." (See Webb's Monitor, page 110; Mackey's Manual, page 207; Sickles Ahiman Rezon, 343.) No matter what his conduct or character may have been during life; no matter whether he be a minister or a layman, a deacon or a drinker, an elder or a gambler, a Christian or a deist, a good man or a human fiend, all are alike transferred to the Grand Lodge above and enjoy forever "that felicity which is awarded to just men made perfect." This, it will be observed is going a little farther than Rome does. She only sends on to heaven all those who die in venal sins, and those others who, though having committed mortal sin, yet have confessed and performed a set of penances in propitiation thereof, while Masonry elevates all to the lodge above who chance to die affiliated therewith, no matter whether they are good, bad or indifferent.

But what is the Masonic teaching on this subject? Through what means does Freemasonry propose to save man's soul in heaven? I shall first quote from Mackey's Lexicon, page 16, "Acacian—a term signifying a Mason who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the order is free from sin." This is exactly what we want. To be "free from sin," is surely the desire of all, and to attain to a condition so perfect in this life all we have to do is to join a Freemason's lodge and live in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity. But what are the precepts and obligations of Freemasonry? What do they inculcate, and how are they to be strictly obeyed? Mackey informs us in his Manual, page 20 and 21, "that initiation is as it were a death to the world and a resurrection to a new life," and that the candidate (no matter what his profession or character may be) "having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outward and profane world comes inquiringly to our doors, seeking the new birth." And on page 35, that "we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to make use of the common gavel for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting us as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" and still further on, that the apron, the guage and the gavel are presented as symbols of spiritual purification, which purification has been attained only through the initiatory ceremonies of the First or Entered Apprentice degree. In a word, Freemasonry teaches that a "state of perfection" is attainable "by a virtuous education, our own endeavors, and the blessing of God," and that the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry, without any reference whatever to the shed blood of Jesus Christ and the Divine operations of the Holy Spirit, contain not only all that is sufficient for man's eternal salvation, but in fact that "these three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man can require."—Ahiman Rezon, page 189. This language is stronger and more emphatic than the language of Rome, and appears the more daringly blasphemous when we take into account the startling fact that in Freemasonry Jesus Christ is denied or rejected altogether and must never be mentioned in a Masonic lodge except when some rough swears by his holy name as he would recklessly do in any grogshop. This was the teaching of Masonry one hundred years ago and this is exactly what it teaches to-day. It professes to have provided a universal religion for mankind, and one through which all can be saved, and yet is it not exceedingly singular that being in the possession of such a rich bonanza, such an invaluable boon to the human race, it is most strictly forbidden to communicate this grand plan to any man except upon the payment of large sums of money. No woman can know anything about it, no cripple, no old man, no colored man, no children under twenty-one, and no one without a good suit of clothes and considerable money in his pocket, can be made acquainted with this grand, glorious, universal system of humbuggery and fraud, known by the name of Freemasonry.

How Opinions are Formed.

There is probably nothing that so obstinately stands in the way of all sorts of progress as pride of opinion, while there is nothing so foolish and so baseless as that same pride. If men will look up the history of their opinions, learn where they came from, why they were adopted, and why they are maintained and defended, they will find, nine times in ten, that their opinions are not theirs at all—that they have no property in them, save as gifts of parents, education and circumstances. In short, they will learn that they did not form their own opinions—that they were formed by them, and in them, by a series of influences, unmodified by their own reason and knowledge. A young man grows up to adult age in a Republican or Democratic family, and he becomes a Republican or Democrat in accordance with the ruling influences of the household. Ninety-nine times in a hundred the rule holds.—Dr. J. G. Holland.

Masonry a Political Institution.—II.

REVIEW OF THE "COLOR QUESTION" BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

Though the recognition of the Colored Masons of Ohio by their white brethren of this State may have been before their Grand Lodge in various shapes during the last twenty years, the urgency and imperative character of the question has been heightened and precipitated by the negro Mason question of Louisiana. While, the colored lodges of Ohio have originated from British Grand Lodge dispensations and charters, it appears that about the time of the close of our late civil war some colored Masons in Louisiana applied to the white Grand Lodge of Masons of that State for dispensations to form colored Masonic lodges within its jurisdiction, but were refused. They thereupon petitioned the "Grand Orient of France" and were successful in obtaining from that quarter the requisite authority to institute and found lodges, and accordingly went ahead and did so. This action of the "Grand Orient of France" in thus interfering with the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, so incensed and inflamed that august and fraternal body of loving brethren that they at once passed resolutions of non-intercourse with the "Grand Orient of France" and called on all the Grand Lodges of Masons throughout the United States to take action and express themselves upon the subject. The Masonic Grand Lodges of the rebel States with a true proslavery instinct of which they are possessed, and a perfect unanimity of accord showing harmony of purpose, promptly sided with their white brethren of Louisiana passing resolutions of non-intercourse with the "Grand Orient of France," and denouncing the conduct of that body as revolutionary, un-masonic, and discreditable and dangerous and withal highly subversive of the best interests of their pet institution. Many of the Grand Lodges, especially in the Democratic States, fell in line with their Southern Masonic allies and assumed the same unfraternal attitude towards the offending "Grand Orient of France." Others, however, more cool and calculating, refused to take sides, and among these was Ohio, she having in addition to the Louisiana question the other disturbing element of negro British lodges within her borders to consider, while still other Northern Grand Lodges, especially in Republican States, Illinois among the number, concluded they would not disfellowship the French Masons nor turn their backs on their "colored brethren" in Louisiana. Thus has this great and pretentious cosmopolitan institution found itself confronted and covered by a local political question in respect to which it is forced to take sides and place itself on record, notwithstanding it is said that "Freemasonry forbids all improper debates in the lodge, i. e., the discussion of those ideas which divides men into religious and political sects. (Macoy's Cyclopedia of Freemasonry, p. 326); and notwithstanding, further, that the charges of 1722 expressly declare that "we are resolved against all politics, as what never yet conduced to the welfare of the lodge, nor ever will." (Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence p. 61.)

In the old slave States Masonry and rebelism are synonymous terms, and could that institution not be made subservient to the interests of the "oligarchy" ruling that section it would be wiped out in far less time than it took the State of Virginia to capture and hang John Brown "whose soul is still marching on "under the broad banner of universal human liberty and equal and exact justice to all men, principles as converse to Masonry as daylight is to darkness.

In the action of the "Grand Orient of France," the oligarchy of Louisiana and the South saw a purpose to recognize the "brotherhood of man" in their late "chattels" set free by the victorious legions that kept step to the music of the Union, and which freedom is secured to them by the wise provisions of the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, which stand as a wall of fire to consume the sacriligious hand that dare attempt their impairment, obliteration or destruction. To recognize this "brotherhood," however, the Southern oligarchy considered might at some future time return as a plague to them should they attempt to carry out in the face and teeth of Masonic principles and professions, the reactionary and revolutionary schemes they entertained, and still entertain against the rights and liberties of their late slaves, because it is a law of Masonry that no Mason can lawfully raise his hand against his brother Mason, nor supplant him in any of his rights and privileges or laudable undertakings. "Once a Mason always a Mason," and if so taken and accepted, at any time he can never afterwards be denied, hence the ostracising and non-recognition of the colored Masons of the South by their white brethren of that section, and the bitter denunciations they have heaped upon the "Grand Orient of France," for affording them the opportunity and privilege of becoming Masons. If these ex-slaves of the South were recognized as Masons, the oligarchy might eventually have the alternative presented of either throwing their Masonry or their politics overboard, and as they do not wish to lose either their grip as Masons, or relinquish their unholy designs against the entire colored population of their section, colored Masons inclusive, they have at the outset denied to their colored brethren all Masonic standing and outlawed them by every wile and trick known to Masonic art, and will continue so to do so long as they can find "pleasure and profit thereby."

If the late action taken by the white Grand Lodge of Ohio as well as the action hitherto taken by all the Grand Lodges of the Southern States does not prove "Masonry a political institution," then such a thing as a political party cannot by any process of logic or reasoning be shown to exist. Carson may as well hang his Masonry on a sour apple tree, for he will never be able to conquer the Bourbon Masonic democracy of Ohio, who number at the least three-fourths of the craft in the State. If he never re-enters the white Grand Lodge of Ohio until it has endorsed the Republican party and anti-Southern ideas, which he hoped it would, he has most certainly bid a last long adieu to the place that knew him once, but will know him no more.

The appeal from the decision of the Grand Master to the lodge, as mentioned by "Eavesdropper," is certainly the most unheard of of all un-Masonic acts ever attributed to a Masonic Grand body. It subverts the whole superstructure and theory of Masonic government, and marks an innovation in the body of Masonry that can end only—"thanks be to that God who overrules and disposes of all things"—in the final and irreparable destruction of the vile institution. When the Grand Master becomes shorn of his dictatorial and despotic power, as this appeal and action in the Ohio Grand Lodge shows he has in this State, the hand writing is being entered upon the wall. Masonry is losing her grip, and her power of life and death over the lives of the membership for fealty to Masonic vows is at an end. This is as it should be. Let the innovation and revolution go on until not a vestige of the monster remains to be seen. Time will make all things even, and Masonry e'er many years will be numbered among the things of the past. The action of the Grand Lodge of Ohio proves Masonry to be the ally of the proslavery fanatics of the South, and this, with her many other characteristics assures her early and certain destruction, for God has decreed slavery a curse, never again to pollute and blight this ransomed land of freedom; and without slavery Masonry can find no secure abiding place on American soil. Let Bourbon Democratic Masons North and South make a note of this fact, and put aside their vile schemes to undo God's work, for they never can be successful. More anon.

Our Foreign Letter.

THE VOYAGE ON THE "CANADA" FROM NEW YORK TO LONDON.—CURIOSITIES OF ENGLISH TRAVEL AND SCENERY.

Saturday morning the 16th of Sept. returning from Bergen Point with a relative, we noticed that the "storm flag" as it is called was floating from a lofty building near the ferry going to Jersey City. So I was prepared for a rough sea at the start. At three o'clock, the hour for sailing, I went aboard, but we did not leave the pier until nearly four o'clock. The end of the pier was crowded with friends of the passengers who waved adieus which were answered long (and by many sorrowfully) by those on ship; then steadily we sailed down the river, past pier, ferry, ship, and ocean steamer, Battery, Men-of-War, at anchor in the harbor, and vessels from foreign parts in "quarantine;" away from New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City; along the hills and coast of Staten Island, green and beautiful, under frowning forts guarding the harbor's entrance, beyond the flashing light from lofty promontory and rocky point into the darkness and out to sea. The waves were rough, for the storm was coming on, and the motion of the ship was far from comfortable. I walked with a friend on the deck till 9 P. M., and as the darkness deepened, we saw a sight, not repeated during the voyage; the most brilliant spectacle I ever beheld, the whole sea covered with crested waves, and the ship literally ploughing her way through blazing billows of phosphorescent fire. Capt. Summer told me afterward, that he seldom if ever had seen it equalled. But here the poetry of the voyage ends. For four days we had what officers and crew called "rough going" and they spoke of it as something not usual; but I was disappointed in not realizing my ideal of a storm at sea. I saw no yawning abysses, or waves rolling mountain high, no ocean thunder-storm with vivid lightning and of resistless fury. I was tossed about some in my stateroom, once or twice was nearly emptied out of my berth on to the floor, received a few hard bumps when asleep, and felt a most dreadful sickening sensation, which ripened the second day into real sea sickness—too awful to describe. After the first rough weather the voyage was very tame, not a water spout did I see, not a whale, nor even a shark; no icebergs. I suppose they are not made yet. The cabin passengers were not numerous, some twelve or fourteen only. (There was a large number of steerage passengers of whom we saw little). Among the gentleman was a young English count, and a captain in the English army; also a Hungarian professor of Moral Philosophy, a French physician, a young man from New York, going to study medicine in England, etc.

Only one married man in the cabin and two ladies. Occupations of passengers were sleeping, eating, smoking, reading, some writing, walking the decks to digest the meals, and wet days, on the part of some high-toned young Englishmen, getting drunk and absenting themselves from meals, for one, two or three days, according to the amount of liquor inhaled and the calibre of the individual partaking of it. The Captain of the ship drank water only. We were on an English boat; the English run every steamer that goes from here to America; the officers were all Englishmen, and Englishmen like to eat; so (at the start) we had five meals a day; six o'clock early lunch; 8:30, breakfast; 12, lunch of soup, cold meat, lobster etc.; 4 P. M. dinner; 7 P. M., tea. The early lunch was soon omitted on account of the late rising propensities of the passengers. I found two meals a day sufficient for myself, to which I did ample justice, a vigorous appetite following my recovery from sea sickness. Every luxury was provided in the way of meats, vegetables and fruit.

On the morning of the sixth day at sea, Sept. 22nd, so strong and persistently continuous had been the head winds against us we were only off the banks of New Foundland. The thermometer that day was steady at 50 degrees. When in the Gulf stream the water was often 10 degrees warmer than the atmosphere. The best rate the ship made was 265 miles in twenty-four hours. Friday, Sept 29th, at 6 A. M., we first sighted land, the Scilly isles off Lands End, the south-west point of England. The Bishop Rock light-house, where the German ship "Schiller" went down, was in full sight, as well as other light houses on the isles and rocks. The town of Agnes of some size is on one of these islands. The Scilly isles furnish the earliest fruit and vegetables which reach the London market in spring.

At 10 o'clock on the 29th, we passed "Lands End" and the Wolf light-house, which cost a quarter of a million pounds. Next we passed Pensante, a seaport town. The Eddystone light house we were abreast of at 5:30 P. M. of the same day. The boat had some 1,200 tons of cheese to be unloaded at Southhampton, so we were obliged to make that port. At 4 A. M., Saturday, the 30th, we reached "The Needles," the most dangerous rocks along the southern coast of England; they are at the western extremity of the isle of Wight and by them we were obliged to pass to reach the harbor of Southhampton. It was raining, foggy and very dark. The Needle light-houses, like stars of dazzling brightness, gleamed just ahead. At first the captain seemed unwilling to enter and stopped the ship, the pilot came aboard and after some consultation, the ship moved on very slowly past the Needles and close to the high and precipitous bluffs of the isle of Wight and by 8 A. M., we had reached the harbor of Southhampton.

Although it was raining steadily the view of both isle and mainland, as we sailed towards the harbor, was beautiful in the extreme. The rich green color, ever fresh, of the grass, shrubs and trees of England excels anything I have ever seen of the kind Had I not seen it, I would not believe it possible that there could be so much difference between the hue of verdure in England and in America. The whole scenery from Southhampton to London presented one continuous landscape of beauteous and ever-varying green. At Southhampton we were presented with first class railroad tickets to London, and so two days of delay and voyage were saved. We took the cars at 11:30 A. M., and reached London at 2:45 P. M. The English cars differ from American in construction, size and finish. They are odd looking affairs. Two of them only equal in length one of ours. Each has three apartments with separate doors capable of holding from eight to ten each. The seats are omnibus fashion running of course crosswise of the cars. They are easy to ride in and quickly emptied, but of a plain dingy exterior, and not beautifully finished like ours. The wheels are hardly half the weight of ours and resemble those of street cars. Oddest of all were the freight cars, on skeleton iron wheels, very small, looking more like baby toys, than vehicles intended for the transportation of heavy freight. The open ones were covered with oilcloth or canvass covers resembling much the emigrant wagons of the West. Every inch of ground from Southhampton to London seemed to be cared for. Of course grass plots largely predominated. We passed most beautiful vegetable gardens kept so clean with everything fresh, luxuriant and verdant. Green hawthorn hedges closely trimmed encircled gardens, grass-plots, meadows, and often hills. Now we saw cattle fat and sleek in pastures, and now whole flocks of sheep cropping the luxuriant grass. Forest trees abounded everywhere, sometimes in thick woods, often in clumps and clusters crowning hill tops, or dotting fields, vallies and grassy slopes.

We passed many cottages of brick and stone, some tasteful and more odd. The old farm houses with thatched roofs looking exactly like the pictures of them I used to see in the story books written by Hannah More, particularly interested me. Also the straw and wheat stacks, trim and neat, thatched with as much care as are the roofs of the houses. We passed country residences with beautiful flower gardens, and long grassy lawns, for target shooting. Some of the scenery was wild, large woodland tracts being left in their natural state, where we saw thick undergrowth of cedar, groves of pine tall and slender, dense underbrush, bog and swamp land. One of the towns we came to seemed unusually uninviting, the cars were on a level with the roofs of the houses or above them; we looked out upon dingy chimnies, crowned with two, three, four and sometimes eight tile joints abreast, for the carrying away of smoke; ugly tiled roofs, and the houses seemed odd, antiquated and plain, in a marked degree. As the place seemed to be quite a large one, we asked an Englishman who was reading by us, the name of the town. "This," said he looking up, "is all London," and read on.

In my next I will speak of the city and sights I have seen here. P.

State Convention at Willimantic, Conn.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The Conn. Christian Association opposed to secret societies met, according to notice, in Franklin Hall, Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 25, at 2 o'clock. A prayer-meeting of one hour, led by Elder D. P. Rathbun, was an occasion of receiving strength from on high. Our brethren feel their dependence upon our Heavenly Father, and his going before us in this work is most manifest; no earthly power can stand against it.

At 3 o'clock the convention was called to order by Pres. Conant, and reports called for as to the progress of the Anti-masonic work in various places. Bro. Conant gave some account of the work here in Willimantic, of the distribution of tracts, papers, etc., and that the people were waking up to the evils of the institution. Bro. Samuel Palmer, of Woodstock, spoke at length, expressing his opinion that we were not aroused to the formidable power against which we were engaged, and that Masonry would not yield without a struggle. Bro. J. S. Perry, of Thompson, stated that there was an increasing inquiry concerning the facts about Masonry, and that he received counsel and encouragement to go on and stir up on the subject, and that, too, from members of the fraternity. Elder A. L. Dearing, of East Glastenbury, gave a good account of himself, and how he was enabled to labor against the institution in various ways. Also gave an interesting account of the death and funeral of a Mason, over whom he preached a sermon in which he boldly declared against Freemasonry. The Mason had upon his deathbed declared for Christ before Masonry, and wished to be buried by the church. Bro. C. T. Collins, of Windsor, spoke of interesting work done at the late Springfield camp-meeting in distribution of tracts, private conversation, and testimony against it in the meetings. Elder Anthony Palmer of Nowich, a seceding Mason of fourteen degrees, gave an interesting account of his progress in Masonry, and how he was led, or rather rushed along in the degrees, partly by curiosity, and by his associates, until he realized that it was contrary to the profession of the Christian; and that he renounced it nine years ago, declaring in a class-meeting that he would no longer go where he could not take his Saviour with him. Jefferson Campbell, of Willimantic, an aged brother and a seceding Mason of three degrees, gave his experience at his initiation, also his knowledge of the abduction of William Morgan while living in Batavia, N. Y. Gave an instance of the boasted benevolence of Freemasonry, wherein a man, having died, the destitute widow presented a petition for assistance, no notice of which was taken, but at the same meeting a resolution was passed, appropriating $30 or more to provide eatables, etc., for a supper that was to be given. That was the last time Bro. Campbell entered the lodge. He had joined some 50 years ago, and had not met with them in twenty-five years. Elder J. F. Sheffield, of East Hampton, stated the fact of his father and brother being Masons, and of the motives and arguments used to get him to join by his Masonic friends. Also gave the adverse opinions he was led to entertain of the institution, and of the horror he had experienced in hearing ministers, members of the lodge, solemnly deny the facts in regard to Masonry. Elder Rathbun followed with a few remarks. Bro. Philip Bacon, of Weatogue, next spoke of how the subject of Anti-masonry was brought before his attention by Bro. Conant three years ago, and his convictions on reading Pres. Finney's work that Masonry was a bad institution, and that he had labored, by scattering books and tracts against it. That he was willing to suffer reproach and that he was much encouraged by what had been done.

Convention adjourned till 7 o'clock, P. M.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Convention met again at seven o'clock, and after a few introductory remarks by Bro. Conant, he introduced Elder Rathbun, the lecturer for the evening. Bro. Rathbun occupied over an hour and a half, proving that Freemasonry was a religion, that it rejected Christ, the Bible, and the God of the Bible. Showed from Masonic authority that the Grand Lodge of Connecticut had rejected a resolution passed by the Grand Lodge of Ohio, affirming and accepting the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures. Elder R. was listened to throughout the entire lecture with the most earnest attention, and a deep impression seemed to be made upon the audience. Brethren remarked afterwards that it was one of the best meetings we ever held. An important fact may be stated here, that not one word of denial was heard to anything that was said by the persons speaking, throughout the entire meetings.

Bro. Conant having provided an abundance of tracts, the audience were invited forward as the meeting closed, to freely help themselves, many of them doing so.

THURSDAY MORNING.

A few brethren met in Franklin Hall at 8 o'clock, and engaged in special worship.

At ten o'clock a meeting for political action was convened. J. S. Perry was chosen chairman and Philip Bacon, Sec'y. Bro. Conant, first upon the floor, gave his political experience in advancing from the old Free Soil party to the Republican; from that to the Prohibition, and now felt like making another step in advance and casting his vote and influence with the American Party, and concluded by offering a motion to nominate an electoral ticket. An animated discussion followed, participated in by brethren Collins, Fenton, Palmer, Smith and others, Bro. Perry read the platform of the American party, declaring it to be the cleanest and most comprehensive presented for the acceptance of the voters of our country. Bro. Collins, a soldier in the late war, and wounded in the first battle, resulting in crippling him for life, has been a Prohibitionist, but is willing to vote the American ticket. Bro. Fenton, a life-long Democrat, not fully decided in his mind, but does not wish to throw away his vote. Further remarks were made by brethren Agard, of Staffordville, and Conant. Bro. Ellsworth earnestly urged the brethren to follow their convictions, and not fear reproach. Bro. Rathbun endorsed the new party, and should vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Bro. Smith, of Willimantic, said he should have been greatly disappointed had this meeting been called and nothing said about political action with the American party.

On motion a committee of three were appointed by the chair, to make up an electoral ticket. Messrs. Conant, Collins and Samuel Palmer, of Woodstock, were appointed, and brought in the following names:

For Electors at Large: J. A. Conant and Calvin Hatch. 1st. Dist., Philip Bacon; 2nd, I. J. Gilbert; 3d, Geo. Buck; 4th, Dr. Miles Baldwin.

J. A. Conant offered the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, In order to carry out the principles of the Prohibition Party, it is necessary that men holding official positions should be free from all bonds to sustain bad men in their iniquity; therefore,

Resolved, That we adopt the platform of the American party as set forth at their meeting at Pittsburgh, June, 1876.

Resolved, That while we endorse the principles of the Prohibition party, as regards the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages, we regret that they ignore the fact that one great hindrance to the accomplishment of that great end, is the existence of secret societies, composed of men of all complexions of character, from the lowest rumseller and drunkard to some of the most respectable temperance men who advocate prohibition, yet are bound together by oaths similar to the following, to-wit: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, before communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own option. * * * Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain in the midst, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, so that no more trace or remembrance may be had of so vile and perjured a wretch as I would be should I ever knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn obligation of Master Mason. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

WHEREAS, We learn from good authority that the candidates of the Prohibition party for State officers, are strongly opposed to Freemasonry; therefore,

Resolved, That we adopt said names as our candidates for State officers.

Meeting adjourned.

P. BACON, Sec'y.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Convention met at 1:30.

Bro. Joseph S. Perry occupied an hour, showing the despotic government of the lodge; followed by Elder Anthony Palmer, of Norwich, who gave his experience in taking the advanced degrees, drinking wine out of a human skull, in the Knight Templar degree; also in the Royal Arch degree, that he had taken an oath to keep all the secrets of a companion Royal Arch Mason. murder and treason not excepted. The disclosures of the aged brother trembling in his infirmity, while relating his experience with his brethren in the ministry, members of the order, wherein they had solemnly denied the facts in regard to Masonry, made a profound impression upon the audience. Elder Palmer has been a presiding elder of the M. E. church, of great influence, loved and respected by all who know him. He never had told a lie for Masonry.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Elder Rathbun occupied part of the evening, speaking upon the conspiracy, oaths and obligations of Freemasonry. He was followed by Elder A. L. Dearing, of East Glastenbury, pastor of the M. E. church there, who spoke very earnestly upon the effects which the obligations of Freemasonry had upon the ministers who had taken them, that many had deliberately lied in regard to facts well known to them. Also the terrorism which the lodge exerted over the churches, so as to cause alarm if spoken against from the pulpit. The speaker also proved from the highest Masonic authority, that in the higher degrees Masons obligated themselves to persecute the traitors against Masonry, and to execute the death penalty. The audience sat in remarkable quietness throughout a long evening and seemed deeply interested in all that was said. Altogether, our meeting was a very satisfactory one, and the indefatigable labors of our brother Conant in the past there, and towards the inception and progress of this meeting, we all feel, has been crowned with success. We are also under renewed obligation to our dear Bro. Rathbun for his prompt answer to our call, his earnest and faithful labors in the convention, although suffering from his disability and infirmity, the result of "Masonic charity."

THE STATE WORK IN INDIANA.—FROM BRO. COOK.

October 27, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE AND FRIENDS:—I cannot meet you all except in this way. To tell you all my travels, and incidents thereof, would be to tedious; it is enough to say I have not been idle in our common cause. In September I visited Hamilton County, where I had the pleasure of meeting the well-tried and true Peter Rich, A. Ballard, the Roberts, the Teters, and many others who have always stood foremost in every good work, and like all true reformers were liberal according to their means and the many unfavorable conditions in which they were placed. I lectured in eight places in that county, and left with a tender and pleasant recollection of the good people I met there, to find my way to the Indiana Eldership meeting of the Church of God at Eel River Bethel, in Wabash Co. There I found another sample of the despotism and unchristian spirit of the lodge. Three Masonic elders, by their domineering and dishonesty so controlled that body that they drove away five of their best ministers because they would not fellowship them "with the image of the beast" upon them. To relate all that transpired in that body would be to relate a scene of shame which has shocked the Christian sense of the whole church.

On the evening after its adjournment I spoke to a full house and carried with me the kind memory of brethren Cuffie, A. J. Ulsh and Adams. I am now in Kosciusko Co., speaking every night. To-night we hold a convention at Yellow Lake Bethel, where Bro. Stoddard will remember that two or three Masonic arguments were hurled with more force than effect. It does a lecturer good to come into this vicinity and enjoy the hearty welcome of such brethren as Benj. Ulsh, Hartman, Jeffries and others; and let none of us forget our young friend, Frank Heighway, who has been doing good service lecturing on his own hook. I hope this young brother of the Baptist church will be much blessed and that his father, who is to be a member of our next Legislature, may soon carry his clear and gentlemanly good sense to the front ranks of reform. From here I go home, ready to respond to calls for lectures. Let the friends in Indiana keep me busy; I am willing to work.

S. L. COOK.

RONAYNE AT WEST BRANCH AND SPRINGDALE, IOWA.

WEST BRANCH, Ia., Oct. 30.

The cause which lies so near your heart is progressing nicely in this place. Brother Edmond Ronayne was here on the 25th inst. and created quite a stir in our otherwise quiet little village. The Masons and sympathizers denounced vehemently the man who would dare to violate his sacred oath, even though the "party of the first part" had misrepresented the nature of the obligation in order to induce him to take it, inasmuch as it assured him there was nothing in the obligation that would conflict with the duties he owed to his God, his country or his family.

The meeting was held in Good Templars' Hall, which, though the best room in the place, was small, only accommodating about two hundred. Many of the best citizens of the neighborhood were present. The first degree was successfully worked which showed within itself many proofs of its own genuineness. From here he went to Springdale, four and a half miles east and worked the Master's degree in Friends' meeting-house, before an audience of some three hundred or more, of the best citizens of the vicinity for miles around This degree and the manner in which it was worked also showed many internal evidences of genuineness.

It is not at all strange that a Mason is unwilling to acknowledge that he has ever submitted to pass through so silly a performance and taken such terrible oaths to which are attached such barbarous death penalties. But it seems strange to me why so many sympathizers will put up their "think so" against Ronayne's and many others' "know so;" which is backed by a deposition. When they are armed with a contradictory sworn statement, then and not till then is the question of his integrity debatable. Strange indeed that men who on any other occasion would not be guilty of slander or belying will indulge so freely when speaking of any one who speaks against Masonry.

With all good wishes for the promotion of truth, I am, yours.

BRO. HINMAN AT BARABOO—ANOTHER SLADE CASE WITH A DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

BARABOO, Wis., Oct. 31, 1876.

DEAR BRO. K.—Leaving home on the 21st I spent most of the day in Elgin, calling on numerous warm friends of our reform; among these Rev. Amasa Lord, who is publishing a paper in promotion of the cause of peace, expressed a warm interest, and a confident hope of our ultimate success. In the evening I reached the house of Mr. Hope Davis in Carpenterville, who, at four-score years is vigorously pushing the bat-

Correspondence.

Our Centennial Letter.

Oct. 28, 1876.

You published lately a letter from a Mason here which asserted that the use of Christ's name in prayer was believed to be according to Masonic usage in the lodges of the United States. In contradiction to that here is a copy from one who gives "more light" on the subject:

"Renounced Masonry Sept. '74. A member of three degrees for 3 years. Reason—Rebuked for using the name of Christ in conducting the religious services for the chaplain.
L. H. Baker.

This is an honorable example to many of his Methodist brethren, one of whom lately told me that John the Baptist was a Mason, a statement in perfect harmony with that of another minister, who claimed that all the apostles were Masons! Of course the Scriptures, from such a standpoint are very defective, and Masonry here again competes with Romanism for support, by appeals to human credulity, one fed by traditionary fables and inventions of men. Believers in Christ, are you not imperatively called on by the existence of such facts, to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ." Have these words from Jude ever had a fitter application than they now have to Masonry?

Your parcel of tracts received. As the time is now short, we shall have to be active to get into circulation this new lot of 105,600 pages, inclusive of those received from Mrs. Cook. The only regret of friends of the cause may be that ten times the whole quantity have not been sent out. I believe this would have been quite practicable so far as regards the receptive capacity of the vast crowds at this Centennial.

Some Canadian Rev'ds, one member of the legislature, and one editor of a paper, have received suitable books and tracts. The last two are Masons of a mild type, and are curable. Some of the reverends are with us, one of whom, the Rev. S. E. Cormany, Presiding Elder of the United Brethren, may be named as quite pronounced. Rev. Mr. Hubbard, to whom you send the Cynosure in this city, has paid for one year more, a proof that his heart is in the cause. Not less so is Mrs. H. A worthy, devout couple they are.

I had great pleasure on the visit of Benj. Cole, of Jacksonville, Ill., and E. Dodge of Spencer, Tioga Co., N. Y., both of whom understand the whole merits of the question, and speak plainly, earnestly and judiciously thereon. W. Bainbridge of Romulus, Pa., is not behind, and is one of a society formed in Seneca Co. The Rev. N. C. Crow, of Delaware, O., is opposed, although there are secretists in the church. T. C. H. Smith, Cong'l, of Belpre, O., says they have had one lecture and want another. The Rev. S. B. Houston, Associate Presbyterian, Ind., is also one to be depended on, and the Rev. Mr. Morrill, I believe, with whom I hoped to have had more conversation. But it is sometimes unfortunate that we cannot command freedom from interruption. Another of the type of the Bishop, in my last letter, assailed us. The sharp thrust of the sword into the place where the Masonic heart should have been, found only vacuum. But the hearty manhood of the Anti-mason became at once apparent.

Prof. Bartine, of Central High School here, has authority, from Dep't of Public Instruction, to make collections of books, etc., at the Centennial, for a specific public purpose, and he received ten of your books and pamphlets, from Grand Lodge Masonry to the Broken Seal, for which, doubtless, your name will be enrolled. He also got your catalogue.

A call from Dr. J. Brooks, of Maine, who has kept clear of Masonry, and of I. Gable, of Pa., one of your subscribers. Of course when any man has the honor of a place on your subscription list does he not occupy a far higher position than any in the secrecy of the lodge?

A gentleman in the city requested me to call and see an old English Masonic book which he has had for years. It may be curious to compare it with the revelations of Ronayne, the popular lecturer of the West. By-the-bye, why has Masonry no display of its pretentiously ancient books? It has two cases of handsomely bound modern books, but while Bibles are shown by Bible societies as old as to 400 years, where are the Masonic volumes? Can it be that there are none? Can it be that Freemasonry is afraid of the printing press? Christianity is not. But there are Masons who agree with Anti-masons in regard to the very modern birth of popular Masonry.

To-night both political parties here have their final great processions before the polling day for President. Hayes has been speaking and G. B. McClellan, etc., etc., and music fills the air. Hooray! Three cheers for Walker and Kirkpatrick!

Oct. 25.

Since my last there have been a number of calls of an interesting character. To some there may appear the repetition of incidents very similar to each other; and yet, somehow, there are differences which, to me, resemble the differences of men's faces; each has its special features, and the incidents, like the faces, whether white or colored, reveal new phases of our common humanity. Manhood, free on the one hand, or in bondage on the other, ever must be the great exhibition which commands the liveliest interest of its benefactors and philosophers in every age. If some of them were at your stand they would often be interested. I have the pleasure of again seeing Judge Zearing, Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Torrances, and for the first time have met several other warm friends, some of whom I must name: The Rev. J. W. Raynor, Presbyterian, Montrose, Pa.; the Rev. Andrew J. H. Andrew, U P,, Brooklyn; Rev. J. P. Hetric, of the Brethren, or German Baptists, of this city. The Rev. A. Mervin, Presbyterian, of New York city, is also of us. A member of a conference of a Northwestern State said that about half were Masons. I gave him some reading matter. The son of a Baptist clergyman was intending to join the Masons. After a chat he said, "I don't know but you are right about these oaths."

You know J. B. Steinspring, of Ind., as a friend of the cause, and C. R. Williams, Conn., well known of old in this subject. Mr. Showalter, Va., also deserves honorable mention, and Mr. Lum, of Oberlin. Some new friends also, such as Dr. A. Tillotson, of Kingsley, N. Y., whose past years have known no compromise with Masonry, and he was glad to form his first acquaintance with the Cynosure.

While Mr. Carpenter was present to-day, application was made for a full assortment of your publications, for the representative of the Chilian Com., which he generously authorized. In accordance with his views I have also given to others some books or pamphlets; also to a Rev. Episcopal and similar to a Roman Catholic priest, both of these from a Western State. The former had been caught in the trap, and I fancied he would like to find his way out. But another Rev'd Episcopalian from an Eastern State, gave me the very opposite impression concerning his own character. This Rev'd champion of Masonry, to my amazement, not only justified the mutilation and omission of Christ's name, in 2 Thess. 3: 6th and 12th, but when Lev. 5: 4, 5 were read, coolly affirmed that the word guilty did not there mean guilty! Suddenly the Bible closed and was replaced in the case. There was no use for a Bible with such an interpreter. Yesterday a similar interview with a Rev'd Methodist, in good bodily condition, in connection with the above, would almost make one fancy that some attempt had been made among the fraternity to get over these, to them, difficult passages, by such an outrageous method of solving them.

Three young men, one seemed to glory in being a member of the Protestant League. They shook hands at parting, having had Judge Whitney's case before them, and none the worse for the idea that any good cause may be better maintained openly in a free country than by secret oaths or pledges of sacred honor.

A member of the Genesee Conference informed me that it had again superannuated Bro. Post—so, at least, I understood him. Why is this? Bro. Post is quite able and willing to preach I understand, but he is well known as of Anti-masonic sentiments. Does Masonry so rule in that Conference?

A talkative gentleman thought we never touched the really weak points of the Masons. It was in their failure to be as good as their teachings. As we left the building, he admitted that if the Masons had left out the words, "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," in an extract from Scripture, they had done wrong. There I left him with the understanding that he would call to-morrow for proof. A lad standing by was, I thought, his companion, but no—he made an apology for listening, and expressed his hearty thanks for the privilege.

But I made one discovery by the reverends P. E. & M. E., which must be given to your readers, doubtless, on genuine Masonic authority, for the evangelists have entirely omitted to make the important statement, viz.: That the apostles were Freemasons! And the M. E. told of a revival meeting where Masons were brought into their M. E. Masonic brother's church. He claimed that Masonry was to the church what John the Baptist was to Christ—the forerunner! Masonry the forerunner of Christianity! Such was the assertion of this Rev'd M E. Is it not most pitiable to find professed preachers of the Gospel thus devoting their talents to setting forth such strange doctrines! On what promise do they rest? What master do they obey? But who is this who opens fire at your fort? Talk of Witherspoon and his statue?—a preaching patriot like him! Here is a Bishop from head to foot, all Bishop, and he compels your guns to be leveled at him! Whisht! They are well pointed! That ball should have struck! He is close upon us! Draw the sword! Thrust!—Yes, right through him, and it don't hurt!—He smiles! Behold, J. M. Bishop of Chambersburg, Pa., a lecturer in the good cause!

To-morrow Gen'l Hayes and party are expected at the Centennial. There will be great rejoicing over him.
Thos. Hodge.

—From far away Oregon D. H. Putnam writes that he is pleased with the paper and is doing good with it, and adds: "I myself belonged to the grange for two years, but am now done with it and all other secret societies. I left the grange last May; since leaving I have been instrumental in bringing some others out of the 'Champions of the Red Cross,' a secret society that has a numerous membership on this coast."

Murderers!!

Yates City, Ill., Oct. 28, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have now been engaged in a difficulty with the Masonic fraternity for more than three years, and although my Masonic obligations were cancelled by Yates City Lodge, No. 448, on the 19th day of June, 1873, I have had nothing to say in regard to the secrets of Masonry, because I did not wish to furnish any excuse for the lodge to continue its violation of the secret contract by virtue of which I became a Mason. But when I obtain any information which is not covered by an obligation of secrecy I feel at liberty to publish it for the benefit of whom it may concern. Now Mr. Ronayne has published an article in your paper which he calls "Masonry at a Glance," and I do not propose to say whether the article is just what its title implies or not, but the paper containing the article was lately shown to Mr. John B. Cox. J. W. of Yates City Lodge, and he was asked what he thought of it. He looked at it for several minutes and finally said, pointing to Mr. R.'s portrait, "That man ought to be killed." Now if I had never been a Mason I should be inclined to wonder what Mr. R. had done that according to the opinion of a J. W. of a Masonic lodge he ought to be killed. Mr. Cox is not the only Mason in Yates City who has expressed the same opinion in regard to Mr. R. W. H. Robinson.

Experience at the Polls.

Montmorenci Ind., Oct. 20, 1876.

This fall I have distributed several hundred tracts to most of the voters and young men of our township, and at a recent election it seemed to be my duty to labor publicly against the evil principles of Freemasonry, and this I did, and with much better success than I expected, though not without much stinging reproach being cast on me. I told the scorners that this was all expected and that it was my intention to bear it cheerfully for the sake of the truth till victory crowns our labors. O that all our reformers were more courageous and faithful and loving toward those in error, while they war against not flesh and blood but "spiritual wickedness in high places"!

A prominent man, a school teacher and Mason, was presented with some tracts. He no sooner perceived their nature than he was at a white heat of Masonic zeal and concealed rage, declaring that "Masonry was his religion" and that "Freemasonry is the foundation of the Christian religion." I thanked him for so frank a confession, telling him that he was a witness to what we claimed for Masonry, that it is a religion and one without a Christ, and that more thoughtful Masons were careful to deny his honest confession. He harped on the old cry that "a Mason who reveals Masonry is a perjured man" and that we were dependent on such men for all our knowledge and that we knew nothing about it. As if a man's testimony ought to be set at naught simply because he had deserted the devil and his ranks and come over on the Lord's side; as though a man was under any obligation to keep promise with the devil, or his testimony be rejected because he had repented of his alliance with Satan! Why, even the state offers immunity from punishment to any one of a band of thieves or robbers who will repent and break his oath with his evil clan and disclose their infamy; and receives his testimony as that of the very best kind—because he has forsaken the evil to save the good. He has deserted the guilty minority to rescue the innocent majority. And this is praiseworthy before God and good government and good men, while Masons read it just the other way and say we ought to believe the unrepentant sinners of any evil clan, especially Masonry, and cry "perjured villian" against tha man that dares to break his agreement with death and hell. God is helping us. Blessed be his name forever. Amen.

Respectfully yours,

Lorenzo D. Brown.

An Earnest Woman's Letter.

Morrison, Ill., Oct. 21, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I read your excellent paper and like it exceedingly. It becomes more and more interesting, and has the right ring on the question of secrecy as well as other topics. I feel like saying of the Cynosure, "All hail! thou blessed of the Lord, forerunner of a mighty victory, speed on thy way as harbinger of truth and righteousness!

Truly the worshipers of Baal have increased mightily until they encompass sea and land, and in their powerful grip hold the reins of government in every department of this mighty nation, and even in the churches the gloved hand of secrecy is visible controlling and working its own way, and whoever dares to utter a word against the "great image set up and worshipped," are marked men and women, and pursued with vengeance in one form or another. The crisis is before us, a fearful conflict with right and wrong has begun, but if God is for us who can harm us.

I pray that the National Christian Association in all its branches may be clothed with Divine power; that the army of lecturers now in the field warring against secrecy may go forth in the name and strength of Jesus, their great Captain, and feel in their hearts that the battle is not ours but God's, and he will fight for them. God our help is working for us. In infinite mercy he hath raised up Ronayne to expose the wickedness of the craft. He is doing wonders, blow on blow. He worked the degrees here two evenings, 18th and 19th of Oct., with great success. I was in bed sick and did not hear him, but prayed for him all the time. My family told me he did bravely, grandly. The Masons were quiet, did not raise a question, but now pronounce him an unmitigated liar. The Lord keep him true to the task imposed, and loving towards his enemies!

I think the cause will be greatly advanced by the Centennial distribution of tracts. Mr. Hodge deserves honorable mention for his gentlemanly demeanor toward all. My husband and I had some difficulty in finding the stand, but finally did, and stood watching him some minutes selecting tracts and handing them to passers by with "Against secret societies, Sir." Some shrunk back, but he talked them into it. At a favorable time we introduced ourselves as friends of the cause, had a short interview, a kindly handshaking, with "God bless you," and were gone, and again lost in the crowd. The Lord works by little things, and I am one of the least. I took tracts with me and papers; left some at Richmond Hill, some at Barry, on Lake Symcoe, in Canada, some at the National Hotel at Washington, some at our hotel, Philadelphia, and threw them out of the car windows to groups of men, with "Lord go with them." Yours for reform,

Mrs. A. Paley.

Our Mail.

Isaac Crane, an old line reformer, of Peru, Miami county, Ind., says of voting:

"I have been reading your valuable paper for some four years. I have been an Anti-mason about fifty years and an Abolitionist about the same length of time; have voted the Abolition ticket all alone in Washington township, and was some afraid I should have to vote the Anti-mason ticket the same way this time. Rather than vote for secretists I have crossed my ticket from top to bottom. The last State election I staid at home in order to save my vote. All these secret parties are Masonry in operation. The slavery power used to run the two political parties. They would drive us into ranks by threats of destroying the Union. And now the Masons are doing the same thing by talking of paying the rebel debt, etc."

Our indefatigable worker, Dr. Marsh, of Elmwood, Ill., says of his efforts for the paper:

"I already have ten names on my club list for next year. The prospect is good for fifty I think. I wish you would send me a dozen of Mr. Woodward's books by mail. Our book-seller agreed to send for them and expose them for sale, but a month has passed and he has not sent yet, so I presume my charge that they dare not do it is correct."

We want ten other men in Illinois to start an opposition to Dr. M., only in the same line of business—working for the paper. He must not be a monopolist in this.

A lady in an Iowa city sends for a Masonic exposition, being referred to this office by the Inter ocean of this city. Thanks to the editor for the courtesy. A gentleman in Illinois sends, having seen an advertisement of our books—perhaps friend Hickman's. A. Sheibley, of Smithdale, sends for tracts to distribute on election day. A good idea.

Rev. Wm. Hall, Perrysburg, N. Y., writes:

"My Dear Cynosure:—How thankful I am that while wandering in that bewildering labyrinth, "the Main Building," the Lord directed my steps to your "stand." I did not know of its existence and should have passed it had not your agent spoken to me. I was eighteen years old when the Morgan tragedy was enacted, and may, if leisure ever permits, give you some reminiscences. Since then I have been an uncompromising enemy of all secret societies—except the temporary Loyal League, during the slave-holders' rebellion. But as my ministerial life of forty-two years has been spent as missionary to the Seneca Indians, in which work I am still engaged, I have had no opportunity to do much for the cause. * * * I am delighted with the Cynosure—wish it could be read in every family. The American and the Prohibition political parties must be merged into one. You must accept their plank on woman suffrage and they yours on secretism—then success will be certain. I shall vote prohibition this time unless I ascertain that some of our candidates are Masons. Yours with God for the right."

Bro. Hall's reminiscences will be gratefully received. No doubt they will be very interesting to all our readers.

R. A. Stewart, Blanch, Lincoln county, Tenn., writes of his efforts for reform:

"I have given about all my Cynosure papers away to different persons. The Oddfellows seem to take a very great interest in the paper, calling on me for them. An Oddfellow said to me that he got a Mason to acknowledge some things and he wanted more papers in order to get more out of him. He seemed to be glad to learn so much and not have to pay for information. I conversed with an Oddfellow yesterday relative to secret societies. He acknowledges that Freemasonry or Oddfellowship will not save a man. He said Rev. Byrum went to see a Freemason lying at the point of death. He asked him if he was prepared to die. The Mason pointed to his breast-pin. As much as to say he depended on Masonry to take him to heaven. O lamentable! to think of thousands who have gone down to everlasting punishment, and millions are on their way to the pit of destruction. O how long will Satan be permitted to lead men into these delusions! It rejoices my heart to know that there are good and great men in the field of reform to day who have shaken off the shackles of these benighted institutions and have raised their banners in behalf of the cause of God."

Programme for the Week of Prayer.

The Evangelical Alliance his issued the following programme for the Week of Prayer, January 7th to 14th, 1877:

"Sunday, Jan. 7.—Sermons: Christian fellowship, 1 John i., 7.

Monday, Jan. 8.—Thanksgiving and confession in the review of the past year.

Tuesday, Jan. 9.—Prayer: For the Holy Spirit on the Universal Church, Joel ii., 28; for its deliverence from error and corruption, and its increase of faith, activity, holiness and Christian charity.

Wednesday, Jan. 10.—Prayers for families: For the unconverted, for sons and daughters at school and college and for those abroad, for any in sickness, trouble, or temptation, and for those who have been recently "added to the church.'

Thursday, Jan. 11.—Prayer for nations; for rulers, magistrates, and statesmen; for philanthropic and benevolent institutions; for a pure literature, the spread of sound education among the people, and the maintenance of peace.

Friday, Jan. 12.—Prayer for Christian missions to the Jews and Gentiles, Luke xxiv., 47; for Sunday schools; and for the conversion of the world to Christ.

Saturday, Jan. 13.—Prayer for the observance of the Christian Sabbath; for the promotion of temperance and for the safety of those 'who go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters.'

Sunday, Jan. 14.—Sermon: One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all.—Ephes. iv., 5-6."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 2, 1876.

In conducting the government of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but SECRET SOCIETIES to be considered which have agents everywhere,—reckless agents, who countenance assassination and if necessary, can produce a massacre.—Disraeli.

The Religious Press.

The American newspaper press is becoming a mighty instrument to obliterate, confound and destroy the distinction which Christ made so prominent between the church and the world. The so-called secular prints publish religion, and the religious papers politics and the price-current. It is especially significaut that this secular zeal for religion began to develop itself just about the time that Sunday papers sunk all regard for the Sabbath in large printing establishments, where the Lord's day is little more regarded than by Caffirs, or the natives of Hindoostan. Is this deluge of religion in the secular press to offset aud cover up the fact that the paper goes to press through the broken law of God?

But the very phrase "religious press" is becoming almost a burlesque. God has still a seed to serve him on earth, and Christians are the best customers. This makes papers taken by Christian people the best medium for advertizing. This has given rise to a class of prints which made wealth by their advertizing patronage. Christians take these papers because, forsooth, they are "religious," the orgaus of their churches, and merchants, maufacturers, underwriters and speculators pay enormous sums for advertizing in a paper which is read by thousands of religious people, and the church thus becomes the carcass coveted by the eagles of trade.

This might work for good by diffusing religious intelligence and bringing Christiauity to the front, if our religious papers were religious. But to-day an unpopular reform like that which opposes the idolatry and deism of the lodge has actually less to hope from "religious" than secular prints. The Boston Congregationalist, as a rule, suppresses all information concerning the National Christian Association and its meetings. The Advance gives its readers no information on this subject which is not forced into it by outward pressure. The eccentric Tilton attempted to print articles from President Finney, but the attempt soon broke down and he with it. The Methodist Episcopal Advocates, being commonly edited by Freemasons, can afford to publish articles giving Anti-masonic intelligence, once in a while, without being suspected of favoring the reform. So with the Episcopal and Presbyterian papers, as numbers of ministers in those denominations, particularly the Episcopal, are members of the lodge. But as Western Congregationalists in Illinois and States adjacent, have repeatedly adopted and published stringent condemnations of the lodge, their organs are anxious to shun the subject lest they should be thought to sympathize with those anti-secret reports and resolutions. In short, the so-called "Religious Press" is, to a great extent, conducted on worldly, irreligious principles.

Our only remedy is to drop and refuse to pay for papers which suppress information concerning Christian reforms. Their moral nature is precisely that of the money tables and sacrificial cattle which Christ drove from the Temple at Jerusalem. Ostensibly there for purposes of religion, they were actually there for gain. There are a few glorious exceptions to these general remarks, and we rejoice to know that they gain steadily with the Christian people.

Hon. J. B. Walker on the Bible in Schools.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal) of Chicago, contains an article from the pen of Mr. Walker on the "Bible in Schools," or religion and the State. The article was declined by the Advance "for want of room," of course, though it finds room for pages of weak novels.

Dr. Walker's article covers more than a page of the Advocate and is to be issued by that press at once in tract form. It will be adopted as a Cynosure tract. Those who send for it will find it profound, like the "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," and a trifle harder to follow, but clear and conclusive like it. It is indeed a great document and unanswerable. We extract the following, which are a powerful document in themselves. Every real scholar and statesman will be delighted with it.

The following propositions have been proved, seriatim:

1. Man by nature is a cultivator, and is himself capable of cultivation.

2. No species can raise itself above its natural level, but must be elevated by a nature superior to its own.

3. The mental constitution of animals and man shows that man is the cultivator of nature and that God is the cultivator of man.

4. Written or sign language is the only adapted means of elevating man from a barbarous to a civilized state.

5. Nature furnished no signs of ideas that would reveal the true character of God.

6. Moses was a sign-maker; and in the New Testament the cross of Christ is the ultimate sign of Divine love.

7. Truth in written language has, of itself, no power to change moral character. It may enlighten the intellect, but a sense of God in truth alone gives the efficacy to reach the heart and conscience.

8. The Christian revelation in the New Testament has the characteristics which are specially adapted to the moral culture of mankind.

9. Special adaptations of the New Testament, which show the agency of God as distinctly as adaptations in nature.

These conclusions being legitimately established, it follows:

1. That to exclude the Bible from the common schools is a crime against families and against the state, because it withholds the only efficient means of cultivating the moral faculties of the children, upon which depends order and law and progress in society and in the state. The action of the legislature or school board, therefore, is suicidal that rejects the Bible as the standard authority of morals in the school-room.

2. Any effort made by sects, or churches, or skeptics to accomplish the exclusion of the New Testament should be resisted by every patriot. The New Testament is not sectarian. Its history and morals are alike received by all sects. A government founded on the will of the people can stand only on the intelligence and conscience of the people; and conscience can be rectified and empowered only by faith in divine revelation; the man, therefore, who aids ignorant or superstitious men of any sect to exclude from the schools that culture which gives light to the mind and rectitude to the conscience of the voter, and raises him above the influence of the bigot and the demagogue, should be enlightened as an ignorant man, or resisted as an enemy to free government.

Masonic Tricks.

A man from Vermont, who recently visited the Centennial, was arrested by the police for having a pair of slippers in his pocket, which had been taken from one of the show-stands of the Exhibition. As the man bears a good reputation among his neighbors, it is supposed that a trick was played upon him. It is not known whether it was a Masonic trick, of course; but it was a similar kind of trick that the Masons are said to have played off upon Morgan, in order to get him into the clutches of the law, and injure his good name. They thus made use of the law in order to defeat the law.

Another case of Masonic trickery is given us by a native-born citizen of South Carolina, to illustrate the manner in which the Ku-klux have been operating in order to intimidate and destroy Republican voters. Any one who carefully reads this account, and has watched the course of Masonic proceedings, will easily recognize the handiwork of th lodge in it. The account reads as follows:

"No mid night v sits are now paid or Ku-Klux missives dispatched. The whites have found by bitter experience that such things are boomerangs, which return with ten fold force to injure the thrower. They manage the matter better now. They wait till an obnoxious man whom they have doomed as a victim chances to stand or pass near them, say on a public square, at the post-office, in a bar-room, on the street. A crowd of white desperadoes will cluster near or follow him. They appear to be drunk, and begin to quarrel over some silly matter having nothing to do with politics. Several by-standers come up and take sides. Finally blows are exchanged, pistols drawn, and a regular free fight occurs. Shots are fired by all the party. Yet, strange to say, when order is restored, it is found that not one of the combatants is injured, while the poor Republican has been struck by several random shots and killed. An account of the affray appears in the press (the press is also wholly Democratic) under the heading "Street Row—One Man Killed." Not only are single men picked off in this way, but sham fights are arranged by white ruffians on some non-political pretense, which swell to the proportion of riots, and in which several Republican bystanders are killed by chance shots, while none of the combatants are hurt. Of course the authors of these deeds go unpunished In the first place it is impossible to tell who fired the shot. Then it is unsafe for any one to indict any body about it, or for the officials to be too zealous in investigating or prosecuting. But if an assassin does get into trouble by imprudence, his comrades, who of course compose most of the bystanders, are called as witnesses, and swear him out safely by giving in doctored testimony.

—A legal friend writes a letter criticising with some severity our remarks on the Sullivan trial and Judge McAllister, advising us, with the indignant public press generally, to know more of law be ore we pass strictures on the rulings of courts. Which would not be bad advice if we did not get much of the information on which we base our judgment, from lawyers themselves. Probably four-fifths of the legal fraternity, and more, are indignant as the editors. In this city some of these gentlemen will not even recognize McAllister any more than if he was a common villian: and the only published apology for him, from a few lawyers, stated at the most their belief that the Judge was honest in his purpose in ruling as he did. We are not lawyers, but what sense God and parents have given, inclines us to think that McAllister used manifest partiality in selecting the jury; in his rulings in regard to evidence; in his final instructions to the jury, which almost required an acquittal; in allowiug the Catholic crowd in the court-room full liberty to cheer the defendant; and in permitting the jury to abuse and even lay violent hands on one of their number. There is a city ordinance against carrying concealed weapons. Let anyone read McAllister's remarks on this point and say if he did not lay down a doctrine that puts the life of any man in the hand of any angry fellow who walks the street with a pistol in his pocket. We hope the "indignant press" and all other honest men will continue to agitate until our courts are purified from every taint of dishonor. A petition for McAllister's resignation has received between five and six thousand names and is to be presented this week.

—Now election is over, work for your paper.

COMMUNION WINE.—Prof. Lumry of Wheaton, Ill., after years of careful experiment from his own vines, sells unfermented wine for communion and medicinal purposes. There is no risk in the purchase of this article. The flavor and color are excellent, and it is positively unfermented, and unintoxicating.

We notice the Boston Congregationalist, (H. M. Dexter) is still, as years since, debating Bible wines with the temperance advocates of Massachusetts. Stephen A. Douglas repealed the Missouri Compromise, not merely to spread slavery into Kansas, but to assert "the great principle" of "Squatter Sovereignty." So these gentlemen devote years of labor and learning to prove the wines of the Bible, the Cana wine included, intoxicating, not indeed to justify wine-drinking, and the wine-drinkers of to-day; but to establish the great truth that Christ made, and the Bible sanctions intoxicating wines. And it is amusing to see how Messrs. Dexter & Co., after learnedly scotching some temperance man like Prof. Thayer, pour out a gush of temperance platitudes. But, somehow or other, slaves were taken into Kansas; and wine-drinking flourishes under Dexter & Co.

Unsophisticated men are ready to ask, since what is called wine to-day, in the United States, the common wine of commerce, is known to be a compound of alcohol and drugs; and since men, especially young men, habitually get drunk on, and become drunkards by using these wines, may not these learned students of Bible wines have some slight practical reference to the dinner tables of some wealthy pastors; or, indeed, to their own personal tastes and habits.

"Oh, what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal?"

We have the following additional names to report for the roll of honor:

P. B. Rippetoe, Dixon, Ill.
W. B. Rippetoe, Shelbyville, Tenn.
J. Q. Derry, Tolono Lodge, No. 391, Ill.
G. F. Cole, Tuscarora, N. Y.
Wm. Bartle, " "
Rev. Sidney Soper, Morristown, N. Y.
Rev. Anthony Palmer, (14) Norwich, Conn.
Jefferson Campbell (3) Willimantic, Conn.

Let the friends of the reform take some pains to find out names which should appear on this list. Bro. Hinman, in his report mentions two, will some friend in Dundee get their permission and send on their names to H. L. Kellogg, the Recording Secretary N. C. A. at this office? The whole number reported in 162.

—Dr. Springer notices an error in printing John Quincy Adam's Letters. In the letter to Benj. Cowell the date is printed 1823; it should be 1832. Our publishers will have the plate corrected before another edition is printed.

—Rev. S. Smith, a veteran in the Wesleyan church and the cause of reform has lately removed from Manchester, Iowa, to Westerville, Decatur Co., in the same State. He wishes all friends of the truth as it is in Christ and opposed to the lodge in that and adjoining counties to open correspondence with him or otherwise inform him of their standing.

—The Primitive Christian and the Pilgrim, the church organs of the Brethren, commonly known as German Baptists, have united their lists and labors under the former name and will be printed at Huntingdon, Pa. These papers have steadily and honestly maintained the position of the denomination against the lodge from the first. May the present arrangement prove as satisfactory and useful as its partners hope.

Apropos of the constantly increasing discussion of the merits of the proposed Metric weights and measures, we should not forget the words of John Quincy Adams, in his report to Congress more than a quarter a century ago.

Mr. Adams gave ample time and all his abilities to the thorough study of the system, and, it is said, afterward spoke of his report as the great work of his life. The reasons that led Mr. Adams to report against its adoption at that time are no longer in force. The system itself, which has in the last ten years made such wonderful strides that it is now commonly known throughout the world as the "universal" system, is that of which Mr. Adams deliberately said: "Considered merely as a labor-saving machine, it is a new power offered to man incomparably greater than that which he has acquired by the new agency which he has given to steam. It is in design the greatest invention of human ingenuity since that of printing."

Later in the same report, with words prophetic of what we are evidently soon to see, Mr. Adams says: "If man upon earth be an improvable being; if that universal peace which was the object of a Savior's mission, which is the desire of the philanthropist, the trembling hope of the Christian, is a blessing to which the futurity of mortal man has a claim of more than mortal promise; if the spirit of evil is, before the final consummation of things, to be cast down from his dominion over men, and bound in the chains of a thousand years — the foretaste here of man's eternal felicity — then this system of common instruments to accomplish all the changes of social and friendly commerce will furnish the links of sympathy between the inhabitants of the most distant regions; the meter will surround the world in use as well as in multiplied extension; and one language of weights and measures will be spoken from the equator to the poles."

THANKSGIVING.

From year to year we have been accustomed to pause in our daily pursuits and set apart a time to offer our thanks to Almighty God for the special blessings he has vouchsafed to us, with our prayers for a continuance thereof. We have at this time equal reason to be thankful for his continued protection and for the many material blessings which his bounty has bestowed.

In addition to the favors accorded to us as individuals, we have special occasion to express our hearty thanks to Almighty God, that by his providence and guidance our Government, established a century ago, has been enabled to fulfill the purposes of its founders in offering an asylum to the people of every race, securing civil and religious liberty to all within its borders, and meting out to every individual alike justice and equality before the law. It is moreover especially our duty to offer our humble prayers to the Father of all mercies for a continuance of his divine favor to us as a nation and as individuals.

By reason of all these considerations, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend to the people of the United States to devote the thirtieth day of November next to the expression of their thanks and prayers to Almighty God, and laying aside their daily avocations and all secular occupations to assemble in their respective places of worship and observe such day as a day of thanksgiving and rest.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and first. U. S. GRANT. [L. S.]

The Home Circle.

Come, Labor On.

Come, labor on!
Who dares stand idle on the harvest plain?
While all round him waves the golden grain,
And to each servant does the Master say,
"Go, work to-day!"

Come, labor on!
Claim the high calling angels cannot share—
To young and old the Gospel gladness bear;
Redeem the time; its hours too swiftly fly,
The night draws nigh.

Come, labor on!
The laborers are few, the field is wide,
New stations must be filled, the blanks supplied;
From voices distant far, or near at home,
The call is "Come!"

Come, labor on!
The enemy is waking night and day,
To sow the tares, to snatch the seed away,
While we to sleep our duty have forgot,
He slumbered not.

Come, labor on!
Away with gloomy doubts and faithless fear;
No arm so weak but may do service here;
By feeblest agents can our God fulfill
His righteous will.

Come, labor on!
No time for rest, till glows the western sky,
While the long shadows o'er our pathway lie,
And a glad sound comes with the setting sun,
"Servants, well done!"

Come, labor on!
The toil is pleasant, the reward is sure:
Blessed are those who to the end endure,
How full her joy, how deep her rest shall be,
Oh Lord with thee!

Stupid Sundays.

Perhaps I ought to say Sunday afternoons. The morning is lively enough, what with breakfast a little late, dressing for church and getting youngsters ready, looking over lessons, etc. But after we have come home from church and Sunday school and have eaten our dinner (I think we eat rather more than on week-days) and have spent a comfortable hour with our favorite religious paper—we elders, of course, I mean—there comes a change over the spirits of the family. Hitherto we have been brisk and lively, but now a certain dreaminess creeps over us a tendency to lean back in our chairs, close our eyes, and indulge in—thought. About this time some of us are generally found missing from the room, and if sought for in our closets, would not I fear be found engaged in meditation or prayer.

The children, too, have reached a very uneasy stage. Dressing and dinner has kept them busy, but now there comes a level stretch of time that it frets their impatient spirits to travel. Possibly the head of the family, mindful of parental duty, reads aloud to them, or catechizes them upon the lesson of the day; but these exercises cannot well extend over an hour, and there remain four or five more before supper time. There can be no gleeful rushing out of doors for fun and frolic, it is hardly admissible to range the chairs in line for stage coach or blindman's buff, or puss in the corner, or the other lively sports that a rainy day allows to little ones. Perhaps a Scripture story or a picture book may content them a little longer, and then—and then—do you hear a whispered muttering over in the corner?

"I think Sunday's a real stupid day; don't you?"

"Yes I do. You can't do this, and you can't do that, and you can't have anything nice as on other days. I'm glad when it's over."

"So am I."

Something wrong here? Yes, there is; and what is more there seems no ready means of righting it.

"I'll tell you what I have found out," said neighbor Ringway, to whom I said something like the above. "A young painter fell from a ladder last summer and paralyzed the lower part of his body. He lies, and will lie for months to come, helpless on his bed. He has a wife and child. Of course their means of living are cut off. I, as well as others, have aided the poor fellow, and mean to look after the family this winter.

"I have a little boy, restless and active, to whom Sunday afternoons are a sore burden. One Sunday when he was fretting about the house, teasing his mother and plaguing the baby, I said to him, 'Harry, would you like to go and see poor Mr. Glazier?' The boy's face brightened, and he said, 'Of course I would, papa.' He hurried to get his things, and mamma gave him a little basket of fruit to carry. I put some papers in my pocket and we started out. The fresh air seemed to blow away Harry's ill humor and he went skipping along, gaily chatting.

"We had a pleasant call at the Glaziers, and they seemed glad to see us. Harry played with the children and heard Mr. Glazier give his account of the accident, and took his first lesson in practical doing good. I felt a hundred per cent. better than at home dozing over a newspaper.

"We came home and (mother had a nice quiet time while we were gone) had a pleasant little Bible lesson, then some singing, and then when my little fellow went to bed I heard him say, 'Sunday's real nice.'

"I tell you, neighbor, to get the full benefit of Sunday we must give as well as take; get hold of somebody who needs sympathy and help, and after your soul has been fed by hearing and reading the gospel, go and talk it out with them and take your children with you. You won't complain of stupid Sundays any more."

I believe neighbor Ringway is right!—Bapt. Weekly.

Growing Old Gracefully.

Dr. Samuel Johnson, the intellectual giant, once remarked in substance that he who grows old neglecting to "keep his friendships in repair, will find himself at last alone in the world." As we grow older, we must revive and preserve old friendships, but make new friends. It is creditable to human nature, that as men pass their youth they are relieved from the need of seeking friends. If a man has lived to any purpose, his younger cotemporaries look up to him with respect, and are ready to honor and consult him. He has to receive overtures, not to make them; and if he has a disposition at all genial and courteous, the older he grows the larger is the circle of his friends and acquaintances.

To this fair condition of things the disposition of the elders themselves is sometimes opposed. They decline to admit new faces into their circle, and repel rather than invite confidence and friendship. This is the very opposite of "Growing old gracefully." It is an effort to live in the yesterday instead of the to-day; the past instead of the present. But the past is useful for no particular purpose, except in the fruits which it bears in the present. In that view it is invaluable, for the best things which the world possesses are the growth of time. The "treasury" contains things "new and old," and if the young and active are the appliers of the new, the veterans are the custodians of the old. When the old "treasures" are demanded, those can best produce them who are most familiar with them. "Old men for counsel" is a wise proverb. "Old men for friendship," might be added as a pendant to the saying. Old men and young, like experience and experiment, are the complement of each other. Neither is complete alone.—Selected.

An Awful Confession.

A few days since I met an inebriate on the street, whose wife was buried but a week ago. I urged him to reform, and endeavored to hold before his mind the dreadful ruin his course had brought upon him and his family, on the one hand, and the possibility of reformation and amends on the other. He seemed to be sober and in a condition to realize the matters I presented to him. Great tears dropped in rapid succession from his eyes as I spoke to him, and for a time he was so overwhelmed that he could make no response. At last with convulsive sobs he said: "I know it all, Mr. B., and more. I have experienced the worst of it. I can never make amends for the past. I can never undo the work of rum. Rum has taken everything that is worth living for from me, and what is worst of all—a thing that torments me more than all beside—it has made me the murderer of my wife, one of the noblest women that ever lived!" Here his voice was choked off again by the most harrowing sobs. Self-condemned, he broke down before the bar of his own conscience. He had a noble wife, one who drank from the cup of sorrow and blighted hope in proportion as he drank from the cup of hell, and that without a murmur, till she found rest in the grave and in heaven. This world to her had no bright side. Christ and heaven were her solace. Before she expired she collected her family about her, a family of nine children, and commended them all to Christ. Upward of twenty years ago that woman was a rosy-cheeked girl, oblivious of any danger of such a life and such results. When admonished by her parents that the young man whom she delighted in so much, and who was known to visit saloons occasionally, might wring into her cup the bitter dregs of a drunkard's wife, she laughed at the idea, thinking he thought too much of her to prefer the saloon to his home, or to forsake her society for that of bloodshot-eyed topers. It will be well if there are not some young ladies who will read these lines and yet duplicate her suicidal folly!

When Elisha told Hazael that he would burn the strongholds of Israel, slay their young men, and dash the infants against the wall, amazed and overwhelmed he cried out: "But what! is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing!" But no sooner was he in a position to do it than he did the very thing which had shocked him at the prophet's recital. If, when this poor, wretched mortal of whom I am writing, took this blushing bride by the hand, one would have told him that the idol of his heart would in a few years become the victim of a hellish appetite at his hand, he would have been as much astonished as Hazael. Yet such has been the sequel.

Young lady! do you desire to be murdered at the hand of your husband? Then choose for your companion a young man who occasionally takes a drink in company. Young man! do you wish to become a self-condemned murderer, a murderer of the vilest degree—a murderer of your best earthly friend—the most precious boon known in this life—an affectionate, devoted wife? Then take an occasional drink.—Evangelical Messenger.

Scriptural Enigma.

Dear Sir:—The following is a rendering of your Scriptural enigma found in the Christian Cynosure Oct., 26th, 1876:

"I am the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley."—Olivet—Moses—Aaron—Heaven—He—Lion—Year—Day—Hell—Of—The—Dates—First (second 7 should be 9). Cant. ii. 1. Jno. Harden.

The answer is correct. Who of our young folks will send another?

What Forgetting led to.

Fred and Susie sat on the front door step, watching their father and mother walking down the road to church. Brother Nat was in the dining-room reading. The two elder sisters had gone to church early. For good reasons it was best for the children to stay at home this Sabbath.

They sat contentedly in the pleasant sunshine, talking. Presently Fred said:

"I wish 't'wasn't Sabbath; we'd go after chestnuts, over there by the big maple. See it?"

"'Twouldn't be breaking the Sabbath badly."

"I know it; and there are lots of nuts on the ground, I know."

"Ain't chestnuts good, though!" said little Sue, smacking her lips.

"Let's go for some," proposed Fred.

Fred was the oldest, and Susie never questioned his plans when she liked them. So she jumped up quickly and said:

"Yes, let's go."

A small river ran between the children's home and that chestnut tree. People going "cross lots" got over by a little foot bridge. It had rained all day Friday and Saturday. The river was swollen, and ran swiftly and deep over its rocky bed.

The children sped through the garden and across the meadow lot to the little bridge. Fred looked over his shoulder twice as he ran, feeling guilty; but there was no one to see—no one but He who made the Sabbath, and said, "Remember it."

The children had often crossed the bridge, though Susie never liked to, for sometimes she felt dizzy; and once, when half-way over, she had to get down on her hands and knees and creep over. When mamma found it out, she said Susie must never cross there again unless papa or Nat or one of the older girls was with her. This Sabbath morning she seemed to remember nothing, but stepped on the beam with heedless feet. Fred went over like a squirrel, and was already running toward the tree.

"Wait, wait!" cried Susie.

She saw the water flowing dark and fast below, and her head grew dizzy. She screamed again.

"Wait, Fred!"

Fred looked back. and shouted—"Come on!"

His heart almost stopped beating with fright and horror, for at that instant his little sister fell headlong into the swollen river.

But the loving Father in heaven, though grieved over his broken commandment, saved little Susie. Brother Nat had missed the hum of voices, and laid down his book to see what the children were doing. He walked down to the river where it widened over a gravelly bed, and was usually shallow and still, and had hardly reached the bank when suddenly his little sister's blue dress appeared in the deep water before him floating swiftly by.

He rushed into the river to save her. In a few minutes he waded out, with the little dripping bundle held tightly in his arms, and ran home as fast as he could. Nat knew just what to do for the poor little girl; but it took so long to coax back the breath that he began to fear it had gone out altogether.

When the rest of the family came home they found Nat holding a huge roll of blankets, out of which peeped a very pale, sorry little face. Fred was curled up on the lounge with his head under the pillow. Nat told the story; Susie cried softly, with her eyes shut tightly, and Fred shook with great sobs. When Nat finished, father said:

"Let us thank God."

He kneeled down by Fred, and put one arm around him. Mother leaned over Nat's shoulder, and Susie felt warm tears dropping gently on her forehead. The children had forgotten God's commandment and their mother's, but they never forgot that prayer, so tender and loving. When it was finished, Susie said as Nat bent his head to hide the tears in his eyes:

"God feels so, too, I guess. I shan't be afraid to say 'Our Father,' to-night."

Facts about Turkey.

The following is a report of a lecture on the condition of Turkey, as delivered in Waukegan, Ill., recently, by Gregory Michaelian, a native Armenian from Asiatic Turkey, and reported for the Inter-Ocean of Chicago:

The Turkish Empire, he said, is great, extending far to the East, including Arabia, Egypt, and most of northern Africa. England wants this empire and will spend a hundred millions of dollars rather than lose it; but Russia is determined to have it, that she may control the commerce of the Black and Mediterranean seas and of the great East. In European Turkey the people are 2,000,000 Mohammedan, and 10,000,000 Greek Christians, who hate each other, and do not assimilate. The Mohammedans, the minority, rule the Christians with rigor, demanding large revenues of them, hence the present insurrection, which is their struggle for civil and religious liberty. In Asiatic Turkey 2,000,000 are Greek Christians, while the rest are mostly Mohammedans. The Armenians are the old settlers; the Turks are the invaders and of recent origin. In all the empire the people live in cities and villages, never scattered as in this country. Farmers go five, ten, and even fifteen miles to their farms, work a few days and return to their homes. The ruling class are called Osmanlis, never Turks there, only when they quarrel and vituperate each other severely; for Turk, a term of opprobrium, means a wild, mean barbarian; so they are greatly offended to be called Turks.

Their cities, very different from ours, are divided so that people of each nationality have a corner for themselves. The Greeks have their corner, the Armenians their corner, the Protestants theirs, and the Moslems theirs, which is always the best part. Each people keeps separate from the others, as the English from the French; speaks its own language; has its own schools, churches, habits, and style of living. Boys sometimes cross the national line and fight, but cannot understand the language of the other party. No person is allowed to go out of his corner of the city into that of another nation, especially at night, except the Moslems, who are privileged people, rule the country and can go where they please.

The Greek Christians are picture worshippers, fill their churches and cover the walls with pictures. Each worshipper entering a Greek church buys a wax candle, lights and sticks it on the wall by the picture which he wishes to honor. Then he worships, makes crosses and various motions, says prayers, so the exercises are more various and novel than those of any theater. The Moslems go in numbers to witness these strange modes of worship, but allow no infidels to enter their mosques.

A Protestant chapel, so plain, with only a desk and a Bible on it, is a wonderful thing in Turkey, and this way of worshiping God seems sensible to Mohammedans, and most easily wins them, though they have not allowed Protestants to hang bells in their chapels until lately, lest theirs should be called a Christian country. All that is valuable in the Koran was taken from the Bible, the ideas of purity, paradise, punishment, God and duty, hence is an offshoot of Christianity, and hence Moslems, if educated, would philosophize and rise above the religion of the Koran to be Christians. So schools and the Bible will bring the millions of Turkey a high civilization. Only ignorance keeps them Mohammedans.

A Moslem quarreling with a Christian says this is our country, you must keep still and obey me, my words are law, yours never. Their coffee houses are news depots, i. e., the Turks having no daily newspapers, congregate after breakfast in these to sip coffee and smoke, and get new ideas from each other. Statesmen sit beside farmers to get news and exchange opinions, and so keep posted.

The Turks hate whisky and all sorts of wine, so only the Greek Christians drink and get drunk. Christians are not allowed to accumulate property, lest they depose the Moslems and become rulers. One Christian, a banker in Constantinople, became very wealthy. When the Turks confiscated his property and threatened to kill or imprison him, he fled to England, having only a valuable ring as his treasure, but after several years returned as an Englishman, and was poisoned.

So Turkey stands right in the way of progress, and must come up to the standard of this age or be absorbed into other nations. Constantinople is the center of the world, of its commerce, interests, people, and wealth. The condition of females is deplorable, The schools and missions of the American Board are doing a noble and wide-spread work in Turkey.

Where Box-wood comes from.

Not everyone is aware that the wood used be engravers is the growth of those far away regions around the Black and Caspian Seas, the very names of the ports from which it is shipped being unfamiliar. Very few who consider themselves good geographers have ever heard of Poti, or Abkassia, or Tzaritsin, and yet these are flourishing commercial towns, reached by the way of the Golden Horn of Constantinople.

For all fine engravings, Turkey box-wood is used, and as its quality varies much, some skill is necessary to a good selection. The best is of a delicate yellow color, clear and free from spots; it cuts smoothly and evenly, with no crumbling nor tearing, but every line cut will be perfect.

It is to the use of this wood by our artists that the superiority of their designs and wood-engravings must in a great measure be attributed. In consequence of its scarcity and high price, many substitutes have been resorted to; maple, apple, pear, mahogany have been experimented upon; but hitherto no wood, metal, or composition has been discovered that posseses the requisite qualities.

In addition to engraving, box-wood is used for scales, rules, gauging rods, and similar articles on which figuring is made; and there are factories in Connecticut that consume hundreds of tons annually for this purpose alone. Any one that has ever held a carpenter's rule in his hand knows what box-wood is like. It differs in color and texture from all other wood, and it is somewhat remarkable that it comes to perfection only in a comparatively limited region of country in the vicinity of the Black Sea. It weighs about seventy-five pounds to the cubic foot, and varies in price to land it in Boston from $75 to $250 a ton.

Home and Farm.

The Toothache.—A gentleman says: After suffering excruciating pain from toothache, and having tried in vain to obtain relief, Betty told me a gentleman had been waiting some time in the parlor, who said he would not detain me one minute. He came—a friend I had not seen for years. He sympathized with me, while I briefly told him how sadly I was afflicted.

"My dear friend," exclaimed he, "I can cure you in ten minutes."

"How? how?" I inquired; "do it in pity."

"Instantly," said he. "Betty, have you any alum?"

"Yes."

"Bring it, and some common salt.

They were produced; my friend pulverized them, mixed in equal quantities; then wet a small piece of cotton, causing the mixed powders to adhere, and placed it in my hollow tooth.

"There," said he, "if that does not cure you I will forfeit my head. You may tell this in Gath and publish it in Askelon; the remedy is infallible."

It was so. I experienced a sensation of coldness on applying it, which gradually subsided. and with it the torment of the toothache.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Spirits of Ammonia.—There is no telling what a thing will do till you try it. I knew ammonia diluted in water, could restore rusty silks and clean coat collars, but when I got a green spot on the carpet, I tried half a dozen other things before I thought of that, and that is just what did the work effectually. I put a teaspoonful into about a teacup of hot water, took a cloth and wet the spot thoroughly, just rubbing it slightly, and the ugly spot was gone. It is splendid for cleaning your silver; it makes things as bright as new without any expenditure of strength; and for looking-glasses and windows it is the best of all: and one day when I was tired and my dish cloths looked rather gray, I turned a few drops of ammonia into the water and rubbed them out, and I found it acted like a charm, and shall be sure to do so again some day. I suppose housewives have a perfect right to experiment and see what results they can produce; and if they are not on as large a scale as the farmers try, they are just as important to us, and they make our work light and brighter too. Now, I do not believe in luxuriating in a good thing all alone, and I hope all the house-keepers will send and get a ten cent bottle of spirits of ammonia and commence a series of chemical experiments and see what they can accomplish with it. Take the boys' jackets, the girls' dresses, and when you have cleaned everything else, put a few drops in some soft water and wash the little folks' heads, and report the results. —By a Farmer's Wife in Country Gentleman.

Loss of Appetite.—The Michigan Farmer offers this remedy for loss of appetite or indigestion in stall-fed cattle; "Sometimes cattle, when being fed high, refuse their food because their digestive organs are out of order. We find the following, made into a drink, recommended by an experienced cattle man: Epsom salts, fourteen ounces; sulphur, two ounces; ginger, one ounce; black antimony, one half ounce; aloes, one-half ounce. The whole well-powdered and mixed, and put into not less than four quarts of thin oat meal gruel."

LESSON XLVII.—NOV. 19, 1876.—DORCAS RESTORED TO LIFE

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ix: 31-43. Commit 36 40; Primary Verse, 40.

31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

32 And it came to pass as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

33 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.

34 And Peter said unto him, Eneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35 And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.

36 Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come unto them.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up; and when he had called the saints and widows, he presented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

News of the Week

—Close upon the management of the Sullivan case by Judge McAllister have followed two murders with as little provocation as Hanford's. The villainous class are quickest to understand the meaning of such trials.

—Senator Blaine suffered another physical calamity last week in a sudden attack of hoarseness while speaking in Brooklyn.

—In the event of a peaceable election in Louisiana the leading Republicans in that State have no doubt that it will be carried for Hayes by from 10,000 to 15,000 majority, and are equally certain of a gain of two Republican Congressmen.

—The Centennial is to be kept open unofficially after the 10th as long as a paying attendance is secured. An extra period of one week is already guaranteed.

—An Indian newspaper, sums up the prospects as to the famine in Bombay as follows: A famine in Sholapore, extreme dearth at Poonah, and great scarcity in six other districts. All these districts will yield only a fraction of their ordinary revenue. It is hoped that the distress may be relieved at a sixth of the cost of the Bengal famine.

—A digest of the crop returns for October, as prepared at the department of Agriculture, indicates a reduction in the yield of the wheat crop of nearly one-sixth, while the quality is somewhat superior. Every section of the Union indicates a reduced product except the Middle States. The figures point to a yield of about 245,000,000 bushels. Rye is reported at 4 per cent less than in 1876, but the quality is better; barley is 6 per cent. less than last year; buckwheat a full average; oats show a falling off of 23 per cent. Every section of the Union is deficient. The corn crop is deficient, but figures are not yet obtained. The cotton crop will be large, and is likely to approach the heavy yield of 1875. Sweet potatoes a full average crop; sorghum a full production.

—The latest news from Europe is not altogether pacific. Notwithstanding the compulsory acceptance of the six weeks' armistice by Turkey, it is by no means a settled question that it implies the acceptance of the peace propositions. On the other hand, it is beginning to be the opinion of the closest observers in Europe that the armistice is only the first step towards war between Russia and Turkey, and that the peace conditions are already a failure in advance. The most significant reason for this opinion is found in the desertion of Turkey by the other Powers. England, long time the friend of Turkey, has virtually declared she will not fire a gun in defense of Mahammedans; or to sustain the government of the Osmanlis. She will take no warlike step until her Eastern interests are involved by a menace to Constantinople. The German people through their Premier and the Emperor himself, have emphatically declared that they will not take part in any struggle as between the Turks and the Sclaves or the Turks and the Russians. The government of France, through its Prime Minister, has made the same declaration. The plans of Austria are not fully developed, simply because she is not yet decided upon the question of territorial acquisition. Italy, the fast friend of Germany, will follow Bismarck's policy. Thus the Sclaves, with the power of Russia back of them, are left face to face with the Turks to settle conditions of peace.—Tribune.

Religious Intelligence.

—A Swedish Congregational church of twenty members has been formed at Keokuk, Iowa, Oct. 20th with a great work opening before it among the Scandinavians of that vicinity.

—Dr. Rankin, of Washington city, recently stated that there were from 1500 to 2000 conversions from Mr. Hammond's preaching in that city last winter, and 1200 or more additions to the churches. It is hoped that Mr. Hammond will go to Kensington in the northern part of Philadelphia.

—The efforts for the salvation of drunkards in connection with the revival meetings here are having great success. The revival work is spreading among the churches of the city and the cities of the Northwest. Pastors begin to report conversions and revival meetings are being held by Whittle and Bliss, Inglis, Morehouse and Needham at Kalamazoo, Mich.; Belvidere, Ill.; Kenosha and Oshkosh, Wis. A German meeting was held in Farwell Hall on Sabbath afternoon. Eighteen German ministers signified their willingness to be present and assist in the work.

—Two female missionaries, Misses Mary A. Frazier and Carrie Elder, embarked at Philadelphia, Oct. 19th for the United Presbyterian mission work in Egypt.

—The well known Professor Max Muller said several years since: "From all I know of the Hindoos, they seem to me riper for Christianity than any nation that ever accepted the Gospel."

—The members of the Eastern Turkey Mission recently held their annual meeting and continued it for ten days. The reports showed that there are 30 native churches, 1,582 communicants, and 6,663 attendants connected with this mission.

—In Japan, as lately as 1870, there were twelve Protestant native Christions, while now, through the blessing of God upon Christian endeavors, there are ten Christian churches, and nearly 1,000 native converts in them.

—The American Missionary Association held its anniversary in Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 25th. The receipts for the year were $264,709.03, the expenses $261,382.83, a decrease in the one of $8,000 and of other of $20,000, yet paying 3,000 on the debt of $96,000. There are 70,000 colored children at schools in charge of the Association and a number of colored missionary teachers are preparing to go to Africa, this year. Death has taken prominent officers and friends during the year. Rev. Geo. Whipple, the chief secretary; Rev. E. P. Smith; Hon. Henry Wilson; Rev. Geo. Bacon and three female missionaries have died.

—The election of delegates to the next General Conference of the United Brethren in Christ takes place this month. The meeting of this next quadrennial conference will be of great importance to that church, some of the leading questions being the discipline of the church regarding secret orders, the status of presiding elders and a successor of the beloved Bishop David Edwards.

tle to the wall. It was arranged that I should preach in a hall on Sabbath afternoon (the 22d) and in the evening speak on the religion of Freemasonry. I spoke to fair audiences on both occasions. On Monday Father Davis devoted the day to making preparation for lectures in Dundee. This was the former field of Bro. Barlow, and the fruits of his labors still remain. While the Baptist church is noncommittal on this question, yet many of its members are earnest friends of this reform. This is true of the Congregational Church, of which Father Davis is a member. Its pastor expressed his hearty sympathy; he having taken one degree in Masonry and being thoroughly disgusted. Among others we called on a Freemason of thirty-two degrees who told us that Freemasonry was a sham and a fraud; and that its obligations were such as no man ought to take or was bound to keep. He contributed something toward paying for the hall. May the Lord open his mouth and make him a faithful witness for Christ.

My two lectures in Dundee were not as well attended as they would have been but for the political excitement that drew many people to Elgin on both evenings to listen to the rival candidates for Congress from that district. There was considerable disorder both evenings, and on Tuesday night the young men of the Good Templars' lodge showed their sympathy with Freemasonry by almost constant stamping, hissing, whistling and finally by throwing shelled corn over the hall. Verily secretism in all its manifestations is one in spirit and always and everywhere hates the truth.

On Wednesday, the 25th, I came to Baraboo and have given three lectures on secretism to fair audiences and preached twice on the Sabbath for the Wesleyans, who, under the lead of Rev. W. VanDussen are doing a noble work for the Lord. Bro. Watkins has been with me and gives his testimony which is believed by all who know him. The Masons are full of wrath but just now Masonry in Baraboo is distracted, divided and in disrepute, and they have be very cautious. We are likely to have a full legal investigation of the Master Mason's obligation. Some time since a member of the Baraboo lodge was tried for unmasonic conduct and acquitted, but recently the brother of the seduced and murdered girl has shot this same lodge-member and it is feared that he will not recover. His trial waits to see what will be the result of the shooting. The sympathies of the people are largely with the young man who did this rash, unlawful act, professedly to avenge his sister's ruin.

I have work laid out for some time to come, and may possibly arrange to spend the winter in this State.

Yours for Christ.

The Revival.

MR. MOODY'S SERMON ON THE BLOOD OF THE ATONEMENT.

As I announced yesterday I am going to speak to-night upon the blood. I would call your attention first to a verse in the second chapter of Genesis. "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it, and the Lord God commanded the man saying, 'Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.'" There CANNOT BE A LAW WITHOUT A PENALTY.

There is not a law we have in our land but has a penalty. If our representatives in Congress or State Legislature make a law, and there is no penaltyit is worthless and no law. They might make a law against stealing, and if it was without a penalty they could not stop stealing. We could not live in this world without a law, so law is all right. You all know how Adam disobeyed and fell. I used to stumble over that verse when I thought that Adam lived 930 years—that he didn't die then and there. It was not the natural life that died, but the life of the soul. He became dead to God. He fell out of communion with God, so when God came down to see him he had hid away he tried to cover up his sin and save himself. But now we find that God deals with him in grace. People think that God was very severe in dealing thus with Adam, but they forget that he first dealt with him in grace. If it were you and I we would have hurled him out at once. Now look at the twenty-first verse of the third chapter. "Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skin and clothed them." There we find grace. Then in the 24th verse of the same chapter we find that he drove out the man and placed cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life. There is government, and from that day to the present God has been DEALING IN GRACE AND GOVERNMENT.

He may be said to drive in a chariot of two wheels, one of grace and the other of government. We could not live in this world but for government. But now we find God dealing in grace. These animals had to be killed—they could not have got the skins without slaying the animals, and we are told God clothed them before he drove them out of Eden. Here we find the great doctrine of substitution; there the innocent suffer for the guilty, the just for the unjust, for these animals hadn't sinned. Then, as we come on into the fourth chapter, we find the story of Cain and Abel. It says in the third verse, "And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord; and Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering." The fruit of the ground was cursed—everything that had come from the earth had been cursed—the curse was resting upon it. Now we find that Cain brought a bloodless sacrifice, and Abel brought a bleeding lamb. Abel came God's way, and Cain came in his own way; and so the world is divided to-day.. Some want to come to God without a sacrifice, and ignore the doctrine of substitution—the lamb and the blood; they don't want to come that way.

ABRAHAM'S OFFERING.

We read in the 8th chapter of Genesis that when Noah came out of the Ark the first thing he did was to put blood between him and his sin. In the 20th verse are these words: "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar." The offering up of this sacrifice was of such importance that God right clear through the flood ordered seven of each clean beast to be kept, instead of two, as in the case of other animals, that Noah might have them to offer as a sacrifice when he would come out of the Ark. So the first thing we find Noah doing after he left the Ark is to build an altar and let the blood flow. He was a man of God, so we find him taking this highway—walking by the blood. Then we come to the 32d chapter of Genesis, in the days of Abraham—the friend of God. We find he also walked this same highway—he had the blood between him and his sin. When his only son had grown almost to manhood, one night the voice of God said, "Take now thy son, thine only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there as a burnt offering upon one of the mountains that I will tell thee of." And we find that the next morning the old man started. He didn't confer with flesh and blood—undoubtedly he told his wife nothing about it. The Lord had taught him that to obey was better than anything else. He didn't wait till 10 or 12 in the day, but got up early in the morning and took two of his young men and Isaac, and away they go. He takes the wood and the fire and I see him as they go over the highway looking at his boy. He says, "This is a strange command I have got, I don't understand it, but I shall know it by and by—the Judge of all the earth does right—He makes no mistake," and away he goes. I see him the first night. Isaac is weary and falls off asleep. I can see him look into the face of that boy and say, "I shall have no boy soon—after a few hours I shall never see him again." On the second night I can see the old man trying to conceal his tears that the boy might not see him weep. The third night came, and what a night that must have been, as the old man looked at his boy and said, "To-morrow I must take the life of that boy who is dearer to me than life." When morning came, away off in the distance he sees the mountains, and he says to the two young men, "Stay here with the beast, and I and the boy will go yonder to worship. He takes the knife and the fire; and the old man and the son go up that mountain. It is Mount Moriah, right near where Calvary was, and as they went climbing up the boy turns to the father and says, "Father, here is the fire and the wood, but where is a lamb for a burnt offering?" The expression shows that Abraham had all these years been offering sacrifice to God—he had been shedding blood, and the boy understood that it was a part of his worship. But the father says, "My son God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering." It was not quite time to tell the boy what he had got to do. I see him getting to the summit of that mountain and getting everything ready for the sacrifice. I can imagine the old man said to the son, "Just take a seat, I want to talk to you," and began to tell him how God had called him out from idolatry and been with him and talked to him and blessed him. "And now," he says, "my boy, when I was on my bed three nights ago that God came to me with a strange message. He told me to bring you up and offer you as a sacrifice here. It was hard for me to part with you." I can imagine him praying with that boy that God might be with them in that trying hour. After prayer he binds him and lays him on that altar. He kisses him for the last time. He takes that knife and is about to drive it to the boy's heart, when he hears a voice, "Abraham, Abraham, lay not thine hand upon the lad." When in years after the Son of God went up on Calvary, no voice was lifted to spare him. God loved Abraham so much, he spared his Son. He loved us so much that he gave up his only Son to die for us. We are told that Abraham saw Christ's day and was glad. When he saw it I don't know but I can just imagine that from this very mountain when he obeyed God, that God then lifted up the curtain of time, and he saw the Son of God with the sins of the world laid upon him. So we find Abraham the friend of God took this highway—this way so many people talk against, the way of the blood. Our friend, Mr. Sankey, can sing a solo here, but I can imagine there is but one solo in Heaven and that was sung by Abel. He sang the song of redemption. It was a song the angels had never before heard in heaven. There must have been silence there around the throne when Abel was singing. But there is a great chorus there now. The first of that great chorus passed in by the blood, and the last who passes through those pearly gates must also go in that way for "without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins."

When I went East the other night, I went down to the railway station and got a ticket After a while the ticket collector came around, and he cried, "Tickets!" I got my ticket punched. I don't think he looked at me. He didn't care, or probably didn't know, whether I was a white man or a black man. He looked at the ticket that was enough. Our salvation don't depend on our good deeds or our own righteousness; but have we got the token—are we sheltered behind the blood?—that is the question. Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Caleb, were no safer that night, in Goshen than the little child six years old if it was under the blood. So that is the teaching through the Bible, that without the shedding of blood there is no remission. Now look at the 29th of Exodus and the 16th verse: "And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood and sprinkle it round about upon the altar." Now, before Aaron the high priest could come to God with his petition, he had to take the blood and sprinkle it round about upon the altar; and, friends, from the time Adam fell to the present no man ever had communion with God but came by the way of the blood. One time I did not believe in the substitution of blood, but went right to God himself, and prayed and prayed, and prayed, and the heavens were to me as brass; but when I came through Jesus, how quick the way was opened up. So when we want communion with God, we must go by the way of the blood.

Now look at the 8th chapter of Leviticus. You know this whole book is about worship. Now I used to read Leviticus, and used to say it was a strange thing I didn't understand a word of it. I would take a verse like this and say. "What on earth does that mean?" "And he slew it, and Moses took of the blood of it and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear and upon the thumb of his right hand and upon the great toe of his right foot." I wondered what this was all for, but I have a little light on it now. The blood on the ear is a sign that the man can hear the voice of God—none but the blood-bought can hear it. They won't know how to act right if they don't hear right. The blood upon the hand signifies that the man will work for God—consecration—that is what it is. Men who try to do something to please God trample the blood under their feet. No man need work for God until he is first sheltered behind the blood. Then blood upon the foot signifies that a man must walk with God. When a man is sheltered behind the blood he delights to walk with God. He is then brought into communion and fellowship with God. When he put these Israelites behind the blood in Goshen, then he came down and walked with them. So they passed over the Red Sea, and for them the crystal water brought forth in Horeb, and the manna came from heaven because they were a blood-bought people, and God walked with them. I imagine some one will say, "I don't understand why it is that God wants blood?" A man said to me some time ago: "I hate your religion." "Why?" I asked. "Because God demands blood," was the answer. In the 17th chapter of Leviticus and 11th verse the reason is given why God demands it. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood." You take the blood out of my system and I am a dead man. "I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for the soul;" 14th verse, "For it is the life of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life thereof; therefore I said unto the children of Israel, 'Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh, for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof, whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.'" Three times in these two verses God tells us why he demands blood—it is the life. Now you and I have lost life by the fall, and what you want is to get back what Adam lost. As I have said a good many times I would rather a thousand times be out of Eden with my life hid in Christ than as Adam in Eden with a chance of Satan coming in and taking his life from him. Our life is hid in Christ, and Satan cannot get at it. A great many men complain and begin to discuss the philosophy of it—they don't know why God ever allowed Adam to fall, but as Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow, said, it wasn't a greater mystery than Christ's coming into the world to save sinners. Let us thank God we have a substitute—let us thank him from the depths of our heart that he has made us a way to escape.

TRACT No. 23

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undonbtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of qnotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thonsands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH:

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150,000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots The present demand is fully 100,000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bonnd together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150,000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Notices.

NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the New Hampshire Anti-secret Christian Association will be held in Austin Academy, at Center Strafford, Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 6 and 7, 1876. The friends of reform in New Hampshire and the neighboring States are cordially invited to be present. The so-called secrets of the more prominent secret societies will be thoroughly exposed and their anti-Christian tendencies exhibited. God's blessing has rested upon our labors during the year. May his presence grace our first anniversary.

J. F. BROWNE, President.
S. C. KIMBALL. Secretary.

Center Stafford, N. H.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

The friends of Michigan will take notice that the second anniversary of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secrecy, will be held in the M. E. Church, Hastings, Barry county, on the 6th, 7th and 8th of December. The meeting to commence on the afternoon of the 6th at 2 o'clock. Hastings is easily reached, being on the railroad between Grand Rapids and Jackson. Arrangements are being made to secure a good list of prominent speakers and a pleasant time is anticipated. Arrangements have been made by the friends of Hastings to supply a home for all from abroad. Let every true reformer make it his or her business to attend for they will be expected. No excuse allowable but sickness.

By order of Executive Committee.
C. B. REMINGTON.

Fentonville, Mich.

Past Master Ronayne expects to return from Dodge county, Minnesota, about Nov. 18th, when he will make immediate preparations to visit Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, etc. Will all the friends East therefore who wish to have public exhibitions of Freemasonry given in their respective localities communicate at once with this office that Mr. Ronayne may make arrangements and set the time. He wishes to hear from all those who wrote before.

—A convention is to be held in Unionville, Putnam county, Missouri, Nov. 29th of which we expect further notice.

Topics of the Time.

The election just closed is one of the most remarkable in the history of the nation. At midnight on election day the magnetic needle of political expectation received a rude impulse, as if the poles of power had changed hemispheres; and the Republican press on Wednesday was in mourning. Next day their hope revived, the index trembled to its old seat in the North, but is unsettled yet. Tilden having carried New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Connecticut in the North, had, with the Southern vote, 184 votes in the electoral college, 185 being necessary for a choice. North Carolina with her ten votes was first counted the only doubtful State with the momentous decision in her hands. By Friday she was given up to Hayes and Florida's four votes became the bone of contention; Hayes claiming 181 electors, Tilden 184. On Monday, Louisiana took her place in the doubtful list with eight votes and Florida was in the Republican line. The precaution of both parties has sent large delegates of representative men to watch the returns and guard against fraud. The presence of U. S. troops and the decision of Pres. Grant helps wonderfully to maintain quiet. In Louisiana all but eleven parishes (counties) gave a strong Republican majority. In five of these eleven the election is claimed to be unfair from intimidation; so the battle is now cornered on these few counties, with what result another week may show.

The Christian at Work, under Mr. Talmage's editorial management, took no notice of the anti-lodge reform, that we are aware of, except in the form of coarse misrepresentation, the production, no doubt, of some under-editor. Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, who now takes the helm in that paper, promises that it shall have a right tone toward every Gospel reform. He says, "I purpose to be, here, as everywhere else, inflexible in my allegiance to the authority of Scripture, and unsparing in my opposition to everything that sets itself up against the Gospel of Christ." After this promise it is hard to understand the animus of an editorial in his first number exalting the lodge at the expense of the church of Jesus Christ—His "bride" and "the pillar and ground of the truth" he died to establish. We do not wish to judge this matter hastily, and wait for "more light."

The Centennial closed with one blot on its fame beside the traffic in liquor. When Pres. Grant and a hundred or two favorites were admitted on a recent Sabbath, the gates were left open, the regulation, accepted in good faith on the part of the American public, was broken down; and thence forward till the close, on every Lord's day, several thousand persons, "favorites," were admitted free of charge. This violation of a great public trust on the part of the management is most disgraceful. While the public is shut out, politicians, office-holders, railroad men, etc., find no bar to stop them, though law is defied, pledges broken, and common decency outraged. If the exhibition to be kept up in the Main building is to follow this lead for the benefit of the railroads, the pope and whiskey, the sooner it is stopped the better.

While the sanctity of the Sabbath receives such a blow "in the house of its friends," it is good cheer to read of an International Congress in Geneva, Switzerland, a few weeks ago, to promote a more sacred observance of the Lord's day in Europe. The Emperor of Germany, the King of Wurtemberg, and the Grand Duke of Baden, were each represented, as also were several railway companies. An International Confederation was formed on the basis of such Scriptures as "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it" (Gen. 2: 3); "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" (Ex. 20: 8); "The Sabbath was made for man" (Mark 2: 27). This movement is of the greatest importance and will stand as an event in the history of Europe.

Not all the Methodist Episcopal conferences, it seems, are satisfied with the fraternization with the Southern churches on the basis lately recommended. The Central New York Conference has adopted a report with great unanimity, declaring that the commissioners who agreed upon a plan for fraternal relations between the Northern and Southern Churches "transcended the powers committed to them" by the General Conference, "doing violence to the history and principles of the Methodist Episcopal Church," conceding "the right of secession," either ecclesiastically or civilly," and uttering sentiments which are "replete with untold dangers, while unrebuked, to both church and state." The ministers of this conference risk for honesty's sake, some reputation, but time will give honor to the record they have made against a treaty of peace which bears marks of falsehood and dishonor.

FREEMASONRY AND ROMANISM COMPARED AND EXAMINED.—V.

BY P. M. R.

Romanism teaches that if we live up to the precepts and obligations of the church and pass through purgatory, we shall surely be saved. Freemasonry tries to insist that if we live up to the precepts and obligations of the order and pass through the initiatory ceremonies of the three degrees, we shall surely go to the Grand Lodge above, and that in fact there is nothing more which the soul of man can require.

Romanism teaches that by rounds of ceremonies, by masses, grand vestments, lighted candles, indulgences granted by the Pope, purgatorial fires, penances, almsdeeds, priestly absolutions, and a varied multitude of other so-called good works, the worshipper is enabled to work out his own salvation; while Freemasonry teaches that by Masonic precepts, Masonic obligations, death penalties, initiations, hoodwinks, ropes, slippers, gavels, guages, aprons, lighted candles, grand ceremonials, grand regalia, grand titles, dispensations obtained from the Grand Master, and a numerous multitude of pagan rites and ceremonies, the candidate can secure for himself a local habitation in the "lodge above." The only difference in the two systems being that Romanism teaches the penitent to do good works so as to add to the sacrifice of Christ, to assist Jesus Christ in the work of salvation; while Freemasonry rejects Jesus Christ altogether and professes to save its devoted members not only without, but in fact in spite of the Redeemer.

And now let us turn from this picture of gloom and dark despair to contemplate Him who is "the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." Let us look from the chapel and the lodge, from the mass, the purgatorial torments, the indulgences, and the Masonic initiations, and empty forms and ceremonies of the Master's degree, and "behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world."

"The wages of sin is death," Rom. vi., 23. "We have all sinned and come short of the glory of God," Rom. iii., 23. We have all, every one of us, earned these wages, and we shall all surely receive it, unless some one else receives it for us. We must surely die unless we can furnish a substitute, unless some one else will die in our stead. We have nothing of ourselves—we are poor and miserable, and blind, and naked and "all our righteousness is but filthy rags," so that "by the deeds of the law (by good works so-called), there shall no flesh be justified in his sight," Rom. iii., 20. What then shall we do? How shall we escape from this threatened doom of eternal death? Blessed be God, our substitute has been provided for us, our ransom has been paid. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him and with his stripes we are healed," Isa. 53: 3. Jesus Christ has received the wages due to us. He died that we might live." He has trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him," Isa. 53: 3. He requires no assistance. We cannot do anything of ourselves to help him. He is the one and the only one that is "mighty to save," Isa. 63: 1; and he ever liveth to make intercession for us. "He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by him," Heb. vii: 25. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life," John iii: 16. You see the decree is gone forth "we shall surely die," "we shall all likewise perish" unless we accept the substitute provided for us. The destroying angel shall pass over our households and unless the blood of the Lamb be "sprinkled on the side posts and the upper doorposts of our souls, we shall be all dead men"—we can do nothing to save ourselves; we are utterly and irretrievably lost. But praise and glory to God, we need have no fear of this fearful, impending doom, if we only accept the substitute, for "being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," Rom. iii. 24. We are justified, that is, made just or righteous, not because we have done, or are capable of doing anything good, not because of Masonic initiations or Romish masses, but freely by the grace of God through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, "whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood," Rom. iii. 25. The devil's great masterpiece is to persuade people that they are not after all so very bad, that God is merciful, and that he will not utterly cast us out, but that we may, by living honest, sober lives, by not cheating anyone, or backbiting, or slandering our neighbor, by going to church regularly, by performing little acts of kindness once in a while, by so-called good works, by leading good moral lives, do enough to win God's favor, and that after all we shall surely go to heaven in the end. This is a fearful mistake. No one can help himself, and there can be no good work of any kind performed, until after we are born again. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost," Titus, iii. 5. "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works lest any man should boast," Eph. ii. 8, 9. Oh, that ministers would only see and understand this! that church members would see this, and that instead of rejoicing at having their names written on the roll-book of the Masonic lodge, they could rejoice because their names are written in heaven. "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light," Eph. v: 14. Poor, perishing sinner, you shall not be utterly lost. Come to Jesus. He says to you, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

Come ye sinners poor and wretched,
Come to Mercy's open door.
Jesus ready stands to save you
Full of pity, love, and power.
He is able—He is willing Doubt no more.

Oh come! let us all go. Let us all go together just at this moment. Why should we tarry any longer; we have waited long enough, lagging behind. Let us at this moment, just as we read these words, let us cast ourselves on our knees before God and accept the free gift he graciously offers to us; let us accept Jesus Christ. If we wait till to-morrow, it may be too late; if we wait till we have more time we shall never come; if we wait till we get a little better than we are, then we shall be surely lost, for we'll never get any better, but always worse.

If we tarry till we'er better,
We shall never come at all.

"Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money come ye and buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price, Isa. 55, 1. Neither Freemasonry or Romanism will give you anything without money. You must pay your way right along into the false heaven they pretend to provide for you, but Jesus Christ is gone on before to his father's house and he is busy preparing a place for us in the King's palace and is waiting to crown us there—and all he requires of us is to accept the place and the crown. And the invitation is extended to all, to the poor man, to the women, to the boys and girls, to the colored man, to the cripple—to all without exception. How different this from the practice of the lodge or the chapel? When Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto you except a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven," you must remember he spoke to a man who was full of good works. Why he was a doctor of the law, one of the great Jewish Sanhedrim, and in spite of all his good works and high official position, he must be born again, and so, my reader, must you and I be born again. May God help each one of us to accept the gift, and so be crowned with Jesus in eternal glory.

The Wards of the Nation.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER, WORCESTER, MASS.

At the thirtieth anniversary of the American Missionary Association at Fitchburg Mass., on 26th and 27th of October, Rev. Mr. Cheever, Worcester, made the following remarks upon an amendment by him offered to the annual report:

I cannot reconcile it with my irrepressible conviction of duty to let pass this part of the report pertaining to our education work in the South, without a more explicit and sympathizing reference to the present suffering condition of the subjects of this benign work of education there, and I therefore beg leave to submit an addition to that report in these terms.

Resolved, That in behalf of the millions of Southern freedmen, still the proper wards of the nation, and the beneficiaries, especially of the American Missionary Association, having the name but not yet the reality of freedom, there is demanded at the present time, more than ever before, both earnest prayer and right political action on the part of all American Christians.

The American Missionary Association lives, moves and has its being for colored men, the prophetic "children of the needy," to whom our opening Scripture (the lxxii. Ps.) has pointed so impressively. They and their condition are the sole ground of existence to this society. And in ordinary times it would be simply superfluous to urge in such a presence the duty of prayer and moral intervention in behalf of the abused freedmen of the South. But now, Mr. President, the exigency of the hour makes it obligatory on us to-day with an emphasis not to be mistaken that this nation is under bonds (to use the phrase you gave us yesterday),—this nation is under solemn bonds as the sworn guardian of the colored race in America. That race is now the aggrieved, suffering client of the whole American people. This great country, nay the entire Christian world, is the court, and this Nation the Advocate under oath of our suffering client. And this American Missionary Association is the providential Educator and Evangelizer of this great colored population. Its devoted teachers and preachers throughout the South are our proxies, distributing to our poor beneficiaries there the offerings of Northern churches for their instruction and improvment. And in my judgment, sir, we should be faithless to our trust in this providential relation, if we let pass an occasion like this Centennial, and an assembly of intelligent Christians in Massachusetts, our constituency at this our Thirtieth Anniversary, without solemnly protesting, in the name of all the churches of these United States, nay, in the name of insulted Christendom itself, against the outrage and abuse to which our colored fellow-citizens of the South, attempting to exercise the elective franchise, are now subjected.

I am reminded, sir, of the memorable words of Pres. Wayland long ago, in a missionary assembly like this, and before the wires of the telegraph had begun to flash intelligence to the ends of the earth. "Let a voice burne on the feeblest breeze tell that the rights of man are in danger and it floats over valley and mountain, across continent and ocean, until it has vibrated on the ear of the remotest dweller in Christendom. Let the arm of oppression be raised to crush the feeblest nation on earth, and there will be heard everywhere, if not the shout of defiance, at least the deep-toned murmur of implacable displeasure."

Sir, the rights of man are now in danger in this our American Republic. The sacred rights of human nature itself are violated in the treatment now so barbarously applied to the colored men of the South, the docile beneficiaries of this socicty. And it is for us now to say so in this solemn Missionary Convention, with no uncertain sound that shall vibrate on the ear of the remotest dweller in Christendom. It is a patriotic and Christian duty to give our moral support to the government in its just measures of relief and protection against the barbarous civilization of the South, the evil bequeathment of slavery. And it is now the part of all American Christians to do what we can to keep in power a government that will effectually guarantee to all American Christians, without distinction of color, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Fruits of Lodge Rule.

The lodge has had possession of the State of Vermont for about twenty years; and its rule, considering the difference of circumstances, is as imperious as that of the rifle clubs of South Carolina. The organization and discipline of the lodge is as thorough as that of the rifle clubs; and some of its members are armed. Who its officers are, how appointed, or what foreign prince they may have sworn allegiance to, only a few of themselves perhaps know.

The effect of this lodge-teaching and lodge-training, may be seen from the following account of the state of society there, taken from one of its leading papers. Thirty years ago there was no such state of things in Vermont as is exhibited in this extract. Let former Vermonters in the West mark it well.

"Dr. Prime forgot to add that Joe Smith, the founder of Mormonism, was a native of Vermont, that Brigham Young also went from here and that the Oneida communists started from the same source. There are still some fanatics left here, men who actually believe they can touch pitch without being defiled, and so read the Montpelier Argus; men who think that sacrifice, not of themselves but of their creditors, is the best qualification for gospel workers; others whose creed is that profession is regeneration, and so they follow Tilden and Reform; a certain set who swallowed it all when Judge Poland says he actually had to fight with the convention to save himself from becoming governor; and still others who go about teaching that there is no such thing as right and wrong, that they are the mere abstractions of theorists; that Justice has ceased to be an attribute of God and possession has taken its place; that society is only an arena, in which not the fittest but the strongest can survive, hence that all merely human agencies, such as legislatures and courts are to be used as freezers and crushers; that the test of saintliness is to be assailed, even if one has to steal for it, and finally that the only correct and decent way to run a railroad is to absorb it, and cover the process by putting Bibles in its cars and passes in the pockets of those who wield the arm of state."

But although the society f the State has been brought to this deplorable condition, and chiefly by the lodge, yet we are happy to infer from the same paper in which this account is given that the lodge is somewhat on the wane, thanks to our Anti-masonic movement. A reporter from the town of Fairfield in that State makes the following statement:

Alcyone Lodge has finally dissolved and returned its charter to the Grand Lodge. The effects of the institution (not very large) were sold and presented to the Sunday-school. A flourishing reform club was recently organized and has an extensive membership.

When the lodge turns over its unjust gains to the Sunday-school; surrenders its charter, and forms an open club, there is some hope that the State may be redeemed ,and restored to her former condition of manly independence and integrity.

AMERICAN.

THE POOR MAN'S SUNDAY.

We ask laboring men and their true friends to consider the fact that even now a large proportion of those dependent upon a salary or wages have no day throughout the year for rest or public worship. Our railroads, canals, street railway, public parks, telegraphs, hotels, postoffices, printing houses, cigar and liquor stores, have already deprived a very large and ever increasing number of laborers of their Sunday, and now it is proposed by one stroke to plunge thousands more into this unceasing toil and strife, all "in the interests of the laboring man."

It must be borne in mind by the laboring men and their friends, that the legal sanction of public amusements is the legal sanction of enforced labor. No kind of private amusement is now denied or forbidden by law upon Sunday; but public amusements stand upon a wholly different footing, in that they require the labor of the poorer to amuse those who can afford amusement. Public gardens, concerts, and exhibitions do not take care of themselves, and the opening of these on Sunday offers to their employes only one alternative, the losing of employment or unmitigated servitude to toil. And yet, if one dares to protest, in the name of God and humanity, against forcing such an issue upon dependents, he is branded as "an enemy of the harmless amusements of the laboring class!" Such amusements are like the boys' stoning of the frogs, "harmless" to the one party, but cruelty of death to the other.

We should also consider, that when the law refuses its protection to musicians, gate-keepers, waiters, chair-rollers, and the innumerable classes whose labors are required to amuse the public and enrich stockholders, it will not long afford that protection to clerks, blacksmiths, masons, or carpenters who are among the privileged classes that are allowed one day in seven for rest. Unscrupulous capitalists who have long been impatient over the enforced idleness of their wealth on one day in the week hail with delight the movement which, under cover of "the poor man's amusement," is enlarging the rich man's chances for gain. In any one of the dozen common employments capital has it now all its own way—no man can retain his place or his wages except by seven days' labor every week. Break down the defenses of law and custom but a little more, and no man who swings a hammer, or plies a trowel, or drives a spade, shall henceforth know what it is to share in the rest or worship of the man of wealth.

We are not talking at random, or to make out a case—we are only affirming that that will come to pass here which has elsewhere been fulfilled. The writer of this was in Naples not many years since, and applying to a merchant tailor for some clothing to be finished by Saturday night, was assured that it was impossible, but that the garment should be completed by Sunday night without fail. Later he spent one Sunday in Heidelburg, to see the poor man's Sunday in its glory, and he found not one clerk absent from one shop on Sunday afternoon. He passed to Paris, and found the American Chapel could only be built by paying the men for Sunday's labor, whether performed or not, because, as the laborers frankly stated, when labor had become common on seven days in the week no poor man could now compete by six days' work with his fellows. And yet, having already brought a large part of our labor and employes in America to that condition in which the day of rest is wholly lost, it is proposed to drive thousands more into the same unceasing round of labor, and to throw open all labor to this exhaustive, destructive competition, "in the interests of the laboring classes!" Let any one who knows the power of wealth over poverty prophesy the result. The question: remains, Is conscience to be classed as a luxury which only the rich can afford to enjoy?—Rev. H. D. Jenkins, in S. S. Times.

MASONIC MURDER AS SHOWN BY MASONIC TESTIMONY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I copy the following from the Fayette Journal of the 13th of Oct., 1876, a paper published only ten miles from the spot where "Whispering Charley" fell a victim as many believe to Masonic vengeance as per Masonic law. The Journal abuses Ronayne; hence you cannot mistake its Masonic principles:

"Quite as terrible a case occurred in England two years ago, when a letter appeared in the London Times relative to the disappearance of a young man named Bauer, confidential agent of a great Birmingham house. On the 25th of January he arrived in London from Moscow, pursuant to notice, and put up at the Charing Cross Hotel, where he had an interview with the manager of the Moscow gas-works. Nothing has since been heard of him except by a letter dated the 27th of the same month, with which was enclosed another dated February 2d. The first which points to his connection with a secret society, ran as follows:

DEAR SIR; By a special grace permission has been granted me to address these lines to you. They will be the last, because in a few hours I shall be dead. In good faith of doing a good deed, I joined certain people a few years ago. Alas, it was a bad error into which my youth and want of experience had led me. About a year since I discovered my great mistake, because I was not bad enough to carry out the consequences of my vow; and ever since I have lived in dread, although I was not prepared for this. When one of those devils in the shape of men, stopped me from leaving London yesterday noon—[when he had made an engagement to be at Birmingham] I was not even aware of being so closely watched. Having no choice left but to do things against which my whole soul revolts, and which I find utterly impossible to do, or to die myself, I have chosen death, and shall die in some hours hence. It is a very hard thing, I feel, to go suddenly forever without seeing anyone whom I loved once more; and my heart breaks when I think of my family and my poor girl in Russia; but it cannot be helped. On account of the trouble that will arise to you, dear sir, [his employer], through my sudden death, I am exceedingly sorry; but I hope that you will grant me pardon when you see that I am thus cut off. I shall at least not die a villain. Farewell forever.

L. B. BAUER.

To this was appended:

SIR: The foolish author of the enclosed note has informed you right. He is dead. Our safety forbids us to send you your property, to wit., some papers which have been burned."

Has the Journal given this case for the purpose of convincing us that secret societies never inflict a death penalty. Or is it intended as a warning to seceding Masons, and to those who would like to secede but are afraid. Interest and fear constitute the bond of secretism.

Respectfully, J. K. ALWOOD.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN CHINA.

The likeness to the Masonic lodge in its blasphemous imitation of the Christian conversion is strangely and wonderfully brought out in the following description of the Hung League from the Pall Mall Gazette:

In peaceful times the ranks of the society are recruited by volunteers, but when the League is preparing to take the field threats and violence are often used to secure members. At such a crisis a man returning home finds a slip of paper bearing the seal of the League awaiting him, which calls upon him at a given hour to betake himself to a certain spot, and warns him that the murder of himself and his family will be the penalty of disobedience to the command. Sometimes it is said, also, that one of the brotherhood insults a stranger on the road, and, pretending to fly from the just consequences of his act, leads the unsuspecting wayfarer to some lonely spot where he is seized upon by a number of brothers and is carried away to the place where the lodge is held. On the appointed evening the recruits present themselves at the "City of Willows," as the lodges are called, where they are met by the "vanguard," who carefully enters their names and places of residence in a book kept for the purpose. The vanguard then gives orders to form the "bridge of swords," whereupon the brethren place themselves in a double row, and, drawing their swords, cross them in the air in the form of a bridge or arch. Under this arch the new members are led, and at the same time are mulcted of an entrance fee of twenty-one cash. After this they are taken to the Hung-gate, where stands two Generals, who introduce the "new horses" to the Hall of Fidelity and Loyalty. Here the neophytes are instructed in the objects of the society; and, finally, they are conducted into the presence of the assembled council in the "Lodge of Universal Peace." As a preliminary to the administration of the oaths, the Master examines the vanguard in the 333 questions of the catechism of the society, and then orders him to bring forward those neophytes who are willing to take the oath, and to cut off the heads of those who refuse to do so. As the vanguard is supposed not to bear the sword in vain, few decline to take the oath, and the ceremony of affiliation is proceeded with by cutting off the queues of the recruits, (though this operation is dispensed with if the members are living among Chinese who are faithful to the Tartar rule), by washing their faces and exchanging their clothes for long white dresses, as tokens of purity, and the commencement of a new life. Straw shoes, signs of mourning, are also put on their feet to signify the death of their old nature; and thus attired, they are led up to the altar. Here some questions with reference to the immediate objects of the League are put to the vanguard, and then each member offers up nine blades of grass and an incense stick, while an appropriate stanza is repeated between each offering. A red candle is now lighted, and the brethren worship heaven and earth by pledging three cups of wine. This done, the seven-starred lamp, the precious imperial lamp, and the Hung lamp are lighted, and prayer is made to the gods, beseeching them to look down upon the members and to accept the incense burned in their honor. The oath binding them to observe obedience to the League and to display a spirit of fraternity, devotion and righteousness toward the brethren is then read aloud, and is followed by each member drawing some blood from his middle finger and letting it drop into a chalice partly filled with wine. Each neophyte then, having drank of the mixture and repeated the appointed stanzas, strikes off the head of a white cock, as a sign that so shall all unfaithful and disloyal brothers perish. And now the ceremony of affiliation is over, and it remains but for the President to give each recruit a diploma, the book containing the oath, law, secret signs, etc., a pair of poinards, and three Hung coins. With these emblems of their obligations, the new members return to their homes at break of day.

NOTE.—The entrance fee mentioned above should read $21 cash.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS IN MINNESOTA.

The Good Templars are getting a strong hold in this section of the West, and they pretend to be doing a great work, but we fail to see it in that light. They get the members, and they get the money. They make oyster suppers, festivals, and other entertainments. They get prominent orators occasionally, who deliver splendid speeches—speeches which might do a great deal of good, if the drinking, carousing class could hear them; but all must be said and done in secret.

All Christians denounce dancing. Why? Not because the simple act of dancing is in itself so very objectionable, not because the music is in itself objectionable, nor that the place of this popular amusement is any more degrading than other places; but because all classes of people are there, with their habits and their language, and the good must mingle with the bad, the refined with the rude and heathenish. Not only this, they who attend balls and dances, squander away the precious golden hours, which might and ought to be spent in some substantial study or labor, and many a hard earned dollar is thrown away, which ought to be in the treasury of some church or Christian association, to help spread the Gospel of Christ before our growing world. Yet these same superstitious Christians march by scores to the Good Templar lodge to spend their valuable time, their influence, their talents, and their money in no better way or place. But they say: "We do more good than you give us credit for; our influence is greater here than it could be in any open capacity."

The Bible says: "Light not a candle and put it under a bushel," etc. Let us reason in this way: If ten men were in a certain place, near a deep and wide stream, and they should see two men struggling on the bosom of the stream, and five of the men run and lock themselves up in a cave or cell, and as they go they call and beckon to the floating friends to come in out of the wet, while the other five go with boats and ropes to rescue the drowning men; which do you think would be rewarded for saving the perishing souls, the five in secret or the five in boats? If you wanted to chop down a tree in the forest, would you stay in your house, or take your ax and go to the spot where the work was to be performed? We think that secret societies are not calculated to save many sinking men, but they are calculated to lead us away from all religious interests and from duty. There is an organization to which all people should belong, an organization to which all interested Christians will belong, and that is the church of Christ. If we belong to the true church, we will not need the help of any other organization; we can there exert all the influence we are capable of exerting. But they say: "The church can't break up intemperance, and the lodge can." This is a mistake; the church has the greatest influence of all the organizations in the world, for it is God's institution, and is vested with divine power, and too many of its members are members of too many secret societies, and we think the time should and will soon come when church members will have to leave either the church or the lodges, for they can't serve God and mammon. We would advise all who walk with these insignificant societies to leave them at once; and those who do not, to forever let them alone, for there is no merit in them. They will only draw you into sin and surround you with iniquity.—Sabbath Qecorder.

FREEMASONRY FOR WHITE MEN.

On the quarrel among the Ohio Masonsover the colored "Grand Lodge" now seeking recognition in that State, the Masonic Jewel, organ for Tennessee and Kentucky, passes the following judgment. It is interesting to note the Masonic estimate of a dark skin:

The committee appointed two years ago by the Grand Lodge of Ohio as to negro Masons, did their work in a most wonderful manner. They made negro lodges as legitimate in every respect as lodges working under the Grand Lodge of Ohio; they pronounced the ritual perfect, or as correct as their own; in fact the intimacy betrayed by this committee with their negro brethren put to flight all trouble about clandestine lodges or clandestine Masons. This committee was all that could be desired by their colored brethren. They were efficiently aided by the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, who appears to have made a thorough search for everything that would help the desparate issue, no matter how uncertain the source, that he might publish and disseminate it at a good round expense to his own Grand Lodge. The Grand Master having been one of the committee, and the Grand Secretary having charge of all the official "guns" or publications, it is no wonder that the conservative element of the Masonic order had fears as to how far the illegitimate schemes of these men in power might carry or commit the Masonic body. But for the full belief that all parties, however wild and inconsistent in their ideas, were honest, the breach would have been too wide to think of healing.

The committee and their followers have created ill feelings and heart burnings in the order to such an extent, that a life of penitence and good works would seem but a proper penalty for their unfortunate action For once the Grand Lodge of Ohio was a house of discord and disunion. For once the spirit of Masonry winged its flight to give place to an unholy contention and determination to triumph.

The Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, as also nearly every other Grand Lodge Constitution, says that the Grand Lodge shall be supreme, and have exclusive jurisdiction over all questions relative to Masonry in the State, and appellate jurisdiction over all subordinate lodges of Masons in the State. The proposition before the Grand Lodge of Ohio was to recognize the colored Masons of the State as under a separate Grand Lodge, having jurisdiction over all colored lodges. As the question of recognition was in conflict with the constitution, the lodges not having acted upon the question as the constitution required, the proposition could not be entertained. The Grand Master decided otherwise. An appeal from the Grand Master's decision was taken by the Deputy Grand Master, and his appeal was sustained by a majority of seventy.

This, unfortunately, ended the question, as we believe the majority would have been much greater, and the "African Grand Lodge of F. & A. M. of Ohio" never been heard of again, at least for another decade, could the main question have been acted on.

We write thus plainly of Ohio. Her action the past year has set the whole Masonic elements in motion. It is no local affair, so far as Masonry is concerned; all are interested, and have a right to discuss, censure or praise any actor in the unpleasant drama. A spirit exists among many over-zealous Masons to do something great, or become martyrs to some supposed great principle, and the "negro Masonic question" is "heaven sent" to such characters.

They will bring up the unpleasant subject so long as they can play the martyr or be conspicuous. If it was white Masons they were contending for, the absurdity of their position would be acknowledged, and but few would trouble themselves about a recognition. Now it is otherwise. There is Masonic capital or conspicuous martyrdom in the movement.

The next great principle will be to object to no man on account of physical disability. The deaf and the blind, the man of but one arm or leg will be considered good Masonic material, and martyrs will be springing up to carry out that great reform.

Next, a change of ritual, so that women can pass through our forms and ceremonies. We can already see a numerous host of zealots asking glory or martyrdom on that great principle.

If we are Masons let us remain so; otherwise, change the name or abandon it.

THE EXPOSITIONS IN ILLINOIS AND IOWA.

FROM PAST MASTER RONAYNE—TRIALS AND ENCOURAGMENTS—MEETINGS AT MORRISON, ILL., WEST BRANCH, SPRINGDALE AND TIPTON, IOWA.

TIPTON, Iowa, Oct. 28, 1876.

MY DEAR FRIEND K:—I had two meetings in Morrison, Ill., as arranged, working the first and third degrees. Here are some very energetic friends, foremost among whom is President Blanchard's sister whom I was very glad to meet, and who sat patiently during the entire length of my second exposition to witness the killing of "our mutual friend" Hiram, the orphan brass-finisher of Tyre. With regard to the meetings in this place I have only to say that I look upon them as entirely successful, and the more so as Mr. Cobleigh, one of the leading business men of Morrison and a R. A. M., bore public testimony to the entire correctness of my work. He with his wife sat there the whole of my last evening, evidently delighted at the manner in which I slaughtered Masonry while slaughtering Hiram. He shook hands with me very warmly on my leaving next evening and on putting the question to him, "Bro. Cobleigh, what do you think will be the result of these meetings?" He replied: "The result cannot be otherwise than good. This is exactly the thing required to show the public what a grand swindle Freemasonry is." "But will not the Masons of Morrison deny these exposures as they usually do?" "They dare not," he replied, "they know that everything you stated is true and that you worked the degrees correctly. They dare not deny the truth of these exposures, at least not within my hearing."

I left Morrison Friday morning for Iowa City, stopping over at Bro. Smith's of Dewitt. At one o'clock P. M., I took the train from Cedar Rapids to West Branch, and from there friend Wilson Hale drove me out to David J. Wilson's place four miles from the Branch and six from Iowa City. On arriving here I found that no preparation had been made except considerable fire side talk and the renting of a large hall in the city. On Monday morning however, I went into town with friend Smith and then about 10 o'clock he began to give out bills here and there among the stragglers along the streets. In a place like Iowa City, with its large university, its high-toned population, and its large Masonic influence, comparatively undisturbed for twenty years, I felt that in order to be effective there I must reach the respectable portion of the community, and that if I went into Hams hall that evening to work the Masonic degrees my audience would be a slim one and the lowest rabble at that; hence I advised friend Smith to postpone the meetings until an interest could be awakened in the town by lectures, etc., by some other persons.

At West Branch on the evening of Oct. 25th I worked the first degree, and at Springdale four and a half miles distant I worked the third degree on the evening of the 26th. There is a very strong Anti-masonic sentiment throughout this entire settlement among the Quaker friends, and I felt that I had accomplished much good during my visit. I found friends Oliphant, Edmundson, Miles, etc., at West Branch and friends Tatum, Varney, Carson and several others in Springdale, all active workers; and at West Branch an old Mason stated that "every word was true and there was no denying it."

MORNING SUN, Ia., Nov. 4, 1876.

In my last letter to the office I briefly detailed my reasons for passing over Iowa City and turning into West Branch and Springdale, in both of which places I worked the degrees according to appointment.

On Friday morning, Oct. 27, Edward Tatum hitched up his team and we started for Tipton, about 14½ miles off, arriving there about 2 p. m. Learning that the Rev. Wm. Lee was an earnest worker in the Anti-masonic cause, and also that he lived only one mile from town, I determined to call upon him at once and perhaps stay with him over Sabbath. We met friend Lee himself when about half a mile from his house. He was very glad to see me and very cordially invited me to make his house my home during my stay in Tipton. I was very tired, suffering very much from rheumatism in my right hip and leg, so much so as to be scarcely able to walk, and hence I was glad of any place to sit down and rest.

On Saturday I felt quite a desire to see John Dorcas, and so I got friend Lee to drive me into town. My chief object was to try and find out what the arrangements were, and learn all I could about future meetings. I found that little, if any, preparations were made. Lee is a a very extensive farmer, and being constantly engrossed with multifarious cares had no time to devote to details. He, however, rented the City Hall at my request and did all that his time, and in fact more than his very busy time would permit. I put up at the Palmer House and on the Sabbath after dinner laid down to enjoy a rest sorely needed. I saw that the prospect for successful meetings in this town were very slim. I presented the whole matter, however, before an all-wise God, and asked him to direct everything for the best. I never, I believe, was so strangely situated, nor felt so entirely lonely since I began this work. I saw that I could not trust or depend upon man for anything, and hence my only hope was in God.

I arose on Monday morning, and after a hasty breakfast sought out Wm. Lee and consulted with him again. I proposed to him that he drive me into town and then that he would hurriedly run around and notify a few friends to meet me in the parlor of the Palmer House as soon as convenient. He did so and there came Messrs. Brink, Daniels, Rev. Mr. Barnes (a Master Mason), Rev. Wm. Lee, Jno. Dorcas, and several others, whose names I cannot now recall, and I never saw more enthusiasm manifested than was among these men after that little conversation we had in that parlor. I suggested what ought to be done, gave them my plans, my way of working, etc,, and we were measurably encouraged and animated, and especially I was so.

Wm. Lee asked Bro. Barnes in the presence of the company the following question, "Bro. Barnes, have you any objection to state here what you stated to me privately some time ago respecting your leaving Freemasonry?" Bro. Barnes answered, "No, sir, not the least. I left Freemasonry," he went on to say, "because I found that there was no Christ there. I took three degrees in Masonry and found that these degrees were all exposed and correctly exposed, and so had every reason to believe that the other degrees were exposed in like manner. One morning as I conducted family worship we sang that beautiful hymn containing the words, "Carry Jesus with you, carry him with you where'er you go," and that at once became a conviction to me that I ought to go nowhere where I could not carry Jesus with me ;and hence I determined never to go again to a Freemasons' lodge, and I never have."

Well, I am making my story too long. We had glorious meetings. That Monday night the hall was literally crammed and every one, Masons, Anti-masons and non-Masons were taken completely by surprise. Everybody, not a Mason, was more than pleased, and I saw God's finger and goodness and mercy visibly manifested in the entire work. I spent three pleasant days and nights in the beautiful home of S. P. Daniels, and made hosts of friends in Tipton for the Anti-masonic cause. I worked the second degree Tuesday night and the "Sublime degree" Wednesday night. I obtained a little club for the Cynosure, and only for the very heavy storm, which prevented me from going out doors, I could do a great deal more. I think that a little effort would secure a very creditable club here. Last night's meeting was an overflowing one and very enthusiastic I shall have six meetings here in all.

Yours, &c., E. RONAYNE.

—Mr. Ronayne writes from Wasioja, Minn., under date of Nov. 9th. "I am now entering upon a campaign at my last point. I left Mediapolis on Tuesday night at 5-45 so as to reach here in time for my work this evening. I held five meetings in that neighborhood as follows:—Morning Sun, Friday night, 1st degree. Saturday night, lecture. Sharon, Monday, at 10 A., M., lecture . nd 1st degree. Morning Sun, Monday night, 3d degree. Kossuth, or Mediapolis, Tuesday, 2 P. M., lecture. My work at this place will be three meetings at Wasioja, one at Dodge Center, one at Kasson, one at Mantorville and one at Concord, all in this and the coming week. The poor Masons are mightily aroused, and communities generally are wonderfully stirred up. I am beginning to feel tired, and there is a slight pain down my left and right breast, but after a few more days I hope to rest a little and then go East."

THIRD ANTI-SECRET SOCIETY CONVENTION

OF TEACHING AND RULING ELDERS OF THE CHURCH OF GOD IN INDIANA.

Agreeable to adjournment the convention met on the 28th of October, 1876, at 9 A. M. at Yellow Lake Bethel, Kosciusko Co., Indiana.

After religious exercises the convention was organized by electing J. S. Shock, chairman, and J. H. Winbigler secretary. Elder J. Martin then addressed the convention stating its object and giving many good reasons showing why as members of the Indiana eldership we are engaged in this anti-secret society movement, viz., because of the denial of the right of free discussion and a free press and because of partiality in favor of Masons and their partiality in presiding over the meetings of the eldership; and, in short, because of corruption and misrepresentation, deception and wire-working of secret society persons and their allies in the management of the affairs of the eldership. He was followed by elders J. S. Shock and C. Clem.

On motion Bro. Good of the U. B. church, also B. Ulsh and Bro. M. Regins were received as advisory members of this convention during the present session. Bro. B. Ulsh then addressed the convention and read some papers and books on the subject of secret societies.

Brethren H. C. Smith, J. Martin and C. Clem were then appointed a committee on resolutions by the convention.

Adjourned till afternoon after prayer by Bro. Good.

In the afternoon after singing and prayer by J. Martin, the committee on resolutions reported as follows:

1. Resolved, That we as a Christian convention have no fellowship with any one known to be an active, adhering secret society member.

2. Resolved, That the Masonic systems, its rites, oaths, laws penalties and morality are all borrowed from ancient heathenism and arecontrary to the Gospel.

3. Resolved, That if any of the churches or circuits composing the Indiana eldership, desire a preacher from this convention we will respond to their wishes as far as we possibly can.

4. Resolved, That we tender a vote of thanks to the brethren and sisters of Yellow Lake for their generosity and kindness to us while among them.

5. Resolved, That we endorse the Christian Cynosure as a good reform journal, and that we request a copy of these proceedings published in its columns.

Dr. Cook of Albion lectured Friday night, and there was preaching Saturday night and over Lord's day by elders Martin, Clem and Shock.

It was agreed to meet at Lake Bethel, Kosciusko Co., Indiana, on the 25th of November, 1876, for the purpose of considering the propriety of organizing an eldership, the opening sermon to be preached the evening previous by elder J. Martin. Bro. Clem was appointed corresponding secretary, and on motion the meeting adjourned. Prayer by Bro. Bare.

J. S. SHOCK, Chairman.
J. H. WINBIGLER, Secretary.

RIGHT IS STRONG, WRONG IS WEAK.

AUSTIN ACADEMY, N. H., Nov. 4, 1876.

In last year's Register the names of thirty-four ministers are given, (twelve of whom were understood to be Masons or Knights of Pythias), in the New Durham Quarterly meeting. At the last session only one Mason belonging to the Quarterly Meeting was present. Some of these Masonic ministers do not reside in the Q. M., some have died, some have "gone into business," and perhaps they are afraid they will be asked if Ronayne's book and pictures are correct. Christian people do not understand how amazing weak sin is when confronted by Christian testimony. It seems to me an excellent practice to distribute reform tracts at our representative religious gathering. In that way the leading brethren of all the churches can be conveniently reached. By thus enlightening a few brethren, many churches may be saved from lodge dominion without further trouble. Truth is like leaven. I lectured at Meaderborough recently, with very encouraging success. A few roughs at the beginning undertook to break up the meeting, but a number of citizens said with wholesome emphasis that they wished to hear the lecture. The rioters at once subsided. Masonic jewelry is going out of fashion, and young ministers are beginning to see that it is a disgrace for a Christian to be known as a Freemason. S. C. KIMBALL.

Our Centennial Letter.

Philadelphia, Nov. 1st, '76.

Enclosed find list of subscriptions to Cynosure and list of donators and orders. Your hope of permission to sell, remains hope. Some good friends have called since I wrote last, of whom are Andrew S. Gilchrist, of N. J., who sent you a dollar; Samuel Harper, O., same sum, and H. T. Miller, Ind., fifty cents. We have also to record against secretism the names of the Rev. J. R. Irish, D. D., Rockville, R. I., a Seventh Day Baptist; the Hon. Roger W. Hinds, Binghamton, Broome Co., N. Y.; Wm. Stewart, Covenanter, Logan Co., O.; the Rev. F. M. Warner, Methodist Episcopal, Belona, Yates Co., N. Y.; Rev. J. O. Bayles, Reformed Presbyterian; E. N. Baldwin, Presbyterian, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y.

I have sometimes wished that a short-hand reporter was near when conversations were going on. Some men tell of the days of Morgan in their own early youth, and the startling truths, then developed, engraved their lines too deep into their being, for them ever to entertain for a moment the idea of becoming a Mason. Some have personal knowledge of incidents of a thrilling character, and you might as well try to make them believe that there is no Niagara river, as that Morgan was not buried in it. You may have a communication on this subject. It is a hopeful sign when such men, from different quarters and of different communions, without any intercourse with each other, should thus be willing to declare their sentiments regarding Freemasonry and its allies. And yet from our and their standpoint on the Scriptures, what other course can be consistently taken? As the rising sun touches the mountain tops before it illumines the valleys, so do leading minds first recognize the principles which ere long bless the multitude.

In the N. Y. Methodist Episcopal Conference the question was brought up and bravely fought by a minority of 48 to 63—only 15 of difference for Christianity to win from Masonry in this M. E. Conference—a gain which we trust may be granted to the zeal and prayers of those forty-eight, for we cannot but believe that there are Peters among them who will repent and do their first works for Christ. But there are Edens yet in our broad country where Masonry has no temple, and where, if it exist at all, it glides among the grass, watching for the opportunity to raise its head and whisper. Such a place exists where no lodge is known in a square of ten or twelve miles, but which being well settled, has its churches of six different names.

It is also said on good authority that the Rev. Dr. H. Kendall, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions approves the same sentiments. In such a summary as this I must again name our calm, good-natured friend, Benj. F. Cole, of Ill. There are some of our people who remind me of boy schoolmates who bravely challenged any one to rub their buttons, but pity the boy that did! The difference between such boys and our braves is that they used fisticuffs, and we use forcible arguments—but Mr. Cole is as calm as a Quaker.

A Mason and his better half heard enough to induce him to ask the usual question, "Are you a Mason?" and then, poor man, he thought to overwhelm the presumptous speaker by the assurance that he only made himself ridiculous by such talk and by believing liars! But he was asked, "Are you a believer in Christianity?" "Yes," he said. "Then why do you believe Peter when he once cursed and swore that he did not know Christ?" He was tripped. Of course any one sees that the repentant Peter was one who recovered his right to be believed. So with Christians who, like Finney, the great preacher of fifty years ago nearly, and others, left the secret lodge, and warned people against the sin and slavery of it.

A gent being shown Lev. v: 4, 5, and hearing Masonry charged as being anti-christian, tried to insinuate that it was partly Christian by the sage remark that "Grease ain't soap, although a necessary part of it," as if Masonry was necessary to Christianity! And another indignantly spurned what he heard by the assurance that any one who didn't know that King Solomon and the Apostle John were Masons, knew nothing of Masonry! Where, O where has common sense gone in such cases! If the Scriptures are silent on the subject, therefore believe Masonry or any other absurd invention of man which presents another gospel! What nonsense. And yet just such nonsense is daily uttered by men who might otherwise be thought men of sense.

The 31st of October was a day rather celebrated in olden time. Scotsmen all over the world will celebrate their Hallowe'en, and similar performances are observed by men of other countries.

The seer and yellow leaf tells that the fall of the year is preparing us for the winter. What is the lesson? Especially let the young remember the duties of their spring and summer, for these seasons cannot be recalled and winter is sure, if blight don't overtake them long before. Let our workers also remember that time is fast passing away—the Centennial year is now short. Let all the friends of our cause "work, for the night is coming."

Work through the Courts.

Either the cause of Anti-masonry is worth contending for, or it is not. If worth contending for then it is worth every laudable and painstaking effort. And prominent among such efforts, one at least in the right direction would be for every Anti-mason in the vicinity of a court calendar or docket to make it his especial business to examine the causes brought for action and set for trial, and where he finds Masons and non-Masons parties to suits to apprize the non-Masons of the danger that awaits their causes from Masonic perversion of justice, urging upon them the absolute necessity for taking exception to all Masons on bench or panel serving in the adjudication of their causes. This if persistently done will force the Masonic obligations into court, establish by legal evidence what they are, and arrest in a great measure the legerdemain of the lodge. It is preposterous that intelligent and educated men, in this enlightened age should silently submit to the infringement and subversion of their rights, through the abominations of ancient paganism reduced to modern practice and made effective by lodge-power working within our Christian courts, for such the courts of our country most assuredly are, or the solemnities of the oaths therein administered are a farce, and the oaths themselves meaningless forms. It should be borne in mind that the proceedings had in the courts of the country during the progress of the Morgan murder warfare furnished the aliment upon which the public mind was fed; and that, soon after the contest with Masonry in the courts abated, the question of Anti-masonry was lost sight of by the great body of the people and became obsolete in the politics of the country. For the good of the public and the discomfiture of Masonry let the warfare be renewed and the proceedings had be heralded to the public through the medium of a thousand presses if need be. This sort of an agitation will amount to something. It will again set the public mind on a serious thinking and finally end in the overthrow of the worst ring of swindlers that ever disgraced the face of God's fair earth. Who will ponder this matter and be the first person to report a case for the Cynosure? Who says amen to the feasibility and sound sense there seems to be in this course of action? Who that wishes the cause of Anti-masonry God-speed, will not insure it by his own special efforts and to the extent of his ability as an humble instrument in the hands of his Maker by giving practical effect to the suggestions herein contained? Do not all speak at once, but prepare for action, and when duly prepared let your constant motto, duly exemplified be, work, work, work.

Secrets, Moral and Immoral.

All secrets may be divided into two classes, moral and immoral. When reason and conscience approve a secret it is a moral secret and no one can be injured by it; but when both condemn a secret it is an immoral secret and is an injury to some one. Moral secrets may be kept, for good reasons, but no one can ever be harmed if they are exposed to the public. Immoral secrets can never be justified, and their disclosure will always give some one more or less trouble, in proportion to the degree of immorality. If a man gets up a poor association, in order to aid poor widows and orphans, he may, for good reasons, have many moral secrets to keep; but if he gets up a Masonic lodge or an I. O. O. F., in order to keep two widows and do two hundred dirty jobs while boasting loudly about benevolence, we can easily see why he will need a sheep-skin apron, rope, regalia, hoodwink, skeleton, scalping-knife, grand hailing sign of distress, grips, winks and all the arts, parts, etc. of Freemasonry.

Martin Luther was a great religious reformer. He had no need for Royal Arch companions, bloody oaths and immoral secrets; for he did his good work openly and in the daytime. The case is different with Brigham Young, however. He is a great religious libertine. And it will not surprise intelligent thinking men who have read about the Mountain Meadow massacre to hear that the great Mormon is not only a great Freemason but a great secretist. It can be easily seen why Brigham needed his Masonry and his other secret rites and oaths.

And now, while United States troops are marching into South Carolina, at the expense of Northern tax-payers, to try to regulate Freemasonry and her rifle clubs and negro secret orders, we desire to ask all sensible men and women if the time has not yet come to suppress all secret conspirators by the strong arm of the law? Can we afford to raise and feed foxes or any other sly creatures? This is a matter that has much to do with dollars and cents.

The Even Yoke.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In the Cynosure of Nov. 2nd, in noticing the Rock River M. E. Conference, in speaking of the Masonic ministers and of their connection with the lodge, this language occurs, "That they are unequally yoked together with unbelievers in the lodge." I think that they are not guilty of being "unequally" yoked with unbelievers. The fact is, that every Mason has taken the oath to never tell the truth on the subject of Masonry under on less penalty than to have his throat cut. The yoke is even, and so far as I have been personally acquainted with them, they keep their oath. When they enter the lodge, if they have any Christianity they leave it outside among the profane, and in the lodge they are all brothers, jolly, pagan idolaters; they meet on the level, and part on the square. They are all equally unbelievers. The god they worship and to whom they pray, is not the Christian's God; the Grand Lodge to which they go is not the Christian's heaven. If they are not equally yoked together with unbelievers, "who will make me a liar and my speech nothing worth?" Surely not him that said, "Ye cannot serve two masters." It is just as easy to ride at the same time two horses going in opposite directions at full speed, as to be a Mason and a Christian at the same time. They are certainly playing the hypocrite with one or both parties, and their honesty, if they have any, is with the lodge. For example, one old minister that I could name, who had preached the Gospel of Christ for nearly half a century, and with as much apparent sincerity and success as any of them, said on his death-bed, to his Masonic friends, "I am willing to have it placed on my coffin lid, as a motto, that I have implicit faith and undying confidence in the principles of Freemasonry." Now if he told the truth, could he be a Christian? could he have any faith in Christianity, or any claims to Jesus Christ, and if the declaration of faith was not true what then; is a hypocritical liar a Christian? I speak to wise men, judge ye what I say.

HIEL LEWIS.

COURAGE FOR CHRIST NEEDED.

O that the workers of iniquity, the pretenders, would flee from their works of darkness and pretension! What a difference there would be in the church of God if those members of secret societiss would flee from their present darkness and accept our Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, instead of serving the god of this world! There has been enough said and proved to convince us that secret societies are not the works of righteousness, but abominable works of Satan, and altogether out of the way for any God-fearing man to have anything to do with. There are many true Christians no doubt, who have a desire for the overthrow of these secret societies, but they hardly like to help because they think they will offend those who belong to them. Let us not look to men, but what our conscience tells us to do, let us do, that the blessed name of Jesus may be glorified, for our reward is sure in heaven. Let us ask God for courage, and not be ashamed to reprove men of their wicked ways, which is for their own good and the extension of God's kingdom. As we read the doctrine of our blessed Master and see the many warnings throughout his word concerning the works of darkness, we feel it a privilege to be strictly opposed to secret societies. These are the blessed words which Jesus addresses to his apostles: "Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."—Matt. x. 26-28.

OUR MAIL.

Bro. Burgess Smith of Clifford, Pa., writes:

"I received those tickets for President and Vice-president. As for getting up a club it will be one of the impossible things in this place. I have tried hard for that very thing, and Bro. S. E. Miller has done the same—all in vain. There are but four of us in this immediate vicinity who stand up to the rack, hay or no hay, Bros. S. Miller, Sanford Stephen and E. T. Smith and myself. We are the only ones who are contending for the faith and against the lodge, and we are in earnest about it, and some of our neighbors begin to think so, especially the grangers."

Let us be thankful that there are four. It is enough for a live reform prayer-meeting, and the power and presence of God's Spirit can bring just such a harvest as these brethren have been sowing and working for.

J. W. Thompson, Corry, Dade county, Mo., writes of his efforts in the tract work:

"I have handed out all the tracts and pamphlets you sent me. One instance in my feeble work is perhaps worthy of note. One Sabbath morning at the close of our Sabbath school I notified those present that I had some anti-secret documents on hand and any one that wished could have some of them. Quite a number embraced the opportunity, flocked around me and were supplied, and quite an excited state of feeling was at once indulged in. Next Sabbath the Cumberland Presbyterians held a protracted meeting at the same point. Just before school closed the superintendent (who is a Mason, but I certainly think a very exceptional one) came to me and in an undertone said to me, in substance, "If you issue any more of those leaflets ycu'll break up the school. I expect our assistant superintendent has gone already," and further, "why the Masons have nothing that is a secret now it has all been revealed, except the recognition of each other," etc. Yet I announced again that I had then and there a supply of the obnoxious documents, but as I did not wish to be a disturber of the peace I would not offer them in the house, but any person wishing any of them could and would be supplied by calling at my stand, which was but a few rods from the church building. The minister, and perhaps a dozen or more other persons present were Masons. Yet not a word was uttered by any one. In a very short time I was at my post, and to my surprise the minister and some other Masons were there almost as soon. The minister said he wanted to see my tracts. I quickly supplied him, not however without mingled feelings as to the character of his motives. At all events some of those very papers issued from that humble stand, on that occasion, were in our county seat, either the first or second day thereafter, read by our Masonic lawyers. Done by them I have no doubt, with or in the greatest apparent contempt, yet they will, under God, have their effect."

John Dorcas, of Shiloh, Iowa, sends the following protest on the observation of the first day of the week as the Lord's day. The position of the Cynosure on this question is we believe well enough understood to require no argument. We refer friend Dorcas to our issues of February 17 and 24, 1876:

"MR. EDITOR:—Permit me to call the attention of your readers to the fact that while they are so zealously laboring to be "reformers," they are cherishing a fabricated Sabbath, dear and sacred to the Catholic Church, as a sign or mark of their authority to command unto sin; a rival to God's holy day. Therefore, while they retain this and trample the fourth precept under foot, they have no strong ground for rejoicing, whatever else they may be doing worthy of reformers of this enlightened age. Let them come out and as honest men and reformers vindicate the honor of God in calling the people back to the forsaken ordinance of Jehovah's fourth precept, or else say nothing about banishing the Bible from our schools. It appears to me that this would be consistent. The Bible says the seventh day is the Sabbath."

Henry Post, an aged friend in Victor, Michigan, has some criticisms for our tracts which we think it fair to print, though the criticism would be more just if directed against the Masonic wickedness exposed in the tracts:

"I received 'Young Men of America,' and 'An Appeal,' for distribution, which I am doing to some extent. But I hesitated some, fearing the severe language used would injure more than benefit the cause intended to be promoted. The good old Christian Puritans who mistakenly condemned those they thought to be witches, because the Bible told them 'Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live,' the writer calls 'little fools, as witnesses, and big ones as judges.' Nothing parallel to the present day. Of Masonry the writer says, 'Now in return it is mobbing and murdering our best citizens and trying in secret to wrench the helm of government from the hands of civil law.' Both leaflets or tracts contain many harsh and severe expressions likely to repel rather than win. Calm, candid reasoning is better than epithets and denunciations. If we want to save a drunkard we must not call him a drunken brute or beast."

A. F. Stevens, of Bedford, Iowa, writes:

"The strength of the wicked one is mighty here at present. The lodge has received but one rebuke in these parts and that was when C. A. Blanchard spoke in Bedford; and on that occasion the weather was so bad that the people could not get out. But few days go by but I have a discussion with some lodgeman. Some get mad and swear, others acknowledge the truthfulness of Ronayne's exposition as it is given in the Cynosure; others say it is all a lie. A few days ago I had a talk with a man and he declared that no two or three men could expose the Master Mason's word. He emphatically denied that the Masons refused to take in all classes of persons, poor, maimed and sickly. I have been doing all that I possibly could to get the people to take a right view of the question of secrecy, and have attended political meetings and tried to talk to the people and show the evils of secret societies. As for the grange I was duly initiated in that and know all about it, and corroborate A. W. Geeslin's work. I have sold many of his books and have ordered others for other persons from your establishment and hope to do so again."

Isaac G. Gilbert of Derby, Conn writes an interesting experience:

I was in Boston a few weeks ago and found a man there who is an Anti-mason, but knew nothing of the great movement in the West. I gave him a paper and some tracts which brought him to see more fully the wickedness of the institution of so-called Freemasonry. He took me to a neighbor of his, who is quite an active religious man in the church and an ardent Mason. So I began talking with him about the institution, telling about the initiation, grips, pass-words, etc. He tried to find out by me whether I was a Mason or not. I told him to give me his hand, but he hesitated; but said if he did he would not return the grip. He was afraid to do it. I then talked to him about preaching holiness in the church and denying Christ in the lodge. He did not not seem to know which way to turn or what to say. We had it till late in the evening and I did not spare him, but told him plainly what I thought of the institution. Before I returned to Derby the interview was talked up here by the fraternity and made quite a stir. I suppose he wrote to Derby to find out whether I was a seceding Mason or not.

The Sabbath School.

LESSON XLVIII.—NOV. 26, 1876.—PETER'S VISION.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts x: 1-20, Commit 17-20: Primary verse, 4.

1 There was a certain man in Cæsarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band.

2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always.

3 He saw in a vision evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

9 On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour.

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready he fell into a trance.

11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord: for I have never eaten anything common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice, and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 And while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the three men which had been sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house and stood before the gate.

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

16 While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise, therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

How that prayers are not forgotten.

How do we know that the prayers of Cornelius were sincere?

How that God knows where we live?

How are we taught not to despise any one?

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 16, 1876.

In all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

The Presidential Canvass, 1876

The great struggle for the chief magistracy of the United States survives the day of election,

"Like two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art."

Men from both parties are said to be rushing South to the three doubtful States to watch the returns, and while ostensibly guarding against fraud, to outmaneuver their opponents; and fears are entertained of violent collision and blood. We hope better things. General Grant, a life-long Democrat, who probably never cast a Republican vote, has sent troops to the endangered localities; and as he has no hopes, and seems to have no aspirations, for further political office when his term shall close, he can have no motive for unfairness, and he has therefore both moral and military power to keep the peace. And he has shown both ability and will to do so.

Let us look back over this troubled sea of American politics. On one side of the campaign under the name Democracy, have been enlisted the papists, the Tweed men, the secessionists and rebels, the White Leagues, Ku-Klux and rifle-clubs, who have revolutionized several Southern States by simple, open violence and intimidation. These Southern desperadoes are, to a man, almost, Freemasons, whose moral nature is debauched and broken by nightly oaths, blasphemies and false-worships. They have played and sworn murder till perjury and crime have lost their nature to them. If Mr. Tilden should be finally declared elected, he can no more satisfy these violent and ignorant classes of his supporters than Gov. Geary, Shannon and other Democrats were able to satisfy the desperate men raised, equipped, sent and paid by the Southern blue lodges to enslave Kansas.

On the other side the Republican party stands related to the Democratic masses as the old Whig party stood related to the Democrats before the war, and they can no more be relied on, as a party, to teach political truth and save this nation, than that same old Whig party could have been relied on to teach abolitionism and overthrow American slavery. When Abraham Lincoln said, "If slavery ain't wrong, then nothing's wrong," he uttered what Whig politics had never taught him. That lesson he had learned from the Abolitionists. And the Republican party can never be relied on to teach that if slavery was wrong, idolatry is worse; or, that our secret empire, with its secret constitutions, secret courts, penalties and cut-throat oaths, is just as certain to ruin American political society, and Mexicanize Americans, as the same identical causes have heathenized the once Christian lands of Asia.

It was too much to expect that all who abhor the despotism and idolatry of the lodge should vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick in the present canvass. How few voted for Birney, John P. Hale and Fremont! When the political crucible is heated, when party lines are drawn, when eloquence and money and social power are all concentrated to make the thinking, reading American people believe that the triumph of either one of the two main parties must surely prove the downfall of the state; and the hope of triumph, the natural desire to beat, is stimulated to its utmost heat and power; to walk up in these circumstances and deposit one's vote as the early Abolitionists and present American party have done, is positively a specimen of the moral sublime.

Republicans or Democrats must now rule the nation and fill the offices for the next four years. The names now signify nearly nothing, and they will hourly mean less and less. The Americans have made a mighty advance in the last four years. Let us now address ourselves to the work before us; until another Lincoln shall arise and teach that no nation can stand with two sorts of oaths in its court-houses, as Abraham Lincoln made men see that "no nation can endure part slave and part free."

1. Let us now carry our principles into local elections.

2. Let us steadily aim to purify the communion table of false worshipers; the jury box from forsworn men; the pulpits from men polluted with idolatry; and the legislature from men sworn to conceal the crimes which they make laws to punish.

3 Let us speedily effect a union with all prohibitionists who are not Freemasons; so that, four years hence, all real friends of reform may present an undivided front.

4. Let us make our excellent platform, which has been widely and uniformly commended by just and intelligent men, and which even Freemasons have not dared to assail, as familiar as it is fundamental to American institutions; until every one shall see that our name of Americans, means, what precisely it does mean, to wit, "That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation;" that God requires and man needs a Sabbath; that men are equal before the law; that atheist education is impossible; and that the Bible is the moral standard of men.

Odd-fellowship on Record.

A Michigan Odd-fellow journal prints the following, as the statistics of the order, a greater part of which is from the "Grand Secretary" of the society for the United States:

Number of Grand Lodges	48
" " Subordinate Lodges,	6,395
" " Rebekah Degree	879
" " Grand Encampments,	39
" " Subordinate "	1.756
" " Lodge Members,	454,689
" " Encampment "	87,450
From 1830 to December 31st, 1875, there have been:
Initiations,	980,780
Members relieved,	729,189
Widowed families relieved,	97,077
Members deceased,	65,480
Total receipts,	$60,065,926,52
" relief,	$22,273,386,63
Present membership, including Germany and Australia,	460,610

This table deserves a brief examination and is worth preserving for reference. It appears that of the vast army of men brought under the bond of this fraternity numbering nearly one million, nearly one-half have abandoned it, broken their obligation and turned away from its seductions. From the number of initiations take the present number of adhering members and the number deceased and we have 460,610,—Four Hundred and Sixty Thousand Six Hundred and Ten seceding Odd-fellows in America! Why should we not have a rousing convention of these men. They are virtually seceders from the order, for in whatever way their names were taken from the lodge roll, the fact itself is proof that they have abandoned the fraternity. Thus the number of Odd-fellows out of the lodge is greater by some six thousand than the adhering members. The encampment members are not reckoned separately because their names are all counted in the lists of the subordinate lodges, as with the Freemasons.

Then it appears also that each one of these 980,000 men paid to the lodge $61.24 and 729,000 got back about one-third this sum, leaving $47,792,000 in the coffers of the lodge, which has certainly not been employed in such a beneficent way as to relieve any considerable number of the needy or suffering. There is some satisfaction in knowing that 274,500 of those who left the order got back part of the money out of which they had been swindled before leaving. Of the families relieved there is a question. How is it that the Odd-fellow widows outnumber the deceased members by 31,596, or nearly a half more, even on the supposition that they were all married men and left families, which is wholly improbable. The order cannot deny its regulations and claim that they aided 31,000 families not connected with the order. The explanation probably is that the number relieved means really the number of times relief has been given. It is hardly to be believed that three-fourths of the able-bodied men taken in by the fraternity should ever come to ask its aid. It is more likely that many received assistance several times, and each donation was counted.

On the whole, how could any society, placing such restrictions on those who join it as this, and holding forth such pretentions to the public, feel flattered at the testimony of these figures. There is, moreover, abundant encouragement for the efforts to dislodge this organization from public esteem, and on the simple score of business integrity turn back the stream of young men who seek the folly of its initiations.

Election Returns.—Will all friends in localities where American Party votes were cast, who have not already done so, send us word how many of these votes were cast? We wish to give the returns, so far as received, in next week's paper.

More Intimidation.—In connection with the letter of mysterious interest from Rev. J. K. Alwood on the third page the following sent from the neighborhood of Bro. Ronayne's late meeting in Iowa is not without a certain significance:

IN THE NAME OF THE G. M. OF THE UNIVERSE.
SILENCE AND CIRCUMSPECTION.

Brothers of the Trowel and the Square:—There are times when in the past we have been compelled to lay aside the flimsy pretense of the square and compass and the smoothing trowel, and grasping the hilt of the Tyler's sword, UPON ITS EDGE.

Such a necessity has now come! The traitor and perjurer must be silenced and his hellish attacks on our order made to cease. The perjured villain is to make his public exposition in Tipton the coming week and he must never be permitted to go hence and repeat it. The weltare of the craft is above the life of any one man.

At the general meeting in D. it was ordered that this be his last place to be heard or seen and you were directed to see that decree carried into effect.

You are therefore commanded under all the penalties known to you to attend at his meetings duly and truly prepared * * * and one more must be added to the list gone below as traitors to the craft.

The Christian Convention appointed by the pastors of this city to meet on the 21st inst., will be, like those of New York and Philadelphia, conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and will be attended by thousands of the most earnest Christians of the North-west. Reduced rates at railroads and hotels have been arranged. The noon-day prayer meeting will be held in the tabernacle instead of Farwell Hall during the convention, and there will be the usual preaching service and inquiry meetings in the same place in the evening. The following topics are suggested for discussion:

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21st.

Praise and Prayer Meeting. Led by Mr. Moody.

Bible Lecture on How to Study the Bible.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22d.

Evangelistic Services: How to Conduct them.

How to Conduct Prayer Meetings.

Noon-day Prayer Meeting at the Tacernacle. Conducted by Mr. Moody.

How shall the Music be Conducted in the Lord's Work. Opened by Mr Sankey.

How to Get Hold of the Non-Church Goers.

Questions and Answers on Practical Work.

Noon-day Meeting at the Tabernacle.

Our Young Men: what more can we do for them?

Closing Hour of the Convention.

—The Iowa Freeman is to be congratulated in having secured a permanent establishment of its own well fitted up with press and materials. It is located at Mason City, where it will have a good local backing, and the friends of the reform throughout the State should see to it that Bro. Vanderveer does not lack for the right kind of encouragement.

—Friends sending money to any of the funds of the National Christian Association should be particular to send it to the Treasurer and make all post-office orders and drafts payable to him. It is quite an inconvenience when such orders are made payable to the General Agent and Secretary when he is in another part of the country.

—The last Christian Radical, Polo, Ill., has an article on Odd-fellowship by Rev. O. M. Van Swearingen, a seceder from that order, which we hope to republish soon.

—While making up an honor-roll for the Masonic lodge why may not the same be done for the above order. We have a beginning made and shall publish soon. Send on the names by postal card or when you send your subscription. We wish to publish another list of a dozen seceding Masons soon. Almost every day adds to the number reported.

—Thanks to Bro. Conant of Connecticut for a copy of a pungent little pamphlet published at his cost in Willimantic. It contains the lecture in defense of Freemasonry given in the Congregational church of Colchester, Conn., by Rev. E. F. Clark, Methodist Episcopal, of Provincetown, Mass., and Bro. J. G. Mattoon's cutting reply. Both are republished from the Cynosure of over a year ago. The tract is making a strong impression in eastern Connecticut.

Religious Intelligence.

—Captain Henry Bundy, whose missionary voyage to the lower lake ports has been mentioned before, has published from his "Log," a brief report of his work. The "Glad Tidings" set sail from Chicago July 18th. On the 19th Capt. Bundy preached on the Lumber Exchange in Milwaukee. At Sheboygan, Manitowoc, Ahnapee, White Fish Bay, Bailey's Harbor, Washington Island, Ellison Bay, Ephraim, Fish Creek, Menominee, Egg Harbor, Peshtigo and Oconto he cast anchor and preached two or three times a day on the streets, in school houses or churches. He visited and prayed in many private houses, distributed and sold a good number of Bibles, and has the joy of knowing that some forty souls were saved by his ministry and scores were brought to seek salvation in Christ.

—The Chicago pastors have united with Moody and Sankey in calling a Christian Convention, to be held November 22nd and 23rd. The object is to discuss topics most vital to the progress of Christianity. Arrangements are being made with the hotels and railroads for reduction to delegates. Similar conventions were held in London, Liverpool Philadelphia and New York.

—Bishop Potter, of New York, is opposed to pewed churches. He thinks people very generally buy pews to gain social precedence, and thinks this is a sorry motive for attention at places of worship. He is emphatic in his preference for free seats.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union reports 350 mission churches planted in Europe, with a membership of more than 31,000. More than 400 native preachers in the name of the Baptist Missionary Union are proclaiming the Word in Sweden, Germany, France, Spain and Greece.

—At a recent weekly meeting of the Methodist ministers of Boston, Rev. Dr. Butler, of the Mexican Mission, gave an account of his labors in the City of Mexico. He stated that he had already received $7,000 of the $12,000 which he desired to raise in this country for the mission, besides guarantees for the cost of the publication of sixteen religious works in Spanish.

—The Wesleyan churches in Michigan have sustained a severe loss in the recent death of Rev. L. C. Hudson, at Allendale, in that State.

—The Wisconsin Wesleyan Conference meeting last month in Jacksonville, Monroe county, reported the following among other good resolutions: "That our preservation is not intended to gratify denominational pride, but is a loud call of Providence to us to go forward in the work of presenting to the world a higher type of Christianity than the standard generally prevailing in America. This type must consist of: 1st,—Maintaining our unflinching opposition to the idolatry of the lodge worship. All our preachers should be well-informed on this subject, and should faithfully present the truth to the public. 2nd.—It must consist of New Testament liberality in giving money. The whole method of giving money might be greatly improved among us. One-tenth of our income is the least that any intelligent Bible reader would name as the amount due to the cause of God. More than one-tenth in some cases ought to be given. Covetousness is the crying sin of the age. We as Wesleyans ought to be an example to the whole world in Christian liberality. We cannot hope that God will bless us more than others, while we sin in not giving."

—The Bible Revision Committee, at its last meeting in New York, October 27th and 28th, finished the revision of the Psalms and the Epistle to the Romans.

—Not less than fifty letters come to the Fulton Street (New York City) prayer-meeting daily, and it is stated that the meeting has never known so many conversions in any other year as the one just closed.

The Home Circle.

The Death Bell.

BY M. E. FISK.

Gently toll the Bell of death,
When the spirit leaves the clay;
As the latest sighing breath,
Let its echoes die away;
Sounding o'er the busy street,
Stealing on through hill and vale,
Sighing through the bower's retreat,
Telling each the plaintive tale.

When the anguished spirit's sigh,
Breaks the solemn death-hush's reign,
Let the death-knell's echo nigh
Gently breathe its tale again;
Let it gently whisper cheer
To those hearts that kiss the rod;
Peal its notes on rebel ear
Like the thunder tones of God

When in solemn order slow,
Friends shall bear their friend away;
When the heart's deep treasured woe
Spends its stores love's debt to pay;
Gently then the death-bell toll,
Wake its voice to sorrow's tone,
Like the anguish-riven soul
Bid it wail the loved and gone.

Let it soothe like zephyr's sigh,
Bid it rouse like tempest moan;
Now a message from the sky
Now the deep's low, rumbling groan;
Breathing hope to troubled breast
Troubling e'en the cold and stern;
Whispering of a land of rest,
Speaking of the grave and urn.

When the loved with pillowed head
On the breast of mother earth,
Gently rests among the dead
Clasped by her who gave him birth
Let the death-bell cease to toll,
Bid its tones their silence keep;
Leave the temple of the soul
To its last deep, quiet sleep.

A Few Test Questions.

The questions we here submit may be profitably thought upon, and answered, by holiness professors. Let them answer to themselves and to God:

Are you totally delivered from pride? Has this sin no place in you? Do you never feel its motions? Are you dead to all wish or desire to be flattered or praised by men? Do you never do anything, or say anything to obtain such flattery or praise? If any one compliments you, or says flattering things about you, do you feel elated, self-complacent, puffed up? If others dislike you, or give you reason to believe that they despise you, do you feel ill-natured or resentful toward them? Are you altogether willing to be thought little or nothing of, to be held of no consequence to be made of no reputation, if the Lord will?

Are you saved from all fear? From the fear of death? From the fear of earthly want? From the fear of man? As to the last of these questions—can you, and do you speak to all plainly and in perfect truth, not fearing the frowns or courting their smiles? Have you no sense of shame, or rather of being ashamed on any account whatever with your "high state of grace" and your "loud profession?" Do you always, in all circles, and in all kinds of company, feel willing and ready to confess Christ as your uttermost Savior, and to be known as a professor of holiness, and be called "one of those sanctified ones?" As to testifying and praying publicly, in the hearing of friends and enemies, have you no fear? Do you never falter, tremble, fail, on account of the fear of others? Are you ready, always ready to be identified with Christ's people—with those who for His sake are disesteemed, neglected, under reproach? Will you suffer with them, and for them, if called to such fellowship of reproach and suffering?

May the dear Lord give you grace to answer these questions well, and to answer them according to true holiness. Some of them, as you think more and more upon them, will prove to be test questions indeed. You will find them very searching. They will prove your soul to its depths. But they will bless you, and help you, if you are earnest, and honest, and sincere. May the Holy Spirit accompany your reading, and make these plain questions a means of blessing to your souls!—Banner of Holiness.

The Unconscious Doom of Jerusalem.

There, before the Saviour's gaze of tears, lay a city, splendid apparently and in peace, and destined to enjoy another half-century of existence. And the day was a common day; the hour a common hour; no thunder was throbbing in the blue, unclouded sky; no deep voices of departing deities were rolling through the golden doors. And yet—soundless to mortal ears in the unrippled air of Eternity—the knell of her destiny had begun to toll; and, in the voiceless dialect of heaven, the fiat of her doom had been pronounced; and in that realm which knoweth and needeth not any light of God, the sun of her moral existence had gone down while it was yet day.

Were her means of grace over? No, not yet. Were her services impossible? No, not yet. The white robed Levites still thronged her courts; the singers still made the heavens ring with their passionate litanies and silver Psalms; the High Priest yet sprinkled, year by year, the gold of the holiest altar with the blood of an unavailing sacrifice. No change was visible in her to mortal eyes. And yet, for her, from this moment even until the end, the accepted time was over, the appointed crisis past—the day of salvation had set into irrevocable night. It was with her as with the barren fig-tree, on which, next day, the Lord pronounced his doom. The leaf of her national life was still glossy-green; the sun still shone on her; the rain fell; the dew stole down; but the fruit would grow no more, and therefore the fire was kindled for the burning, the axe uplifted, which would crash on the encumbering trunk. She was not spared for her beauty; she was not forgiven for her fame. And if it were so with the favored city, may it not be so with thee, and thee, and me? What shall the reed of the desert do, if even the cedar be shattered at a blow?

Yes, the lesson of the tears of Jesus over Jerusalem, as she gleamed before him in the vernal sunshine, a gem upon her crown of hills, is this; and oh, may we all have grace to learn it now—learn it even in this solemn week; that, as for her, so for us, there may be a too-late; the door may be shut without a sound; the doom sealed without a sigh; life may be over before death comes. It is not (oh mark this!) it is not that God loses his mercy, but that we lose our capacity for accepting it; it is not that God hath turned away from us, but we have utterly paralyzed our own power of turning back to him. And then the voice sighs forth with unutterable sadness, "Ephraim is turned unto his idols, let him alone." Let him alone, O preacher, for he hates the words of truth! Let him alone, O Word of God, for he hath set his face as a flint against thee. Let him alone, O Conscience, for he is bent on murdering thee; his sins have become not willful only but willing; he has chosen them—let him have them. He has loved death more than life, and lies rather than righteousness, and vice more than virtue. and the world more than heaven, and the lusts of the flesh rather than the law of God. And the Spirit of God hath striven with him, and striven in vain; all hath been in vain—let him alone; let him eat of the fruit of his own works, and be filled with his own devices.—Farrar's Silence and Voices of God.

Harmony of Science and Religion.

Now, at eighty-two and a half years of age, still, by God's forbearance and blessing, possessing my mental powers unimpaired, and looking over the barrier beyond which I must soon pass, I can truly declare that in the study and exhibition of science to my pupils and fellow-men, I have never forgotten to give all honor and glory to the Infinite Creator—happy if I might be the honored interpreter of a portion of his works and of the beautiful structure and beneficent laws discovered therein by the labors of many illustrious predecessors. For this I claim no merit. It is the result to which right reason and sound philosopy, as well as religion, would naturally lead.

While I have never concealed my convictions on these subjects, nor hesitated to declare them on all proper occasions, I have also declared my belief that, while natural religion stands on the basis of Revelation, consisting, as it does of the facts and laws which form the domain of science, science has never revealed a system of mercy commensurate with the moral wants of man. In nature, in God's creation, we discover only laws—laws of undeviating strictness and sore penalties attached to their violation. There is associated with natural laws no system of mercy. That dispensation is not revealed in nature, and is contained in the Scriptures alone.

With the double view just presented I feel that science and religion may walk hand in hand. They form two distinct volumes of revelation, and both being records of the will of the Creator, both may be received as constituting a unity declaring the mind of God, and the study of both becomes a duty, and is perfectly consistent with our highest moral obligations.

I feel that as this subject respects my fellow men, I have done no more than my duty, and as I reflect upon my course with subdued satisfaction, being persuaded that nothing that I have said or omitted to say in my lectures, or before the college classes, or before popular audiences, can have favored the erroneous impression that science is hostile to religion.

My own conviction is so decidedly in the opposite direction, that I could wish that students of theology should be also students of natural science—certainly of astronomy, geology, natural philosphy and chemistry, and the outlines of natural history.—Prof. Silliman.

A By-way to Health.

"Nobody ever repented of eating too little" was the sage remark of an old gentleman on the verge of ninety, next to whom the writer had the pleasure of sitting at dinner the other night. The host was pressing him to take more, and urging him in the usual phrase, "Why you have scarcely eaten anything!" Now it is to be assumed that the old gentleman's word indicated one of the by-ways to good health along which he had traveled through his long life, and to which he owed his present remarkably hearty condition; so it was suggested to him interogatively that he had always been a small feeder. "Yes," he answered, "ever since I was two or three and twenty; up to that time I was a weakly fellow enough, and I used to make the great mistake of trying to eat and drink as much as I could, in the hope of becoming strong. All my friends and the doctors backed me up in my error; but fortunately I found it out in time and 'knocked off'—as our modern slang has it—more than half my usual amount of food and stimulants. I gave up the idea of making myself strong and merely strove to make myself well, and so I was contented with eating just as much as I could digest and no more. Of course it took a little time and experience to discover the precise limits; I could not adopt the golden rule of always leaving off with an appetite, because I never began with one, but by persistently erring on the right side I got hold of one of the great secrets of life—the secret of knowing when one has had enough, and after a year or two I became so much better that I used to find myself keenly ready to eat at meal time, and by degrees actually acquired an appetite. Then, once found, I never destroyed it but always determinately rose with the feeling that I should like to eat more. Naturally the temptation for a while grew greater as my digestion grew stronger; but I was firm; I did not behave ungratefully to my stomach, and immediately presume upon its increased powers by overloading it. I did not yet live to eat, but only ate to live; and behold me! I have no need to be very particular as to what I eat, even at my time of life; I have only to be careful not to eat too much." Here indeed is the secret of a great deal that is amiss with many of us. We are in the habit of eating too much, more than our digestive powers can tackle, and whatever is not assimilated is more or less poisonous. The system becomes overcharged, and gives any latent tendency to disease within us every facility for developing itself. The question is, not so much what to eat as what quantity to eat; and nothing but a sharp lookout kept by ourselves can give us the answer.—Tinsley's Magazine.

On the outside of things seek for differences; on the inside for likenesses.—Guesses at Truth.

Many a man thinks it's virtue that keeps him from turning rascal, when it's only a full stomach. One should be grateful and not mistake potatoes for principles.

There are pauses amidst study, and even pauses of seeming idleness, in which a process goes on which may be likened to the digestion of food. In those seasons of repose the powers are gathering their strength for new efforts; as land which lies fallow, and recovers itself for tillage. —Dr. J. W. Alexander.

PORTLAND, Mich.

DEAR SIR:—I am greatly opposed to the institution of Masonry. I am only fourteen years of age, and am on the war path with both feet. I have got a good many pamphlets, one of them is "How to defeat Masonic Scoundrelism in the Court House. "I have read it through and like it first rate. I hope it will have a large circulation through the State and elsewhere. The long winter evenings are coming and I want something to read and I will have to send and get some books. I have given away a large number of tracts and let the boys read my books.

Seven "Minds."

1. Mind your tongue! Don't let it speak hasty, cruel, unkind, or wicked words. Mind!
2. Mind your eyes! Don't permit them to look on wicked books, pictures, or objects. Mind!
3. Mind your ears! Don't suffer them to listen to wicked speeches, songs, or words. Mind!
4. Mind your lips! Don't let tobacco foul them. Don't let strong drink pass them. Don't let the food of a glutton enter between them. Mind!
5. Mind your hands! Don't let them steal or fight, or write any evil words. Mind!
6. Mind your feet! Don't let them walk in the steps of the wicked. Mind!
7. Mind your heart! Don't let the love of sin dwell in it. Don't give it to Satan, but ask Jesus to make it his throne. Mind!—Well-Spring.

Saved his Money.

How totally circumstances sometimes alter the character of a deed! The following curious story shows that an act which seems at the time a cowardly treachery may turn out to be really the wise kindness of a friend:

Two travelers, relates Lord William Lennox, were journeying together over a dreary common, when one remarked to the other that he trusted they should not fall in with any highwaymen, as he had one hundred pounds secreted in his boot. They had not gone many miles before they came to a most secluded spot where four cross-roads met, and a gibbet at some little distance, with a skeleton body suspended in chains to it, showed that a human creature had met with an ignominious death. As the two travelers, who had met accidentally at an inn, passed the gibbet, three fierce and rough-looking men suddenly rushed forward, determined, as they swore, with a dreadful imprecation, to have the money or the lives of the travellers.

"Spare our lives! Here is the money!" cried one, offering a handful of silver.

"That won't do," responded the highwayman. "I'll soon see what you have about you."

"Stay," said the other. "My companion has our money hid away in his boot."

"Traitor!" exclaimed his companion, while one of the gang, with blackened face and cocked pistol, proceeded to take off the boot of the terrified victim.

"If you've spoken falsely," shouted the first, "I'll give you an ounce of lead for your pains."

"He has spoken the truth," announced the searcher. "Here's a prize—a hundred pounds in Bank of England notes."

Securing the money, the two travelers were blindfolded and bound to a post, while the horse was taken out of their gig and turned loose on the common. It was nearly an hour before they were released from their position, during which period the ill-used victim vented his anger pretty loudly. Upon reaching the next town, where a deposition was made before a magistrate, the worthy justice commented in rather a severe strain upon the conduct of the base miscreant who had acted so treacherous a part.

"Hear my palliation," meekly said the accused.

"Stand down; I've heard enough!" vociferated the man in authority.

"One word," continued the other. "My object was not to screen myself at another's expense. My companion told me he had one hundred pounds in his boot; I had twelve hundred in my waistband. Had I been searched, that must have been discovered, and would probably have led to my companion being searched; so I thought it better to sacrifice the smaller to the larger sum. I now return the money I was the means of his being deprived of, and in future recommend him to be more prudent in keeping his own counsel." —Youth's Companion.

The Value of a Trade.

The old story of the uncertainty of riches and the importance of learning a trade is brought to mind by the following, which appeared in a recent number of the New York Ledger:

Karl Frostern, the old nailmaker of Luben, in Silecia, was a jolly, story-telling man, who sang at his work, and whose busy hammer made merry music.

Not far away lived Herr von Koben, a wealthy land owner, whose only son, when not at school, was wont to come to the nailer's, where he would sit by the hour and watch the bright sparks as they flew in showers from the ringing anvil.

"Come, Master Conrad," said the nailer one day in a jolly mood; "Why not set the world an example? Show them that the son of a rich man can learn a trade. Who knows but that it may profit you one of these days?"

The youth fell in with the humor of the thing; and, pulling off his fine jacket, he donned a leather apron, and went to the anvil. He was a bright, quick lad, and, when he had once attempted to make a nail, he had the pride to make it well; and so it came to pass that ere long he could make shoe nails as deftly as could old Karl.

Time passed on, and Herr von Koben died, leaving his great wealth to his son Conrad. A few years later the armies of Frederick came sweeping through Silecia, and Conrad's inheritance was lost. In poverty he wandered towards the mountains of Bohemia, until he came to a town where a host of shoemakers were at a stand for want of nails. Shoes were in great demand for soldiers, and a great price was offered for nails. "Here," thought Conrad, "is my opportunity. Let us see how my trade will serve me."

And he told the shoemakers if they would help him to a shop and a forge, he would make nails for them. They furnished him what was required, and he went at the work in earnest. He made better nails than had ever before been seen in that section. He took apprentices, and enlarged his shop, and in time Von Koben's nails were demanded on both sides of the mountains. By slow but sure degrees he arose to opulence as a manufacturer, honored and respected as the founder of his own fortune. And it all came, as he was proud to tell his children in the after years, from his having learned a trade in his youth. Scientific American.

Home and Farm.

WINTER DECORATIONS.—There is no plant so easy of cultivation as the ivy, and there is none much prettier for winter uses than it is. Give it plenty of water and keep the leaves perfectly clean and it will stand a good deal of other hard usage. It does like to be clean, and a good washing of the leaves twice a week is none too much for it. A pretty way of arranging ivy is to take several long and vigorous shoots, wrap the lower end of each in moss, tie the whole together and suspend in a vase nearly filled with water. It will soon begin to grow and will keep on all winter. The center of the vase can be filled with cut flowers, or grasses, or ferns, or autumn leaves, and make a most beautiful ornament. It likes shade better than a strong light, and a cool temperature better than a very warm one.

In taking care of any house-plants frequent washings are necessary in order to keep them in good health. The dust which accumulates on the leaves obstructs the breathing pores, and the plant grows sickly and finally dies of suffocation.

Some very successful florists water their plants with hot water in the winter, taking care, however, that the water shall not touch the stem or leaves. It seems to have a stimulating effect upon the roots, and the whole plant is said to brighten up wonderfully under it. We have tried it ourselves upon one or two geraniums with the best results.

PROFESSOR ARTUS, who has devoted himself to the discovery of the reason why woolen clothing when washed with soap and water will insist upon shrinking and becoming thick, and acquiring that peculiar oder and feeling which so annoys housekeepers, says these evil effects are due to the decomposition of soap by the acids present in the perspiration and other waste of the skin which the clothing absorbs. These effects may be prevented by steeping the articles in a warm solution of washing soda for several hours, then adding some warm water and a few drops of ammonia. The woolens are then to be washed out and rinsed in lukewarm water.

Castor oil is an excellent thing to soften leather.

Cream of tartar rubbed on soiled white kid gloves cleanses them well.

A solution of cyanide of potassium is the best poison to kill insects of any kind.

A pint of mustard seed put in a barrel of cider will preserve it sweet for several months,

A mixture of oil and ink is a good thing to clean kid boots with; the first softens and the latter blackens them.

A simple remedy for removing freckles is a pint of sour milk, and a small quantity of horse-radish. Let the mixture stand over night, and use it as a wash three times a day until the freckles disappear.

The leaves of geraniums are an excellent application for cuts, when the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of the same kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied on linen to the part, and the wound will become cicatrized in a very short time.

All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind, in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder, after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and potash.—Ohio Farmer.

THE REVIVAL.

Mr. Moody's Discourse on the Holy Spirit.

About 1,500 people assembled in Farwell Hall Thursday afternoon to listen to Mr. Moody's first lecture, preached at the request of numerous friends, on the "Holy Spirit." This is one of Mr. Moody's favorite subjects, and he handles it in his peculiarly original and pungent manner, as can be seen from the report. Among the audience were many members of the clergy of all denominations, and when he finished it was generally conceded by them that in his twenty-five-miuntes talk there was more enlightenment upon the subject than could be obtained from libraries of theological commentaries.

"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" How many people in this audience would know how to answer that question if it it was put to them personally? "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" A great many of us if we were asked would not know what it meant. I was a Christian some years before I knew anything about it. I remember once in Brooklyn, speaking at a Sunday school meeting, I thought there was a good deal of feeling in the meeting, and on going out, feeling perfectly satisfied, an old man touched me on the shoulder, and in a trembling voice and with tears in his eyes said: "Young man, when you speak again honor the Holy Ghost." I didn't know what he meant, and went to other schools, but this always kept ringing in my ears, "Young man, when you speak again honor the Holy Ghost." Months went, and still I kept thinking about this, and wondering what the old man meant. I think I have found it out. My friends, there is a good deal of work among us that goes for naught, because we don't honor the Holy Ghost. Let me say right here, that I have never stood before an audience honoring the Holy Ghost but He has heard me and the work has been deep and thorough, because the work has been done in the Spirit. All that is done in the Spirit will be lasting, but all that is done in the flesh will pass away. The workers should be led in all their efforts by the spirit of the Holy Ghost and their work will then be successful.

ONE WITH THE FATHER.

I want to call your attention to what the Holy Spirit is. He is one with the Father and Son, and the way to honor Him is to look upon Him as equal with the Father and Son. We hear a great deal about Christ, and many of us honor Him —many of us honor the Father, but, how many of us honor the Holy Spirit? Are we honoring the Holy Spirit when we talk about Him as an influence, or as a spirit only. Now, in the twenty-eighth chapter of Matthew and nineteenth verse we see these words: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." They are almost the last words that fell from the lips of the Son of God as he ascended and went back to heaven, and they seem to linger on the earth yet. He had passed over Calvary, had been through the grave, and was now about to ascend and sit at the right hand of God. the Father, where all power was to be given him, and we find him sending out His disciples, saying: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

FROM THE BEGINNING.

The next thought is that He was in the world before Christ was. A great many people have got a false impression about the Holy Ghost. They think He didn't come before the day of Pentecost, but he was in the world long before that. Just turn to Luke ii. 26: "And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen theLord's Christ." The Holy Ghost revealed it unto him. Then we read in the second epistle of Peter, i. 21: "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." You will find from Genesis to Revelation one spirit running through the Bible, and that's the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. You don't find one doctrine in Exodus and another in Kings. One spirit pervades the word of God. Why? Because all the holy men were prompted by God. Therefore we have but one doctrine and one Bible, which contains writings executed by men inspired by the Holy Ghost, and that

HOLY GHOST IS A PERSON.

Now, that's one thing a good many Christians don't understand. I was a Christian about ten years before I found it out. I remember an old divine getting up in Farwell Hall—not this one, but the one before the fire—and he spoke about Christians honoring the Holy Ghost. He said that very few people thought He was as much a person as Christ. I got my Bible, and soon I saw he was right. Now just turn to the fourteenth chapter of John and the sixteenth verse and we read: "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another comforter that He may abide with you forever." If the Spirit was not a person Christ would not have spoken about Him as he did. "That He my abide with you forever." Then we go on: "Even the Spirit of Christ whom the world cannot receive because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him; for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Three times in that verse Christ speaks of the Holy Spirit as "Him," and in the two verses we find him referred to three times as "He." It is he, him, him, he, all through those two verses. The Son of Man knew him; that's the reason. Again we read in the twenty-sixth verse: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in My name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." We find the Spirit again referred to as "He" in the 16th of John, and it is just repeated over and over again in Scripture. If you have got your Bible just turn to the sixteenth chapter John eighth verse: "And when He is come He will reprove the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment." He wouldn't speak about the Holy Ghost in that way if He was only an influence, a breath of God, as some people believe. He wouldn't speak about the Spirit as "Himself," if he was only this. "Howbeit when He the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."

THE LIFE-GIVER.

Again, I want to call your attention to a verse in First Peter. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit.' Now, every dead soul brought to life must be brought to life by the power of the Holy Spirit. No soul has ever been brought to life unless it has been quickened by the Holy Ghost. The The moment the Spirit of God quickens a soul and brings it into life, from that moment they have got a love to serve God, and a power to save people. Till then it is impossible—that's the only way of receiving salvation. And let me say here that the idea of educating people into the kingdom of God is not the way. You may educate them and educate them, but they will be as far from conversion as ever. Men have all to be quickened by the Holy Ghost as Christ tells us. So I suppose some of you have found in the inquiry room that you could get a certain length with people and then stopped; couldn't get any further. How many people have come to me and said of some one, "I cannot bring him into the light of Christ." "You can't; that's not extraordinary." My friends, you can only bring people to a certain length and then the spirit of the Holy Ghost must show them light, and when he does it he will do it thoroughly. We cannot force inquirers into the kingdom of God. The Holy Spirit must quicken and the Lord Jesus Christ must do the rest.

THE SPIRIT GIVES LOVE.

The next thing I want to speak to you about is His work. We find in Romans, fifth chapter: "And hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." His work is to impart love. There is not a better evangelist in the world than the Holy Spirit. If the churches would just let him come in there would soon be mighty work for Christ. You may say that what the church lacks to-day more than anything else is love. In Galatians we find what should dwell in the churches. There are nine different qualities—peace, gentleness, long-suffering, hope, patience, charity, etc., but you can sum them all into one, and you have love. I saw something in a writing the other day bearing upon the subject which I just took a copy of: "The fruit of the Spirit is in one word—love. Joy is love exalted: peace is love in repose, long-suffering is love enduring, gentleness is love in society, goodness is love in action, faith is love on the battle field, meekness is love in school, and temperance is love in training." And so you can say that the fruit is all expressed by one word—love. When the fruit of the Spirit is in my heart I can love them that hate me. To love a man who thinks a great deal of you is natural love with every one, but to love those that hate you is a different thing, and whenever a man gets the Spirit he loves his enemies. The Spirit of Christ on Calvary comes to my soul. When they reviled, he cried "Father forgive them, they know not what they do." I can tell you in a minute if the church has got it. When it isn't there, when the sermon is over, the people rise up and walk out. They do just as if they were at the theater or a concert. But if the love of God is there, you will see whenever the sermon is finished the people gather in little groups and talk about how much good it did them, and they will carry it home to their families and tell it to their neighbors. While the preaching is going on they are praying all the time for him. They They are in sympathy with him, and a bond of love is apparent among them all. My friends, the great want of the present day in American churches is the want of lhe love of God in the hearts of members shed by the Holy Ghost. We cannot love him, we cannot serve him till we have his love in our hearts. Said a young lady in the inquiry room to me: "I am going to try my very best to become a Christian." "I don't like that," I said, "have you got a mother?" "No." "Have you got a fathe ?" "Yes." "Are you going to try to love him?" No, there's no use of my trying, I love him already." She couldn't help loving her father, because it was spontaneous. The moment the love of God is shed in our hearts, my friends, we cannot help loving him and working for him.

THE SPIRIT GIVES HOPE.

The next thing the Holy Spirit imparts is hope. In Romans xv. 13, we find, "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." You just let the Spirit begin to work in the churches and see how hopeful the church becomes. The minister is lifted up, the people are lifted up—all are rejoicing. Take a minister who has lost hope in his church—he is discouraged, and as soon as he gets discouraged there's no power there. If they are not hopeful the Lord don't help them. The Spirit not only imparts love but he gives hope. I never saw a Christian who had much of the Holy Ghost who was ever discouraged. He has come here now. He is just knocking at the door of every church in Chicago, and it will be sharp and thorough and lasting if you let him in.

The trouble is we want our own way. We want the Holy Ghost to work in our way, and if he doesn't come in that way we think sometimes it is not the work of God because it has not come in the usual way. My grandfather told me in his day there was a great revival, and every one came to the anxious bench, "but now they don't do so," said he, "and I don't believe it is the work of God." That is the way a great many talk. God never repeats himself. Because God did a certain thing through one instrument at one time, it is no sign that he will do it the same way all the time. What we want is to let the Holy Ghost work in his own way: He will impart hope the moment he gets into our hearts.

PERFECT LIBERTY THROUGH THE SPIRIT.

The next thought is the liberty the Spirit gives us. See what Paul says about this in Second Corinthians iii. 17: "Now the Lord is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." What do the workers want more than liberty? What do the ministers require more than liberty? It is easy to preach if we've got the Spirit of God with us. We're not afraid of public opinion at all—we've perfect liberty. The meeting last Monday night in Farwell Hall was the best I ever attended. Why? Because we had perfect liberty there. The Spirit of the Lord was there. The rich and poor, the educated and ignorant, high and low assembled were all free. I don't know anything that retards the cause of Christ in the churches more than the stiffness—the coldness in them. There's no liberty where there's stiffness. If a young convert got up he would be chilled through. When we have the Spirit we are not afraid of the opinion of our neighbor, of the opinion of this man or that man. We say, "What can I do for the Son of God?" What do we want more than love, hope and charity? Before the Chicago fire I used to preach in this hall. If it was pretty nearly full I used to be lifted up at the sight of so many people before me. I remember an old woman coming to me and saying, "I am praying for you; you haven't got the liberty yet." I thought I had—thought I was all right; but she knew better. I feel more indebted to that old woman than to almost anything else. So, ministers, if you have got some old saint in your churches look to her. How often have I thanked God for sending that woman to pray for my liberty. Why, a few years ago I could not stand before an assemblage of ministers for trembling. I was always afraid I would say something wrong. But I've got liberty now. If a man is bound hand and foot like Lazarus when he came out of the grave he cannot have any freedom. He will be spluttering and splashing in his sermon, and the church don't take any interest in it. What we want is liberty. What we want is to know that we are sons and daughters of God. Sons have always liberty. A man once said he could always tell who were the boarders and who were members of the family in a house. A boarder would come in, eat, and then walk out to the theater; but the son would come in and sit down, and inquire all the news from his mother. My friends the church is full of boarders. You see them in the church, but you never see them at any of the prayer-meetings. If they do come and you ask them to pray, "Oh, don't call upon me; I haven't liberty." They're bound hand and foot. Loosen their hands and let them go; give them freedom and liberty, and see how they will take an interest in everything connected with the church.

There are so many people who are just between belief and unbelief. I pity that class of people. What God wants is for us to have perfect liberty. Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty. Why is it that when the Holy Ghost wakes up some men they get so angry? Because the Holy Ghost testifies against the world. That is what he has come to do to convince men of their sins. It is a good sign sometimes to see a man get mad and storm out of the house. When the spirit of God wakes some men up they wake up in anger. I want to read the seventh verse of the sixteenth chapter of John: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth. It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you. And when he is come he will reprove the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment." I do not believe a man was ever convicted of sin by any preacher in the world. It is the work of the Holy Ghost. If he does not do it they won't be convicted at all.

TESTIFIES OF CHRIST.

Another work of the Holy Ghost is to testify of Christ; he comes for that purpose. I believe the world would have forgotten Christ's death as soon as they forgot his birth if it had not been for the Holy Ghost. It had only been thirty years since his birth; all those wonderful scenes had happened in Bethlehem, and it was well known in Jerusalem; yet it seems to have been forgotten until Christ came, and they would have forgotten his death if it had not been for the Holy Ghost. He came to testify for Jesus Christ that he had risen. He saw him in heaven, and he came to tell us he was there at the right hand of God. He convinced men on the day of Pentecost—three thousand of them. He does not talk of himself, but of Christ. In the 15th chapter of John the 26th verse, it says: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." If a man preaches Christ faithfully the Holy Ghost will bless his preaching, because he will testify and carry home the truth. He knows that Christ has risen and is sitting at the right hand of God, and has been raised for our justification. Do you believe, my friends, that he who died outside the walls of Jerusalem the death of a common prisoner, the cruel death on the cross, do you believe that the preaching of that man after it had taken place would have had any power over that audience, except for the Holy Ghost?

Some people do not believe in the supernatural working of the Holy Ghost. Every man and every woman has felt the power of the Holy Ghost. When the Holy Ghost opened my eyes I thought how blind I had been! That is the way with the world now; it is blind but does not know it. He came into the world that the blind might see The world says people go mad on the subject of religion. When people are mad they think every one else is. It would take but a few minutes to prove that the world had gone clean crazy.

The Holy Ghost is our teacher. He comes to speak of Christ and not of himself. A man came to me last winter and said he was going down to Florida, where my wife and family were and wanted to know if I had any message to send. Well, I sent them a message; but suppose when that man went down there he should go and see my family and should begin and talk about himself, and not say a word about me. That would not cheer their hearts; they would want to hear about me. That would make their hearts warm. Every one of us Christians wants more of the Holy Ghost. Let us all give ourselves up to his influence, and he will lead us into life, liberty, joy, and peace.

Nearly every other nation of Europe having led the way Russia is about adopting the Metric weights and measures. The special committee which is sitting at St. Petersburg, at the head-quarters of the Russian Imperial Technical Society, have not only come to the conclusion that such an innovation would be useful, but have also emphatically declared that the present is the fitting moment for the introduction of the Metric System. They think that the change ought to be accomplished within two years. It is a remarkable fact that Americans, with all their boasted readiness to adopt labor-saving inventions, and having led the world in use of a decimal currency, should be one of the very last nations of the globe to adopt what John Quincy Adams, in his official report, pronounces the greatest invention of human ingenuity since that of printing, and a greater labor-saver than steam.

News of the Week.

The Centennial Exposition was formally closed on Friday last. Though the day was rainy 100,000 people were on the grounds. Thomas' grand orchestra was again brought forward for the musical part of the programme and addresses were made by Gen. Hawley and Messrs. Goshorn, Welsh and Morell. Pres. Grant declared the Exposition formally closed. Many of the exhibitors will pack up immediately, but the grounds will be open as usual this week.

—Last Friday Pres. Grant sent telegrams to Gen. Sherman directing him to send all the troops needed to Florida, to prevent violence and fraud with the election returns. He says, "No man worthy of the office of President should be willing to hold it "if counted in," or placed there by fraud.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A dispatch from Calcutta to the Times says it is reported that 20,000 perished in the cyclone of Oct. 31, and some estimates place the loss of lives as high as 40,000. In the town of Barrishol, the capital of Backergumge district, 3,000 houses were leveled with the earth. Letters from survivors report that a great wave, nine feet deep, swept over the large island of Dakin Shahabazpore. The whole of Eastern Bengal appears to have suffered severely from the cyclone, and Calcutta narrowly escaped.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The following is the text of the speech delivered by the Czar at Moscow yesterday: "I thank you for your sentiments respecting the political situation, which is now more clearly defined than before. You know that Turkey has yielded to my demands for an immediate armistice to end the useless slaughter in Servia and Montenegro. In this unequal struggle the Montenegrins, as heretofore, have shown themselves real heroes. Unfortunately the same cannot be said of the Servians, notwithstanding the assistance of our volunteers, many of whom shed their blood for the Slavonic cause. I know that all Russia joins me in warmly sympathizing in the suffering of our brethren and co-religionists. The true interests of Russia are, however, dearer to me than all. My wish to the utmost is to spare Russian blood. Therefore I have striven, and will strive to obtain a real improvement of the position of the Christians by peaceful means. In a few days negotiations will commence at Constantinople. My most ardent wish is that we may arrive at a general agreement. Should this, however, not be achieved, and should I see that we cannot obtain the guarantees necessary for carrying out what we intended to demand from the Porte, I am firmly determined to act independently. I am convinced that the whole of Russia will respond to my summons should I consider it necessary, and Russia's honor requires it. Moscow will lead the van by its example. May God help us to carry out our sacred mission."

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT, HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Gain in one week,	38

SIX WEEKS! ! ! !

We have now only about six weeks left of this memorable Centennial year.

Will our readers who wish to make the present year, before its close, memorable for another worthy action done, work during these six weeks to secure a large number of subscribers for the Cynosure? We pay commissions to those who desire it, and take subscriptions at our regular rates. We have club rates by which persons sending for the paper together, can secure it at a very low price. We will send extra copies of the Cynosure, circulars, subscription papers, addressed envelopes, for canvassing purposes, on application. If there could be a thorough "HOUSE TO HOUSE" canvas in all the towns and neighborhoods where the Cynosure is taken, we believe the heart of every friend of light would be made glad and God's kingdom on earth strengthened.

If you cannot do the work yourself can you not find some one who will? In places where two or more workers live, will you not come together and assign each one who is willing to work a district to canvass? Secure the subscriptions of all the ministers, physicians and lawyers, and then ask every intelligent person, Mason, Odd-fellow, granger and Good Templar, as well as others.

The more you canvass for the paper the better you will like to. This is the general verdict of persons who have tried it. And now from Maine and the Provinces to Oregon, and from California to Florida, where there is a man or woman, boy or girl, whose heart beats true for God and for humanity, there let us have the Cynosure read and circulated.

On the fourth of January next we expect to give a summary of the work done for the Cynosure, so far as it is reported to us, during the coming six weeks. Tell persons who do not like mushrooms, that the Cynosure has had more than eight years of healthful growth, and is now hardy and valuable.

Will you work for the Cynosure this winter? Let us hear from you.

Clubs of ten, MONEY TO BE SENT AT ONE TIME, $15.

An invalid writes the following—let it encourage those who are not sick, to work:

"I have been sick for two months, but am now on the gain, so that for a few days I have walked out short distances. Yesterday I made an effort to obtain some new subscribers and as the result, send you two new names, and pay herein for three months.

NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL MEETING

The Annual Meeting of the New Hampshire Anti-secret Christian Association will be held in Austin Academy, at Center Strafford, Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 6 and 7, 1876. The friends of reform in New Hampshire and the neighboring States are cordially invited to be present. The so-called secrets of the more prominent secret societies will be thoroughly exposed and their anti-Christian tendencies exhibited. God's blessing has rested upon our labors during the year. May his presence grace our first anniversary.

J. F. BROWNE, President.
S. C. KIMBALL. Secretary.
Center Stafford, N. H.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

The friends of Michigan will take notice that the second anniversary of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secrecy, will be held in the M. E. Church, Hastings, Barry county, on the 6th, 7th and 8th of December. The meeting to commence on the afternoon of the 6th at 2 o'clock. Hastings is easily reached, being on the railroad between Grand Rapids and Jackson. Arrangements are being made to secure a good list of prominent speakers and a pleasant time is anticipated. Arrangements have been made by the friends of Hastings to supply a home for all from abroad. Let every true reformer make it his or her business to attend for they will be expected. No excuse allowable but sickness.

By order of Executive Committee.
C. B. REMINGTON.
Fentonville, Mich.

Mr. R onayne is now at home in Chicago, and is arranging for a short tour through Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Michigan before New Year's. Friends desiring to secure his services to work the Masonic degrees will write at once to this office. He will visit New York, Boston, and other Eastern States and cities after the holidays.

—Let the Cynosure be a Fireside Friend in a dozen homes in every neighborhood this winter where it is now a stranger.

THE CENTENNIAL TRACT WORK.

It is impossible to show by figures the magnitude or importance of the work performed by Elder Freeman and Mr. Thomas Hodge at the great Centennial. Thousands who had never before heard of our reform here received tracts and verbal information from brethren Freeman and Hodge the value and importance of which eternity alone can reveal. Many adhering lodge members, particularly Freemasons, have had the evils of the lodge so clearly pointed out to them that they have declared their intention never to enter the haunts of secretism again. The figures are as follows:

EXPENSES.

392,000 pages tracts at half price,	$196.00
Services of Agents, board and other expenses,	$856.70
Total expenses	$1,052.70

RECEIPTS.

From sundry persons cash	$248.23
Donation of services, Elder Freeman,	$200.00
" " Thomas Hodge,	$240.00
Donation of Ezra A. Cook and Co., part of Agent's expenses and getting place at Centennial,	$150.00
Donation, from Philadelphia friends cash and board,	$142.50
Total receipts,	$980.73
Balance needed to pay Centennial expenses,	$71.97

As will be seen from the above figures Messrs Freeman and Hodge donate in services nearly half of the total expense, Philadelphia friends $142.50, and Ezra A. Cook & Co., besides furnishing the tracts at half price, pay $150.00 towards the expenses. This leaves but $320.20 for others to meet, and $248.23 of that is paid. Shall we not have the $71.97 yet needed within the next week? Besides almost four hundred thousand pages of tracts distributed, about thirty-five thousand pages of books and two thousand copies of the Cynosure were also given away there. Book sales were allowed for about two months and then prohibited. Messrs. Harry Wilcox, Norris Gay, Philo Carpenter, and others gave special contributions to pay for the books given away.

EZRA A. COOK,
Sec'y Tract Committee.

—Friends at the New Hampshire and Michigan State Conventions, don't forget to do your best for the Cynosure.

Topics of the Time

It is yet all sixes and sevens about the election. For once railroads and telegraphs, their iron nerves unstrung, give us no answer, and speculation is free. Will the two doubtful States (South Carolina is regarded safe for Hayes), Florida and Louisiana, give us the one elector needed to make a Republican President? or will either add to Tilden's 184 votes? To see victory so near and yet drawing back like the cup of Tantalus is most exasperating to the Democratic party, and here and there their inward fever breaks out in threats that would cost a prison in Europe. On the other side there is a generally expressed desire to stand by a fair count however it turns. The canvassing boards in these two States are at work and may give us relief before Thanksgiving day. Meanwhile strange proposals for Democratic governors to throw out some Republican elector, or for a Democratic House to throw out a State, etc., etc., are blowing about with the shifting winds, while Republicans are balancing possible failure with dismal editorials about frauds in Mississippi, South Carolina and Florida. It is vox Deii not vox populi this year, and let us be thankful that God reigns and will.

While we wait in suspense here, in Europe dark clouds of war are gathering with dreadful power. The speech of the Czar at Moscow was a plain, emphatic declaration that Russia would have her way even if opened with balls and bayonets. He was probably exasperated at the threatening message of England that she would fight for Constantinople. Disraeli and Derby are outrunning their constituency, but England may be forced to follow into the war. The Porte has agreed to the Conference of the Powers and there is yet hope that peace may be preserved. Meantime Russia has authorized a loan of a hundred million roubles and has an army of 250,000 under marching orders. Germany and Austria will not interfere with her movements, only England is arming against her, and ordering troops and squadrons toward Constantinople and her costly Suez ditch. It is surely a time to implore the Almighty God of nations to roll back this threatening storm, and give the calm of peace. The difficulties to be settled are surely not beyond a calm discussion and, let us hope, a righteous and peaceful Conclusion. God grant this to the conference.

Under the brief rule of the Republic the Catholic priests in Spain suffered some loss in their customary stipends. The succeeding monarchy has promised, it seems, to make good their loss, and the greedy priests foot up a snug sum of $35,000,000, which bill is presented for payment to young Alfonso as the cost of restoring his so-called spiritual advisers. Their return is costing the Protestants no less in the rigorous and persecuting measures of the papacy, which the priests have little or no restriction in planning and executing.

Although in the various churches of the city the fruits of the Gospel meetings are beginning to fall with promise of a great harvest, and on Sabbath week one thousand inquirers and converts were reported, yet the most manifest exhibition of the power of the meetings by God's grace is in the salvation of the drunkard. Every Friday noon is given to a temperance meeting; none have surpassed that of last week in thrilling interest. Before the temperance talk began Mr. Moody introduced a representative of the business men, Mr. Hamlin, late of the firm of Hamlin, Hale & Co., and for many years a leading merchant of the city. This gentleman told with the humility and tenderness of a young convert, how two weeks before he had come into the noon meeting without any well-defined purpose, had staid to the second meeting for men and there gave himself to Christ; how he went home to find his wife had that very day been brought to the cross for pardon and cleansing; how they began the family prayer together, and longed for the same grace to come upon their children. Then followed the testimony of a number who had been given to drink. Thirty or forty arose in response to Mr. Moody's request to thus show that they had been delivered from this terrible vice by the power of God, and thirteen arose to express the desire to be saved from this and their other sins, some of whom were respectable looking women. Mr. Sawyer, a converted drunkard, who is a sort of missionary among this class thinks that seventy-five men have during the meetings found the only safe remedy for their disease, and have used it with blessed results.

No Man can Serve Two Masters.

Dear Cynosure:—In your 12th of October number appears a good article with this caption: "Can a Quaker be a Freemason?" Let us turn the question over a few times.

1. Can a Quaker who is a Freemason be a Christian?

2. Can a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, a Congregationalist, or one of any religious denomination who is a Freemason, be a Christian?

3 Can any one occupying the position of an orthodox minister, be at one and the same time a Freemason and a Christian?

Here is the same question repeated in different forms. The answers will be different as made by different persons. We know how the Jew or Mohammedan, or disciple of Confucius, or infidel, or deist would answer—always in the negative. Professing Christians, who are Freemasons, are expected to answer differently, and so they do—always in the affirmative. It is then, clearly an open question.

Another question arises here. Is the institution in itself a sinful one? And still another—Is it possible for a man to be in fellowship with a sinful institution and be at the same time a Christian? If we allow the excuse of extreme ignorance, charity may call for an affirmative answer, but this, for orthodox ministers, who are always supposed to be highly intelligent, cannot be allowable. The question then remains an open one; and while it is such, there is surely a fearful responsibility resting upon ministers. What! occupy a position in reference to which the public mind is in doubt whether it be right or wrong, good or bad, approved of God, or disapproved! The Apostle Paul would "eat no meat while the world standeth" if by so doing he should "cause his brother to offend." He would not in any wise, even in the eating of meat, a matter harmless in itself, cause his "weak brother to perish for whom Christ died." Is the minister of Christ so strong in the Lord that looking beyond the heathenish symbols and ceremonies—the profane titles and blasphemous oaths, he can see nothing wicked in attaching himself to the lodge of Freemasons? How is it, that the rule laid down by the pen of inspiration should have no restraining influence from setting an example before weaker brethren, to cause them to "perish for whom Christ died?"

All know that according to the laws of mind, evil practices have a blinding influence. At first, the evil may seem to be clearly such, but a little indulgence, perhaps tremblingly, hesitatingly affects the conscience, till so blinded as to be unable to distinguish the evil from the opposite. Persons so affected are unsafe leaders. Whether ministers or otherwise, they should not be followed or approved. They are blind leaders, and if "the blind lead the blind they shall both fall into the ditch." The people should stop and look before they become so blinded as not to be able to distinguish the right from the wrong path. They should think and act independently. I spoke of this before as the principal cause which hindered the progress of our reform. The people don't think; they won't examine, so they are led by others. The Methodist minister referred to in my last communication as endowed with so many excellent qualities, has lately exhibited an attachment for secretism wholly unlooked for before, for he had said that he had "not attended a Masonic lodge for several years"—from which a fair inference was drawn that he had no desire to cast his influence in that direction. We are sorry for this, especially as the minister referred to possesses traits of excellence to be admired. These excellent traits and all the other influences attached to his position are now cast fully into the lap of secretism by a recent connexion with two Masonic auxiliaries. Facts like these show more and more clearly the need of men learning to think and act for themselves. Ministers are but men, and are of like passions, and subject to go astray as other men, hence it is not safe to follow them blindly. Let us follow Christ. He says, "In secret have I said nothing." "What ye hear in the ear that proclaim ye upon the house tops."

As I said before "It is hard work to labor over the heads of ministers" who stand in the way of reform. Those of us who labored in the anti-slavery reform knew this to our grief. So in this reform against secretism, when it ceases to be unpopular they will be with us. At present it is hard work. But let us cheerfully labor on, the cause is of God; secretism, like slavery is doomed. "We shall reap if we faint not."

With regard to the questions above referred to, let us ponder them, and endeavor to answer at a future time. To impress the importance of these inquiries upon the public mind seems more needful just now than to give answers with proof. If we can induce thought, investigation, careful examination of evidences on both sides, spontaneous evidences will be more likely to result. Yours truly,

J. A. Bingham.

When the battle is joined, none will cut so poor a figure as the Broad Churchman and advanced thinkers, who have no standard round which to rally. What Robinson so nobly testified still holds good: "The Lord hath more truth and light yet to break forth out of his Holy Word." But it is in the Word we must find it, not in our model consciousness, nor in the progress of society. Let us fulfill our highest function, the ministry of reconciliation. We should not dream of expending our powers in weaving hypotheses respecting the future fate of the wicked, when the question is, "How may we save them now?" It is not by any fancied irradiation of the dark problems of retribution that we shall commend God's character to the confidence of men; but by the distinct and glorious light poured around it from the sacrifice of Calvary.

It Won't Work.

A man may make a wrong use of religious professions, and gain money by acting under the mere mask of Christianity. This we admit; but the objection that we have against Masonry is, that it seems expressly designed to enable a man to play this part, and for nothing else. It reduces the making a wrong use of religion to an art, which is claimed to be ancient and honorable. The Christian is condemned by every body for making a wrong use of religious profession, while the Mason makes it honorable!

We have seen an illustration of this fact in the recent political campaign. The Masons evidently wanted Mr. Blaine for President, for he wears the livery of the lodge, the slyest, meanest-spirited power any where extant; he wears the Knight Templar stripe down the leg, it is said, and carries a sword in order to enforce Masonic charity upon the world. And Mr. Blaine made rampant speeches against the rebels, and accused them of horse-stealing, or something quite as bad, long after the horse had been taken from the stable. While the horse was being taken from the stable, the Masons were very quiet; were making money and letting the theft go on; but when they had made as much out of the war as they could reasonably expect; and had scandalized the whole country by their corruption and fraud, then, in true Masonic piety, they wished to appear honest, patriotic, indignant against rebels, warm friends of negroes (whom they had shut out from the charities of the lodge), great sticklers for equal rights, etc.,

Mr. Blaine, the Knight Templar, was their spokesman, and the fire and fury that ought to have been poured out at the beginning of the war, was manifested only fifteen years after the war was over. Not only had the lodge been making money and power during all the fifteen years, but it appeared that even their mouth-piece, Mr. Blaine, had done so too, and that he, both as Mason and trader, was one of the last men in the world to set up the petensions of reformer.

This attempt to couple Masonic fraud and imposition with the virtues necessary for American citizenship will not answer. No possible mutual benefit society can exclude the Savior of mankind from their ring, as Masons do, and at the same time reap the benefits that arise from honesty, manliness, and truth. A band of pirates, or a band of freebooters like that which lately made an attack upon the Northfield bank, after having robbed several express trains, may succeed for a time, as the Masons have done during the war of the rebellion, and may exhibit all that brutal arrogance that springs from success unworthily achieved; but so long as there is still Christian light left burning in the world, the wickedness will sooner or later be exposed. Such men, it is true, will exult in illegitmate success, and never be ashamed of their exposure, and will ever be ready to renew their secret efforts under some other form, for foul spirits are legion in form and number; but this only renders the duty of the real Christian more onerous. It is not enough to expose and defeat the impostures of Freemasonry, but we must keep them defeated; and the only way to do this is to begin with the church and extend the effort to every department of human life, withholding favor and countenance, as far as possible, from all men who resort to the idolatrous practices of secret association to carry their ends. There are no worse enemies to the church and the state than such men.

If the church admited to its communion table Buddhists, heathens, infidels, atheists and such, it would be no better than Masonry. It would be a mere attempt to reconcile imposition with truth, brutal insensibility with the tenderness of faith, shameless depravity with the aspirations of holiness, drunken feasting in an upper chamber with the saddening, chastening, yet elevating sacrament of the Lord's supper. The maintenance of American institutions, which are founded on religious liberty, will not suffer us to go off after the strange god of Masonry, whose seat is London, and which is not worshipped even there with that blind devotion which its followers exhibit among us. In short, Masonry, as a motive power in free institutions, will not work.

Our institutions are founded upon religious truth, while Masonry is thoroughly an imposture in all its earings. Devotion to it on the part of American citizens is one of the most lamentable weaknesses that human folly has yet ever exhibited. Americus.

The Consecration of a Lodge.

Mackey's Jurisprudence, p. 288.—The ceremony of consecrating religious edifices to the sacred purposes for which they are intended, by mystic rites, has been transmitted to us from the remotest antiquity. "History," says Dudley, "both ancient and modern, tells us that extraordinary rites, called rites of consecration or dedication, have been performed by people of all ages and nations, on the occasion of the first application of altars or temples, or places, to religious uses." Thus, Moses consecrated the tabernacle, Solomon the first temple, and the returned exiles from Babylon the second. Among the pagans, ceremonies of the most magnificent nature were often used in setting apart their gorgeous temples to the purposes of worship. A Masonic lodge is, in imitation of these ancient examples, consecrated with mystic ceremonies to the sacred purposes for which it had been constructed. By this act it is set apart for a holy object, the cultivation of the great tenets of a Mason's profession, and becomes, or should become, in the mind of the conscientious Mason, invested with a peculiar reverence as a place where, as he passes over its threshold, he should feel the application of the command given to Moses: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." On this occasion a box is to be used as the symbol of the lodge. It is placed in the center of the room, and is a representation of the ark of the covenant, which was deposited in the Holy of Holies of the ancient temple.*

In the course of the ceremonies, this lodge is sprinkled with corn, wine and oil, which are the Masonic elements of consecration. These elements are technically called "the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of joy," and are to the Mason symbolic of the many gifts and blessings for which we are indebted to the bounty of the G. A. O. T. U., (Grand Architect of the universe), for the first is emblematic, in Masonic symbolism, of health, the second of plenty, and the third of peace.

The ancient altars were thus consecrated by the offering of barley cakes and libations of wine and oil, and the Jewish ritual gives ample directions for a similar ceremony. The rite of Masonic consecration is accompanied by a prayer, in which the lodge is solemnly consecrated "to the honor of God's glory."

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, p. 94, says: "When a new lodge is formed, it is necessary that it should be hallowed or consecrated to the purposes of Masonry." "The Masonic elements of consecration are corn, wine and oil.

Abid. p. 96.—"In devoting anything to religious purposes, the anointing with oil was considered as a necessary part of the ceremony, a rite which has descended to Christian nations. The tabernacle in the wilderness, and all its holy vessels, were, by God's express command, anointed with oil; Aaron and his two sons were set apart for the priesthood with the same ceremony; and the prophets and kings of Israel were consecrated to their offices by the same rite. Hence, Freemasons' lodges, which are but temples to the Most High, are consecrated to the sacred purposes for which they were built, by strewing corn, wine, and oil upon the "lodge," the emblem of the Holy Ark. Thus does this mystic ceremony instruct us to be nourished with the hidden manna of righteousness, to be refreshed with the Word of the Lord, and to rejoice with joy unspeakable in the riches of divine grace.

In Morris Masonic Dictionary, p. 105-6-7, the following statements are made under the head of "Consecration":

"The ceremony of dedicating a thing by certain rites or ceremonies, to the service of God."—Webster. There are three occasions of solemn consecration in Masonry; the first is that of the corner-stone, or more properly, foundation-stone of a public edifice; the second the consecration of a new lodge, the third that of a Masonic Hall. Both are considered under the "head" of Past Master, (which see.) A corner-stone is consecrated (laid or planted) by the Grand Master, or his proxey, and the fraternity. The exercises are performed in public. The chief magistrate and other civil officers of the place are invited. The members of the sooiety wear white gloves and aprons. The lodge is opened in a private place and marched to the appointed site by a formal procession. Odes are sung, and a prayer offered. The stone is raised, metallic and other tokens are placed under it, and it is lowered amidst solemn music, two measured pauses being made before it reaches its final bed. It is then consecrated by pouring corn,† wine and oil upon it by the Grand Master, with the following formula: "May the all bounteous Author of Nature bless the inhabitants of this place with all the necessaries, conveniences and comforts of life; assist in the erection and completion of this building; protect the workmen against every accident, and long preserve this structure from decay, and grant to us all in needed supply, the CORN of nourishment, the WINE of refreshment and the OIL of joy!" The Grand Master then strikes the stone THRICE with the gavel, and the public Grand Honors of Masonry are given. In consecrating a new lodge. the presiding officer represents the Grand Master, supported by the Grand Lodge officers. The exercises are usually performed in public. The officers of the new lodge, which has heretofore worked under dispensation, are severally presented to the Grand Master, who asks the brethren if they remain satisfied with their choice. Kneeling around some object which represents the lodge, a prayer is then offered by the Grand Chaplain. The elements of corn, wine and oil, are sprinkled upon the lodge. Another prayer follows, then solemn music. The Grand Chaplain then DEDICATES the new lodge in the following words: "To the memory of Holy Saint John we dedicate this lodge. May every brother revere his character and imitate his virtues." The ceremonies conclude with the installation of the officers. In dedicating a Masonic hall the same officers have charge. The lodge being opened, an anthem is sung and an oration delivered. The edifice is delivered up by the Architect and received by the Grand Master. Three circumamnbulations are made by the lodge in procession about the hall. At the end of the first the Grand Master pouring corn upon the lodge, dedicates it in this form: "In the name of the Great Jehovah, to whom be all honor and glory, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to Masonry." At the end of the second, sprinkling wine upon the lodge he says: "In the name of the Holy Saint John, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to Virtue." At the end of the third, sprinkling oil upon the lodge, he says: "In the name of the whole fraternity, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to Universal Benevolence."

The Temperance-Lodge System a Failure.

The question whether the temperance-lodge system of this country is a success or a failure, is one that deeply interests the Christian philanthropist This system, embracing various organizations, has extended its ramifications throughout all parts of the country; it claims to represent true temperance principles, and to be the legitimate means of performing temperance work—influential. because it engages in political "wire-pulling," and eminently successful because nearly everywhere popular.

I am well aware that the very idea of calling in question the validity of the claims of the lodge system is enough to raise a storm about one's ears, and yet it seems to me a matter of great importance that some one, in a spirit of the utmost kindness, should seek to point out wherein it is a sad failure. At the outset, however, of the few remarks I wish to make on this subject, I desire to say that I am not swayed by prejudice, or impelled by any motive contrary to love for a cause which is very dear to my heart. My associations in the lodge-room with many who, like myself, were in search of the best place to work for temperance and humanity, have been of the most pleasing character, and, therefore, I feel free from the slightest tincture of bitterness in entering upon the discussion of the matter in hand. I have been an office-holder in every temperance organization in the country, and, having had ample opportunity for examining their workings, I had to come out of them mainly because I found there nothing to do in the shape of true temperance work.

Those conversant with the lodges know that the social element is mainly relied upon to fill them with young people, and hold their membership together. Now, social intercourse, when of the right sort, is a beautiful and ennobling thing. If you guard it from sheer frivolity, on one side, and keep it within the bounds of prudence and pure morality on the other, you have a principle that refines human character and blesses society. But when this element is used as a basis for a temperance work which is designed to reach the masses of mankind and save the drunkard, it fails, decidedly. Let the lodge-goer look at the matter candidly, and see if this is not the inevitable conclusion:

Is not all the lodge work ritualistic—if that may be termed ritualistic which has in it so much of senseless mummery? Is not the initiatory service a mere farce in which no earnest man or woman can engage without a tinge of shame that they have been inveigled into such childishness? The writer has witnessed hundreds of such initiations, and he wishes to say in the most positive language, that they always fail to impress either the candidates or the members present. The circling round, the singing, the obligation and charges, the prayers read (by irreligious men, often), are gone through with amidst the giggling of the majority and the yawning inattention of others. Observing this, the candidates enter into the spirit of hilarity, and thus any good impression that might have been looked for at the outset of a temperance career is utterly destroyed. An obligation taken under such circumstances, fails to make any deep impression on the mind of a candidate, and, should there be a tendency to drink its restraining power would be absolutely nil. This is a strong assertion, but experience and observation prove its truthfulness. I appeal to the candid lodge-member if the spirit that prevails, generally, during initiations is not of the most flippant character? Is not this part of the evening's exercises almost invariably looked upon as a nuisance to be got rid of as quickly as possible? Yes. Then the system in that respect is a complete failure.

Again, the business transacted is mostly of a childish nature; questions of order, form and ceremony. The wittiest speaker is the one listened to with keenest zest. As a rule little or no temperance work is done, and the moment when the vapid talk is declared to be at an end is hailed with delight. How any man or woman can listen for a large portion of an evening to such twaddle and hope to catch in it any inspiration that is to help on the temperance cause is beyond comprehension. Suppose, for instance, a drunkard is induced to seek reformation within the lodge. He takes the obligation, and then he sits down to listen to the "business." What a hollow farce it all seems to the poor fellow whose whole being is crying out for some help that will keep him from falling back again into the hell of drunkenness! I well remember the last temperance lodge I attended. It was exactly of the kind I have been trying to describe. For months I sat there without hearing one single earnest temperance utterance. I was a stranger, and could not do much towards rectifying the evil; and so, after firing a parting shot, I left the lodge, thoroughly convinced that it failed to furnish me with any assistance as a temperance worker.

Now, if it is true that the portion of lodge-work we have glanced at is a failure in so far as the advancement of temperance principles is concerned, how emphatically is it the case with regard to the social aspect of the question. In fact the lodges as now carried on, are notoriously places of social enjoyment. A large number of young people of both sexes assemble ostensibly to labor in the cause of temperance, but really to engage in a scene of hilarity pure and simple. The talk of the elders is simply endured while the "business" is under discussion, everything being slurred and hastened, so that, at the earliest possible moment the rope may be introduced and the "social circle" formed. To prove that the temperance lodge system is a failure, let us suppose the social element withdrawn—that element, I mean, which is as truly outside of temperance work as would be a garden party, or any other form of social amusement. Why, there would be nothing at all left, and the whole system would fall to the ground.

It may be asked, Is not the evident popularity of the lodge-system proof of its success? No. Popularity never was and never can be regarded by the well-informed mind as a criterion of success in great moral enterprises. Look at the temperance work waiting accomplishment. The liquor traffic has to be met at every point by some influence potent enough to suppress it entirely, if possible, or at least materially loosen its grasp of the public throat; temperance sentiment, sound and healthy, has to be created for the purpose of supporting temperance legislation, and all over the land are to be found inebriates crying out for help. Is the temperance lodge system doing this work? I believe the real Christian sentiment of the country would sanction the assertion that, most decidedly it is not.—W. T. Cox, in The Free Methodist.

*It is a great error on the part of some Masons to suppose that the ark of the covenant is a symbol peculiarly appropriate to Royal Arch Masonry. On the contrary the true ark is to be found only in Ancient Craft Masonry, whose foundation is the old temple, and it has always constituted a part of the coat of arms of the institution. The ark used in Royal Arch Masonry is simply a representation of the imitative ark which was substituted for the original one in the second temple. The Royal Arch degree has nothing to do with the true Masonic ark of the covenant.

Reform News.

Anti-Masons of Michigan!

Please bear in mind that the second anniversary of your State society opposed to secret orders is to be held at Hastings, Barry Co., on the 6th, 7th and 8th of December. Are you making preparation to attend or at least to be represented. County or town associations, and all Christian churches in sympathy with our reform are invoted to send delegates. Friends! Lay aside for three days your home burdens and cares, and come to Hastings, and let us take counsel together; look one another in the face; talk over the past and plan for the future. The excitement of the Presidential campaign will then be over, and the chance for a clear out-look will be better than for months past. Come with a firm purpose, and a fuller consecration to the work of overthrowing the despotism of the lodge. This is the proper time to inaugurate a new departure in our crusade against secretism. To falter now is to give encouragement to the enemy, discourage our friends, and lose all we have gained. Once more unto the breach, dear friends!

J. L. Barlow.

—Of the lectures and expositions in Minnesota during the last fortnight, we had received but slight reports in time for this issue. Moses Gallup writes of a meeting Nov. 9th, where Past Master Ronayne was met by a crowded house and performed his work with his usual ability and to the great satisfaction of the friends of the reform.

Annual Meeting of the N. E. Penn. Christian Association.

This body convened by appointment in Fell Hall, Waverly, Penn., Nov. 1st, at one o'clock P. M. Elder S. E. Miller, President, in the chair, opened by prayer, singing and short address by the President, when the Corresponding Secretary, in the absence of Bro. Raynor, Recording Secretary, was called to read the constitution of the Association. Committees were then appointed to revise the constitution and name officers for the ensuing year. The following were recommended and elected:

President — Elder S. E. Miller, Clifford, Pennsylvania.

Vice-Presidents — J. C. Miles, Dalton; Elder A. L. Post, Montrose; Dea. M. L. Miller, Pecksville; S. A. Reynolds, Waverley; Dea. Joseph Powers, Harford; S. C. Stephens, Clifford; Davis H. Seamans, Factoryville; Geo. Cobb, Factoryville; Simon Besecker, Waverly; Dea. Stephen Parker, Waverly; Wm. B. Bertels, Wilkesbarre; Augustus Marx, Benton; O. N. Smith, Benton; R. P. Parker, Clarks Green; Clark Lowry, Green Grove.

Recording Secretary — James W. Raynor, Montrose.

Corresponding Secretary — Nathan Callender, Green Grove.

Treasurer — Newell Callender, Dalton.

The day sessions were occupied in discussions and free conference. The evenings were occupied by Elders Post and Miller, by request. The addresses were conclusive and telling.

One circumstance imparted interest to the occasion. The Masonic fraternity had their representatives present on both evenings, and they were truly and duly prepared and qualified for the occasion, only Esq. ——— seemed to be over inspired, especially on the second night of the meeting. He could not appreciate the terrible castigation dealt on him by his antagonists Post and Miller. Whether the other Masonic worshipful had his sensorium under the high pressure of lodge refreshments was not so apparent, as he violated his Masonic obligation but once and did not deem it wise to peep a second time. Both of these dignitaries have been Masters of the Waverly lodge and I am informed that the latter is now the W. M. of the most ancient, honorable and sublime cabletodium.

One of these representatives who did the talking is the Masonic sounding board for the Waverly pulpits, save one, that of our able and outspoken young brother of the Free Methodist Church. In trumpet notes that sounding board echoed to our ears again and again, "Let the Masons alone," "Preach the gospel," etc., etc.; the stereotyped pretext of a time-serving pulpit and press. These are two injunctions which we intend to obey. We shall let Masonry alone, as we always have, and advise all men to do the same; to keep aloof from it as a deadly viper to our moral being and the grand antagonist to Jesus and his gospel, which we mean ever to sound out to the lost as the remedy to lift men up from false hopes and false systems of religion, hoodwinks, and cable tows, profane oaths and savage penalties, to worship and serve the living God, the Father of Jesus whom Masonry rejects. Yes, ye blood-bought sons of a fallen race; let Masonry, that seedling conspiracy, germinated in hell's central hot-bed, alone, with its soul-poisoning brood. Let no drop of lodge poison enter your system by any voluntary contact with any branch of that vile "system." "Let Masonry alone and preach the gospel."

As stated before, there is in the town of Waverly at least one pulpit which will speak out on all the moral issues. Let all of God's people pray that the representative of that pulpit, Bro. Adams, may be held up by the grace of God and his people blessed and greatly multiplied. At the late hour of this meeting we agreed upon the following, to be supported as candidates of the American ticket for the county of Luzerne:

Congress — R. P. Parker.

Prothonotary — S. N. Callender.

Clerk of the Court — Augustus Marx.

Jury Com.—E. H. Atherton.

Senator — H. D. Walker.

Representative — J. G. Fell.

Truly yours,

Nathan Callender.

Minutes of the Christian Convention held at Sandy Lake, Pa.

The first anniversary of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Association convened at this place, according to appointment at 7 o'clock, P. M., Tuesday, Oct. 31. Convention opened with prayer by Dr. A. M. Milligan, after which Scripture reading and devotional exercises for one half hour. Rev. Mr. Kerr, the secretary, being absent, Rev. John Case of Erie county was elected secretary pro. tem. In consequence of the failure of Dr. Collins to be present, by motion Rev. Dr. A. M. Milligan was invited to address the meeting, and took for his subject, "Secret Societies a Conspiracy," against the individual, the family, the church and the state. Session closed with prayer by Rev. J. M. French.

Wednesday morning, 9:30 o'clock. Meeting opened by president, Dr. Milligan. On the election of officers Rev. E. Small was elected president; Rev. J. M. French, secretary.

Messrs. Spear, Case and Westlake were appointed a committee on enrollment.

Messrs. Milligan, Hampey and Baird were appointed a committee on resolutions.

By common consent it was agreed to spend some time in ten minute speeches bearing on the general object of the convention. Messrs. Hampey, French, McGee, Baird, McBride, Brown, Case and Spear, made brief speeches.

A letter was received and read from Dr. G. C. Vincent, editor of the Progressive Citizen, Brookville, Jefferson Co., expressing hearty sympathy with the convention, and giving a number of cogent arguments against secret oath-bound societies. The secretary was directed to send it to the Christian Cynosure Chicago, for publication.

Two P. M. Convention met and engaged in devotional exercises. The committee on resolutions reported,

The resolutions were considered and after a pretty full discussion were adopted unanimously. A dispatch was received from Dr. J. R. W. Sloane, of Allegheny, who was to make the address of to-morrow evening, that owing to a pressure of business he could not be present. Much regret was expressed at hearing this. A motion passed unanimously inviting Dr. Milligan to address us at this evening's session on the ordinance of the oath.

Seven p. m. Exercises opened with reading the Scriptures and prayer. The address on the oath was delivered to a full house. It was clear and convincing, scriptural in argument and courteous in manner, and received the commendation as well as the close attention of the large audience. It was a master effort of a master mind and did great credit to its author. While showing the nature, design and proper limitations of the oath, it was a powerful argument against its profanation in the lodge room. After the address a good collection was taken to defray current expenses.

Thursday, 9:30 A. M. On the assembling of the convention the President read and commented on the 19th Psalm, and devotional exercises over miscellaneous business was transacted. Pending a motion to pledge the convention to the American party ticket, took recess till 2 P. M. Resumed discussion of the motion. On this there was a diversity of opinion, some taking the ground that the perils of the country from a "solid South," etc., required every patriotic citizen to support the Republican ticket.

A vote of thanks was tendered the Mercer Dispatch and other papers which published the minutes of our meeting last year at Mercer. These and other papers were requested to publish the minutes of this anniversary.

Seven P. M. Devotional exercises thirty minutes. A committee of three was appointed to arrange time and place of holding the next anniversary. Rev. J. Spear was chosen Corresponding Secretary. Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, made the closing address to a good audience. His speech was well received. Had it been known certainly he was coming, the audience would have been much larger. The convention was a success. The weather was fine and the spirit of the meeting excellent.

Bro. Hinman's Work in Wisconsin.

Ironton, Wis., Nov. 16, '76.

Dear Bro. K.:—I am again with old friends in my former field of labor. I have now spent three weeks in this county, during which time I have delivered twelve lectures, preached four sermons, and attended two prayer-meetings. The congregations have been generally good and I trust that much has been accomplished in awaking public sentiment to the evils of secretism. I wish to express my especial obligations to Prof. J. W. Wood and Mr. Albert Watkins of Baraboo, the latter for attendance and faithful testimony as a seceding Mason.

I will briefly notice a few instances of the effects of this discussion on the minds of the people. At Fairfield I told how a man is made a Mason to a full audience, and after I had finished, Bro. Watkins, who is well known in that community, confirmed what I said. A member of the Baraboo lodge, who was present, said what had been described was probably the Thousand and One," and that he presumed that Mr. Watkins had been duped into a lodge of that order and been made to believe it was Masonry. Mr. W. replied that he had visited the Baraboo lodge and had seen a candidate initiated in the manner described. This convinced the audience of the truth of what he said, and that the other man was a liar.

At Excelsior I spoke in the Methodist church to a full house and several Masons, who were members of the church, made brief replies. One of them said that the grip of the lion's paw was a grange grip, and I inquired how he, being a granger, dared reveal its secrets. Another said that no man could be a Mason who was not a Christian, and that every Mason had to profess faith in Christ; but this was shown to be so utterly false that he could not maintain it. Another who had been a Mason for fifty years said that some things that had been said were true, but other things he had not seen in the lodge; but when pressed to tell whether the obligations and penalties were correctly given, he refused to tell. His silence was held to be sufficient evidence of the truth of what had been said.

At Baraboo I lectured in the Baptist church. A notice of the lecture was read in all the churches except the Congregationalist. The pastor of this church (to which I formerly preached) though not a Mason, is evidently in sympathy with them. He thinks it a very great wrong for any man who has been a Mason to reveal Masonry, but then he fails to see that there is any wrong in his hiring himself to preach evangelical doctrine and preaching Unitarianism in its place. He seems to see no wrong in using the sermon of a prominent Unitarian minister of Chicago, preached against Mr. Moody, and to do this in a way to greatly grieve and offend the church to which he ministers. Surely some mens' moral capacities are of the strangest kind. At our meeting in the Baptist church, besides the pastor, we had the pastor of the M. E. church, who is reported to be a high Mason. He listened with excellent attention, and I think was not displeased that the truth was plainly told. Messrs. R. J. and J. W. Wood made excellent and timely remarks, and on the whole the meeting was a success.

At Reedsburgh I spoke in the Congregational church. The pastor refused to read a notice or to attend; he says he is not a Mason, but he evidently fears the lodge more than he fears the Lord. At no place in Wisconsin have I met a worse reception than in Reedsburgh, and nowhere have I deserved a better, having preached for the Congregational church there a year without salary and left them in a much better state than I had found them. But God will bring my work into judgment. Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

THE EXPOSITIONS AT TIPTON, IOWA.

TIPTON, Nov. 9, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Doubtless the readers of the Cynosure will be glad to hear from this part of the country in regard to the Anti-masonic reform. Having engaged Edmond Ronayne to give an exposition of Freemasonry here, we hired the city hall, and at the time appointed, being the 30th of October, there was a very respectable audience present, both as to number and reputation. We organized by electing Rev. Wm. Lee chairman, and after stating the object of the meeting, he led off in singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name;" after which the Rev. Thomas Mehocs offered a short prayer. Mr. Ronayne was then introduced to the audience by the chairman. From marked indications of attention and interest, the audience soon became satisfied that Mr. Ronayne was not an ordinary workman, but was master of the situation. There were several Masons present each evening. The best of order prevailed throughout, at the time of meeting, and after adjournment. We would not attempt to give a description of the very able manner in which Mr. Ronayne executes the work of exposing Freemasonry; but say to any who may not have heard him, procure his services if possible, and we think you will be satisfied. We think fruit of the present effort will be gathered after many days. We intend to keep the ball rolling, and make an effort to send a strong delegation from this county to the meeting of the State Association in April next. Hope every county in the State may do the same. By order of Committee on report.

SHARP SHOOTING ON OUT-POSTS.

SPRINGERTON, Ill.,
Nov. 13, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I went to a school-house in this (White) county Saturday eve, 11th inst., and lectured on Freemasonry to a respectable and very attentive audience. I spoke for two and a half hours, giving the outline of killing Master Hiram Abiff, encountering the three ruffians at the different corners of the school-house; then buried and afterward raised him from the dead upon the five points of Masonry. So far as I could tell every body in the house fully enjoyed it except one poor cable-towed slave of secrecy. Here I sold a copy of the expose of the Grange to a granger, and by the way a very fine man who took me home with him and treated me very kindly. I asked this gentleman if their yearly pass-word for last year was "Forgive;" he answered yes. He then commenced reading in this expose and soon came to password for 1874, "Farming." I asked him if that was correct; he answered it was. Of course this is a fair acknowledgement of the whole thing. This good man will doubtless very soon turn his back upon the grange humbug. This good family warmly solicited me to call on them again in four weeks from this, which thing I shall do the Lord willing.

Eight votes here for Walker and Kirkpatrick; we could have got more had we thought proper to make a strong effort. Let us begin now for next campaign.

Yours on the war path,

JAS. SPRINGER.

Correspondence.

OUR CENTENNIAL LETTER.

It is the old Masonic book I named in my last letter. It was published about 1800—its latest date concerning the lodges being 1797. The remarkable fact in it is this: Its prayer has the name of Christ fully acknowledged. Why this difference between the early book of Masonry and the present standard works on it? May it not be that it was then the form best suited to catch enquirers? None of any other faith could be members with such a form of prayer—but again, when the hymns or songs are examined we are startled by certain language which can be taken as perfect proof that religious men of any faith could not sing some of the verses. They are so gross that no modern book could serve Freemasonry by their republication. This old book has a list of Grand Masters from 1722 to 1797.

An Episcopal Rev. of Ohio got tracts and assured me that the church "can do nothing with Masons and Odd-fellows, for they think their system better than Christ's religion!"

A Rev. M. E. of N. Y. had no strong feeling on the subject, but church members were better out of Masonry.

From Ohio comes a sharper report. "My father was a Mason and didn't attend after the Morgan exposure. But he told me that if the men in Masonry were not better than the system itself they ought all to be hung!"

Similar in character is the report of a gentleman from the West. Knows "where a Mason got another one free from a case of murder because appealed to on the five points of Masonry; and the same fellow afterwards burned a house where a life was lost in it. Thus a second murder was caused. The insurance was disputed and all the facts came out."

You are acquainted with Rev. Wm. Beekman of Byron, Ill., a sincere friend of the cause, who met Mr. Stoddard here. Had calls also from Rev. Mr. Densmore of Kansas Rev Joseph Beggs, Fall of Schuylcill, Jas. Wood of Tonawanda, &c. &c.

Nov. 4th.—I fear I shall not be able to overtake the details of my record of worthy names and interesting anecdotes and conversations. I must, however, attempt to give some of them and trust that those whom I may omit may exercise that charity which covers a multitude of sins.

The Rev. Mr. Stoddard, so well and favorably known in connection with the great cause of anti-secretism called here and spent two days, seeing what he could and went on to Vineland. His perfect knowledge of the various delusive and insidious arguments, or rather plausibilities in use among secretists of all shades of darkness makes his services appreciated wherever the friends of the cause can avail themselves of them. It may grieve the egg-pelters to know that his coat has not a single stain upon it! Why was the proof of their skill not sent here for exhibition? only think of it. What testimony to the pluck and enterprise of the Masonic egg-pelters of the Great West it would have been.

One Mason was smart enough to get hot too soon; so that scarcely a word could be got in. "Why, sir, King Solomon was a Mason, and John and the Apostles were Masons." "How do you know all that? the Bible don't say so." "Any one that don't know that King Solomon was a Mason knows nothing about Masonry." So it would appear his lesson had been well learned. The Bible gives not enough knowledge about Solomon and the apostles. Freemasonry has the records locked up, and so what a mistake it is to circulate the present Bible in so many languages without the precious inventions of the lodge.

But a contrast is here. A candid Mason, who, after fifteen years of Masonry joined a church last winter. He had never thought much about the character of Masonry, but would consider the subject in the light of the Scriptures, and hoped for strength to do his duty. He would try. A strange feature here is that his minister is a Mason also. If consulted what good result can be expected? This suggests another anomaly recently brought to light.

November 7th.

As I may not again address you while in this city, I will report a few more of the manifestations which your magical stand has called forth from the denizens of the lodge as they endeavored to pass its charmed circle. Not of them only, however, for of them the record would be too sombre, if not melancholy. Gaily though they flaunt their flag, a gaiety reminding one of the cheerful laughter of the old time slaves, a laughter begotten of fear, or to commend them to their owners. It is therefore of the friends of anti-secretism that we may also speak, as brave men for the truth so unpopular in some parts of the country, but who shrink not from maintaining it against popular error. Of such friends I do not care always to record the names for that might expose their interests to damage. There are men who are willing to be known as anti-secretists, who prefer their own way of coming out as such. And there are men to whom the public denunciation of the system is so new, that time is necessary to mature their purpose and shape their course. The slower growth of our sentiments in such minds will render them the tougher when matured.

James M. Russell, of Connecticut, known to Ronayne and others of you, was here—a warm friend. A Presbyterian Rev. of this city, whom I had not seen before, heartily approves of our movement; so the Rev. C. D. Brooks, Free Methodist, of the State of New York, has done for years. I have also met Rev. J. Burnett, Baptist, who attended the venerable Bernard in his last illness, which ended on the 11th of July last. A Disciple, from St. Paul, Minn., is also a hearty friend. A young man "highest" in doctrine in the Episcopal church, although a member of a college secret society, expressed thorough disapproval and ordered some books. We agreed that Christ ought to be the Master of the soul, and he cordially expressed his pleasure at our having met. M. R. Bair, of the U. B., Ill., and others in Kansas, etc., have got tracts to distribute at their homes. A Baptist lady, Miss Kendall, is also a willing worker in this good cause.

A Rev. of the Reformed Dutch church is a Mason, but the mutilation of the New Testament, 2 Thess. 3: 6, etc., appeared a new idea to him. May his eyes be opened to this Masonic outrage on the name of Christ and his authority. So also with a Rev. Episcopal, whom I thought honestly desired to know the truth. A Rev. M. E. also professed to have the same desire. An Adventist called—a strong Anti-mason. A lawyer gave his card—continues to pay his lodge-fees, but disapproves of Freemasonry now, and "will think it over" whether to withdraw or not. Next come two men, one silent, the other talkative. He justified keeping up Judaism in Masonry and mutilating New Testament Scripture to keep Jews as members. Yet I fancied that he acted rather as attorney for his silent friend than from conviction, and, if a Mason, was freer on the subject of speech than they generally are. Rev. N. B. Grubb, of this city, who is one of your subscribers, and A. K. Dibble, of Mich., another, called and gave encouragement. Rev. A. P. Graves thought no gentleman, much less any Christian, would take such oaths as Masonry imposes.

It was interesting to see the effect upon four lads who got tracts and talk. "Against Masonry! Why! it's often spoken of at our table!" One remained awhile and asked information, while the flush told that it was not without some effort. Two Presbyterian ladies heard their minister, of this city, praise Masonry for doing what the churches neglected, and they did not think he was a Mason, he is "such a nice man." A Royal Arch Masonic Baptist declined to give his name or State. A young man was certain that if his professor could be heard in defense of secret societies, he could demolish all the arguments in your publications. Yes, sir! he had heard him use unanswerable arguments in their favor. I was pleased to meet three young men, one of whom intended to join the Masons, and hope his intention has been changed. But danger lurks near such young men, if they meet such an one as the cool, polite, though, as it appeared to me, unscrupulous defender of Masonry who was found in a Rev. M. E., who gave name and residence. After I found it impossible for me to restate, without contradiction, any of his assertions, I asked him to write down his assertions. But he would not—his word was enough. "Prayer, in the name of Christ, is according to Masonic law." "I would be glad to have that statement in writing," said I, "for I think some of your Masonic brethren don't admit it." "I never made prayer in the lodge without using the name of Christ." "I did not say, sir, Masonic law." "Yes, sir, you did," said a bystander. "I have lectured on Masonry, and am ready to meet you in public debate." But, although assured that we had men willing to meet him if he would write that challenge, he declined for the time, but reasserted his willingness to be the champion of Masonry when it could be arranged. We fancy him rather as its Don Quixote. The oath in Lev. 5: 4, 5, "Oh, see the connexion!" The mutilation, O, that was necessary for the way it was used! Alas, for such blind leaders who can preach so through the week and imagine they preach Christ on Sunday. A Lutheran student, whose name, etc., I have, who was listening, spoke with quiet earnestness, "I think no man can be a Christian who is a Mason." A lady and gentleman handled tracts. "Opposed to Masons," said she with a cheerful smile, and looked at him. He laid them down as he heard, "Freemasonry a religion; if so, not the Christian religion; therefore no Christian should support it." "I'm a high officer in it, sir," and walked off. Of course your agent ought to have begged pardon or apologized, but he thought it against the rules of the Anti's in such a case. A Catholic priest named an English work on Masonry as a good one. Perhaps it can be got here, although, of course, our standpoint is different from theirs. It has amused me to find how anxious some Masons have been to know of what belief your agent is, and he has had all extremes applied to him while all he aimed at here is to sit at the Master's feet for instruction, and to tell some of it to the Masons and others as they pass along. One Rev. secretist, not a Mason, however, began in defense and ended in cordially grasping my hand and bidding our cause God speed. Others being present, I didn't get his name.

The last I shall name at present is a Canada Mason, who, with others, were defending the craft, when brother Stone fortunately made his appearance again, and gently placing some hard facts upon an American defender, bore him to the ground. The Canuck continued the defense a short time and told me that he had not attended the lodge for several or seven years, although he paid his dues regularly. As he was a Presbyterian, I gave him "Armstrong's Work of Darkness," which he accepted, but threw down some money and ran off. He had taken only three degrees, and we may hope that he may follow the good example of his Presbyterian brother the Rev. Wm. Armstrong, a Mason of twenty-one degrees.

Mr. Blank is here, and lastly our hero of a hundred fights in this cause, Prof. C. A. Blanchard.

The Lodge Furnishes the best Argument against Itself.

DAYTON, Va., Oct. 31, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Doubtless it is to the young men of our country that you, as more aged workers must soon look to find ready hands, strong arms and willing hearts to carry on the work which has been so gloriously begun. Was it not to prevent our being entangled in the meshes of secretism and diabolism that the flag of perpetual warfare against all oath-bound societies was raised? If so, then may we not even now put on the armor, enter the ranks and learn to fight for true liberty while there are such competent leaders in the field? While it is true that we do not know so much about the "arts, parts and points" of the "Ancient Free and Accepted Order," yet we, or at least some of us, are beginning to have abundant opportunity to learn of their dark workings, both by observation and experience. I have read several of your "exposes" and the question naturally arose, Can all this be true? That men professing intelligence should engage in such foolishness seemed too absurd for belief and acting under this conviction, I must confess that I was inclined to consider that a false coloring was given to secret institutions by those who were trying to be revenged for some supposed mistreatment. But can that be said now? No, sir. Facts declare those statements to be true. Who would want a better argument for the correctness of the statements of the lecturers now in the field than that the Masons "egged them." If they were the statements of men who did not know, it seems to me that the Masons could have a vast amount of fun over their ignorance, and would be inclined to pity all such, rather than call them "perjured wretches." Another thing, that officer who "overdid" his duty at the Centennial by forbidding the sale of books and tracts, and even went so far as to close up the case, could not have convinced me sooner that Mr. Hodge was dealing out destruction to Freemasonry, if he had sworn to it. Men seldom run from that which they do not fear, and never oppose that which can never injure them. And so in this case. If the officers of the Exposition had felt that they were receiving no injury at the hands of your agent he would never have been molested; but as it is, they have acted, and the outside world will put their own construction on the action. It cannot be otherwise.

But now my own personal dealings with Masons reveal to me the fact that they are not only opposed to progress in the true sense of the word, but also work against those who are laboring in that direction. A few words of my own experience. Some two months ago I came to this place to start a High School. The first question about me was, to what church I belonged. The answer was, the U. B. church. "O, well then, he is opposed to us, and he can't stay here." Since that time everything has been done against me that could be done. The most unlikely reports have been circulated in order to keep students away. Such epithets as "nigger," "black republican," etc., have become so common that they do not effect me or any one else any more, except those that make use of them. The threat to drag me from my school-room has been frequently made, and, indeed, they have gone so far as to come to my room with that intention. The presence of a number of students of average muscle settled that question, other things assisting. It was also planned one day, by the same party, to break the lock of my school-house door and put on another while I was gone to my boarding-house. They had the lock procured and the man hired to put it on, but the plot was discovered and its execution arrested. Thus the opposition goes on. How long it will last is hard to tell. And is this Freemasonry? The institution that desires so much light, mystic light, and yet loves darkness so well. To think that men who wish to be respected in society have such an imperfect sense of honor, is truly remarkable. But their sins will find them out sooner or later, and the stigma will forever remain.

Go on in this noble work, and may the Lord bless you. We, the young men, the boys of America, are in danger, and need a guiding light—not Masonic!

Yours, respectfully,

J. N. FRIES.

Does not Meet the Case.

DECATUR, Iowa, Nov. 10, 1876.

FRIEND K:—I hope that you will publish these things for the good of the U. B. Church.

Rev. T. D. Adams in his issue of the Christian Expositor of Oct. 12, 1876, says of secrecy:

The last session of the West Des Moines Conference discussed the question quite fully and freely. It was brought on by the introduction of the following resolutions by the committee on Moral Reform, which consisted of Revs. Geo. Miller and T. D. Adams; and an amendment offered by Rev. J. F. Roberts. to which reference is made in Bro. Roberts' article in our last issue.

Read the resolutions carefully and then determine whether they are disloyal. Of course they are imperfectly drawn up and are not what are necessary, yet they tend, at least, toward a solution of this question.

Resolved, That our delegates to the next General Conference be instructed to use their influence to secure an amendment to our Law on secret societies as follows:

Instead of Sec. 22, insert the following:

No combination or association with any secret society shall be permitted, save where the principles of such society are so clearly defined as to leave no doubt that they are in accord with the Gospel of Christ and that any secret society setting up a system instead of the Bible as its chief rule of action, is to be condemned as in league with darkness.

2. No person shall be permitted to become a member of any of our societies when he is known to be a member of such secret society as described in the foregoing.

3. Any of our members becoming connected with a secret society, such as described in this section, shall be tried as for any immorality.

The resolutions did not pass. The Conference voted them down; only one voting for their passage. It was argued that they let the "bars down."

The amendment referred to in the above reads thus:

"But nothing in the above clause shall be so construed as to bar the class from being the only power to expel members from the class."

J. F. Roberts says: "This motion was seconded by Rev. T. D. Adams, and on the vote, to my surprise each of our former delegates and all our presiding elders and a majority of the members of the annual conference voted against it.

Rev. R. Loggan of Lane University, Lecompton, Kan., in his answer to J. F. Robert's rantings about high churchism in the U. B. Church, says of the above resolution and amendment: "Now, admit this pernicious principle into our church policy, and the ancient landmarks could be easily removed at least so far as the civil government would allow them to be removed. For instance, any class could vote Freemasons, Odd-fellows or grangers into the church, and in Utah, they could vote any polygamist in, even vote him a recommendation for license to preach. They could vote to keep in anything that a majority of a class might be in favor of, independent of the general sentiment of the whole church." Let the secrecy law be enforced as it is.

ELZA OSBORN.

OUR MAIL.

Rev. J. H. Mabbott, of Milton Junction, Rock county, Wisconsin, writes:

"We hope that Wisconsin will be more thoroughly organized and a State lecturer provided. The people want light."

J. S. Rice, North Pownal, Me., sends for tracts and writes:

"I am sorry that I did not send for a lot of them before; they are better than I expected."

Now that the presidential election is over let us work for the politics of our country by enlightening those in our respective localities.

Rev. John Miller, Wauseon, Fulton county, Ohio, writes:

"Secretists or modificationists are preparing to make a strong effort at our General Conference next May. I hope we shall have the sympathy of all friends opposed to the 'dark orders.'"

Geo Geddes, Lockport, Will county, Illinois, writes:

"I am an old subscriber to your paper and intend to be as long as I live. I can't do without it."

W. J. Knapper, Windham, writes:

"I hope to be able to take the Cynosure as long as I live, as I know of no other paper that suits me as well."

E. Darling, Point Creek, Washtenaw county, Michigan, writes:

"For seven years I have taken the Cynosure and have but half a dozen numbers on hand. I have made it a rule to read the good paper and send and carry and give them away. In this locality we need some horrid Masonic tragedy to make the good people see. Truly the god of this world has blinded them."

Elder Isaac Jackson, of Harrison, Maine, writes.

"The Odd-fellows take the lead here. They go into the lodge like sheep to the slaughter. There was a great gathering here last Friday. Many extol them to the clouds. There are in Bridgton and Harrison ministers and deacons, almost all of whom have gone into the lodge. I am looking forward to the time when they will fall like Dagon before the ark."

C.H. Welsh, Logan county, Ohio, writes:

"Our cause is improving here. I find many warm friends even in the secret fraternities. I have found two Masons of twelve years' standing in the lodge who tell me that the exposition in the Cynosure is true."

H. Johnson, Delavan, Wisconsin, writes:

"One of our brethren told me he had subscribed for the Cynosure; that he had received two papers and they were worth all he paid for the quarter."

A friend in Iowa writes:

"I have not taken our church paper, the N. C. Advocate, for over two years, because it is ruled by the lodge."

A. S. Bartholemew, Lima, Ohio, writes:

"The lodge is doomed, for the curse of heaven rests upon it."

John Motter, Atlanta, Rice county, Kansas, writes:

"In the last two years I have traveled from Wisconsin to Kansas, through part of Iowa, and turned east at Albia Iowa, for Carroll county, Indiana. Passing through Illinois I found many friends of our cause, or rather God's cause. I found a vast amount of indifference on the subject of secret societies, and ignorance of the same, though a general feeling against Masonry. Here in Rice county there are some staunch men for the reform. We welcome all Anti-masons to our county, where land is cheap and good. Any one wishing particulars can obtain them from me."

S. J. O. Sterrett, Library, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, writes:

"My grandfather was at one time a member in good and regular standing in the I. O. O. F., but after a few years' trial of the working of the order gave it up as to use his own words, 'all moonshine.'"

Joshua Simpson, Spring Glen, Sauk county, Wisconsin, writes:

"My boys want the 'Broken Seal.'"

Everybody's boys would want it if they realized what it contains.

Isaac J. Gilbert, Derby, Connecticut, writes:

"I find tracts are the most efficient way to get at the people. I have some interesting times giving out tracts and find the people read them earnestly."

A gentleman from South Bend, Indiana, writes:

"I am a first degree member of the Odd-fellows and I never found anything to induce me to go higher."

C. Conklin, Mansfield, Ohio, asks if the judge who tried Sullivan is a Roman Catholic. He does not profess any religion.

G. L. Benton, Morley, New York, writes:

"The most of our people being Republicans, with Gates, Preston, Hart and others, are afraid we will give Tilden the presidential chair if we 'vote as we pray.' Surely I hope such a calamity will by our Lord be withheld unless it be for his glory. But we as reformers must strike when the blow will be felt, or our petitions, prayers and tears will be disregarded, when we call for reform in politics, as in the past. It costs severe measures sometimes to bring the proud to penitence. Lord bring the Republican party to the light, at whatever cost, is my prayer."

R. D. Nichols now at Williamstown, Orange county, Vermont, writes:

"I find old acquaintences here whom I knew as stand-bys in the church are not members of the secret orders with the exception of some of the minor ones, which for the sake of temperance, or on account of supposed good to the humble station of farmers, some have joined."

R. B. Dawson, Baxter, Jasper county, Iowa, writes:

"The people here are not only willing to read Anti-masonic literature, but as a general thing they are glad to get it. I find sectarian prejudice as much in the way in canvassing for the Cynosure as anything else. As a general thing I find those belonging to the old time-serving churches afraid to say or do much. Some of the Freemasons act as if they do not care if Masonry is exposed. One acknowledged to me that he never was in a Masonic or Odd-fellow's lodge but what he was ashamed of it. I spoke to another in regard to their blasphemous oaths and he said he was afraid it was so."

Peter Wood, Marine City, Michigan, writes:

"I could not harbor the thought for one moment of discontinuing the Cynosure."

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wisconsin, writes:

"My soul is stirred to do something, though as yet it is impossible to aid much in this all-important reform—this God-inspired work. I am praying for this lodge-breaking reform, and every one of its friends are my friends, and God will overrule these persistent and prayerful efforts for his glory and man's deliverance."

J. Hunter, Bloomington, Illinois, writes:

"God bless the Cynosure and hasten the reform it advocates when Masonry will hide its deformed face and rid the church of my choice, the Methodist Episcopal, of the worst enemy of vital godliness, Freemasonry."

Mrs. Wilson Milligan, of Portland, Indiana, writes:

"My husband is in feeble health, and it seems as if every one had stopped work entirely. He thinks that nothing but Divine influence can arouse the people here."

The Lord always gives the increase, and sometimes he finds it necessary to show us our own worthlessless before he can work.

William Hough, New Garden, Indiana, writes:

"I have been opposed to oath-bound lodges for fifty-five years. I am truly thine for the cause of truth and the American party and temperance, and much opposed to the use of tobacco, for I think that no one has a right to poison the air for me to breathe; in fact it is wrong to fool away their money and poison themselves, to say nothing of other people who wish to live free of such filth. Oh! just to think of the amount of money that is spent for that which is much worse than nothing, and the great good that could be done with this worse than wasted money. I can but say, shame on the American people!"

Christian reader, do you use tobacco? If so, we say to you in the words of Paul, "Dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—2 Cor. vii 1.

P. W. Taintor, in a letter written awhile since, gives a good illustration of the way the truth is working against the lodge:

"The ax is laid at the root and the branches are withering. But one member has been received in the lodge at Murrayville, Illinois, for more than three years. Seventy members can scarcely raise a tallow candle for light. The best light they have is Elder David Bernard's; that I let a member have at cost over a year ago. He has read it and passed it around to others. I heard from it yesterday. Saw a Mason who had read it and is satisfied with Masonry. They cannot manage him."

LESSON XLIX.—DEC. 3, 1876.—THE GENTILES RECEIVED.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts x. 34-48. Commit verses 44-48.

34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

35 But in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:)

37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

39 And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly:

41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43 To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

44 While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

We are Witnesses, v 39.—Luke 24: 48; Acts 1; 8; 1 Cor. 15: 1-8.

The Holy Ghost fell on them, v. 44.—John 14: 15-26; Luke 24: 49; Acts 2: 1-21; 4: 31; 8: 14-23; 9: 31; 11: 15-18; 19: 1-7.

The old prophets declared in a very particular manner the calling of the Gentiles. Jacob foretold that when Shiloh or the Messiah should come, to him should the gathering of the people be; that is, the Gentiles should yield obedience to Christ and acknowledge him for their Lord and Savior. And how sincerely and heartily the ancient and godly Jews desired the conversion of the Gentiles may appear from the prayer which Solomon addresses to God after the dedication of the temple, 1 Ki. 8: 41-43.—Cruden.

—None, however unpromising, are to be left out in the gospel ministration—Christ's words were "to every creature" and in all nations. The descent of the Spirit on those Gentile converts was a matter of astonishment to the Jews. Spiritual pride and ignorance of this sort will always be rebuked.

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 23, 1876.

In all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

Andover and the Puritans.

Our readers, or most of them, know Andover Theological Seminary; the first, we believe, of its kind, and still retaining a sort of primacy among schools for making Protestant ministers. Its old faculty, Woods, Stuart, etc., took early ground for temperance, though Woods differed with Stuart on the use of wine. And when the churches around Boston had rules excluding Freemasons from fellowship, the Andover faculty published a manifesto against the lodge. But when Custom House and Court House in Boston were exponents of the slave power, Andover refused to permit a simple anti-slavery concert of prayer and inquiry among the students though the students who asked it were opposed to the no-government and no-Sabbath peculiarities of Mr. Garrison. The abolition struggle had to get on without and against its "School of the prophets" and "Hill of Zion," as Seminary Hill was called. The Bible "School of the Prophets," whose title the Andover school took, was a school where old prophets trained young ones to reprove political and religious corruption, such as slavery and spurious worships. By shrinking from this test and siding with Webster and the South against the Abolitionists, Andover neglected Christ in the "least" of his human brethren, and a cold chill and moral twilight settled on the place. Its graduates get their piety from their homes and the churches.

It is now eight or nine years since I got from the sainted President Finney the notes of his first great sermon against the secret orders at Oberlin and went with it to Andover, but the seminary publisher refused to print it. I wrote a request for a tract from the Boston Tract Society against secret societies, and every member of the Andover faculty signed it. Dr. Park said, so nearly as I can recollect his words, "I have witnessed with concern the return of the lodges to power. They, and other societies after their model, press terribly on the popular mind. I, myself, have felt the pressure. Within a fortnight, I have been solicited to join a literary society which has adopted the features of the lodge." Dr. Austin Phelps said to me with much warmth, "I am very thankful that you have taken up this question. It is one which must inevitably be met; and it is time." Prof. Thayer was out of town. All the rest, Park and Phelps included, cheerfully signed the request for the anti-secret tract.

I took that paper into a ministers' meeting in the "Old South" chapel, and of 30 or 40 ministers present, all approved of it but one or two. Nehemiah Adams and George W. Blagden made strong remarks against the lodge, and said if not met and excluded, there would be another Anti-masonic agitation like that about Morgan and "they would eventually split the churches."

The tract was written, approved by Dr. Kirk and Secretary Warren, and was printed in proof, but strangled in the large committee, and never published. The Tract Society, whose motto was, "Not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God;" has since expired.

The Andover Faculty have since refused to allow a lecture on secret societies to be given in the Seminary, and they stand for the lodge as they stood for the slave-power, while professedly opposed to both. They live on the income of the money of the churches, and have, since signing that paper, stood and looked on in utter silence while the sons of those churches are being sworn and swindled into the organized deism of the lodges.

Prof. Phelps, in the Congregationalist, is revising the "Amusements of the Puritans." He apologizes for the strictness of the Puritans, handsomely, on the ground that the "Book of Sports," "Morrice" and "Maypole dances" were devices of tyranny; but proposes to revise their code of amusements and adapt it to present tastes and times. We will endeavor to give our readers the result of his labors next week. Meantime as the Seminary has four bowling-alleys, purified of course, in its gymnasium, it is not likely to relapsed into asceticism for want of manly games for ministers, until the billiards of Princeton shall be played on the "Hill of Zion" at Andover.

Thanksgiving Day Hint.—Every friend of the reform and especially those who have contributed money or notes to the Publishing House fund, will read the letter of the General Agent with deep interest. Will not all, while they offer their praises and thanks to God next week, ask for a special blessing on this work that it may succeed and the Carpenter donation be secured.

Priests of Merida.

The National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, began a long session in the Palmer House in this city last week Wednesday. This body, curiously made up of a dozen or two persons and their wives, claims to represent some hundreds of thousands of farmers and their interests, and has met to plan for the protection of the same from hostile railroad companies, wholesale dealers, commission and grain merchants; for the increase of farm products; and the amelioration of the trials and inconveniences of indoor farm life. This is supposed to be their important business.

The National Grange has not been organized for a half dozen years more or less without indirectly establishing the belief that, like all the other sections of the scaly lodge system, it exists for other purposes entirely. If is not necessary to review the proofs which have appeared in multifarious forms in this paper; we wish now to bring up a new witness, a child which has been lawfully and obediently living in the grange family for years — Melrose Grange, Grundy count,, Iowa. This body adopted some resolutions, October 28th, of which the following is the sum:

1. There is "great dissatisfaction" through all the order at its central management and the more intelligent and conscientious are fast leaving it to its worst counsellors.

2. The National Grange has framed three higher degrees, "Patriarchs" and "Priests of Merida" (just what farmers need) of which "one of the order who has been admitted within the secret star chamber of the 6th and 7th degrees of the 'Priests of Merida' informs us that no member, no matter how much he may have done for the cause, how great his sacrifices or how well he may be qualified, can ever be an officer or member of the executive committee of the National Grange unless he be one of the 'Priests of Merida,'" and there has thus been "established a most intolerable monopoly," "a ring of self-constituted priests having by adroit management established themselves in office and power, and by levying exorbitant dues, thereby enabling themselves to take annual excursions of pleasure, with their wives, enjoying large salaries and fabulous traveling expenses and hotel bills."

The petition asks that these upper degrees be abolished and the "carbuncles, leeches and hangers-on" be made to stop their blood-sucking, and that the four lower degrees which existed originally alone and were common to all, be enriched in language and plot. They are flat enough to a mere cursory reader; it is either a compliment to the fidelity of the Patrons that they have endured to memorize the stuff and turn it over weekly year after year, or proof of weak intellect. Several other abuses are also mentioned.

No one will deny the right of petition to Melrose Grange, but that their paper will have any effect must be doubted. The subordinate granges may seem far enough from the Masonic system, but their head-waters mingle and run off the same water-shed. The National Grange was not framed for the purpose of helping the farmer, but make money by pretending to subserve his interests. On Saturday it resolved to set the whole grange machinery at work petitioning for a department of agriculture with a full cabinet officer at its head. Now the business of agriculture is of the first importance and should be encouraged in all lawful ways, but to organize a vast system of offices to be filled by grange favorites and eat more taxes is not the way to do it. If the present Bureau of Agriculture is ill managed it can be improved. At any rate as "a burnt child dreads fire," so have our farmers reason to dread the secret orders that invite their co-operation and support.

The State Conventions to be held in New Hampshire and Michigan next month are likely to suffer from the proximity of the election, the decision of which lingers through the weeks like an agony long drawn out. There is more need therefore that the friends in those States make special efforts to attend the Conventions in Center Strafford and Hastings. Farm work will by that time be laid by, and business will suffer less than at any other season of the year for three or four da s'. absence. Friends in Michigan, read the call of your lecturer, and rally once more to the standard of reform.

—A correspondent not long since made inquiries about the Waldensian colony in Misouri. His inquiries can probably be answered by writing to Rev. J. P. Solomon, White Oak Grove, Green Co., Mo., or Rev. D. K. Campbell, Joplin, Jasper Co., Mo. The former is pastor of one of the Waldensian churches, and is connected with Ozark Presbytery.

—General Secretary Stoddard is now in the East, lecturing and laboring as he has opportunity, for the Publishing House fund. Last week he spoke in Vineland, N. J., on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The meetings were well attended, quiet and successful. Much enthusiasm was awakened and old memories revived. The tumult aroused in 1871 by the Demetrius of the lodge and his companions through the Good Templars against Prof. C. A. Blanchard, is yet unforgotten, and the noble stand taken by some of the best citizens of the place at that time, will never be given up. Bro. S. found a Captain Tracy who authorizes his name to be placed on the seceder's list. He took one degree in Brooklyn, sweetened with a cost of $60, in cash.

—Mr. Hodge, whom many of our readers met at the Centennial, has returned with his book case, which will doubtless become a valuable heirloom in the family of our publishers. Mr. Hodge has not exhausted his fund of Centennial incidents and will continue that most interesting part of our correspondence for a time. He has left an enviable reputation behind him as we learn from letters, and both his work and manner of performing it, are spoken of in high terms.

From the General Agent.

WORK IN PHILADELPHIA—THE VINELAND MEETINGS AND FRIENDS—THE PUBLISHING HOUSE INTERESTS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16, 1876.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I am waiting in the Christian Statesman office for Rev. A. B. Hubbard, who by previous appointment is to spend part or all of the day with me in calling on friends of our cause in this city. I have already met with quite a number who desire to have measures taken to bring our reform work more prominently before the people, and especially to have Mr. Ronayne work the degrees in some public hall here. I hope to-day to make the acquaintance of some of the Quaker friends of our cause and learn more of the attitude of that large and influential body in this locality toward our work. If all opposed to this dark brood could be united in their efforts here the victory would not be long delayed.

At Vineland, New Jersey, I was greeted by many warm friends, and after speaking twice in Cosmopolitan Hall, and preaching in the Baptist church, left on Wednesday morning with none but pleasant recollections. Bro. N. W. Myers made an offering to the Publishing House fund for which he will receive the grateful thanks of every true friend of reform. When a young man engaged on a farm at eight dollars per month he was induced to send in his name for membership in a Masonic lodge. He was approved and notified to appear for initiation on a specified evening. He went at the time appointed, but providentially there were not members enough present to go through the "stripping" process, and in a kind of informal way, as I suppose, administered the oath of the first degree, took his five dollars, and let him go home, a distance of four miles, through rain and mud, with a promise to give him the rest at a subsequent time.

On reflection Bro. M. came to the very sensible conclusion that he would have nothing more to do with the lodge; that he was boor free and that if he acknowledged the authority of the oath he had taken, he should be a SLAVE. He was a personal friend of Gerritt Smith, and has given his best efforts during a long and active life, to the work of Christian reform; and now in the autumn of life is possessed of ample means to aid in prosecuting the work so well begun by himself and others to its triumphant consummation. I am greatly indebted to this Christian brother and his no less devoted wife for their kindness and aid while at Vineland.

The recollection of Prof. C. A. Blanchard's visit to Vineland and the exciting scenes connected with his labors are still fresh in the memories of his many friends. When in the course of my first lecture I alluded to him by name, the audience responded with enthusiastic and very unanimous and general approval. Should the Professor ever visit this city again he will find a most cordial welcome among his former friends, and that there is a decisive change in the public sentiment of the people, owing doubtless in a good degree to his temperate but fearless defense of the right.

From here I go to New York city, and unless providentially directed elsewhere to Chelsea, Massachusetts. My first effort is to secure the completion of the endowment fund of our reform at as early a day as possible. Our great need is organization and systematic effort. I see no way to effect this successfully without means, and while I would unite most heartily with those who have aided so liberally and cheerfully in thanksgiving to God and to all to whom thanksgivings are due, I would remind you that the end has not yet been reached, and as a servant of the Divine Master would affectionately inquire "How much owest thou to my Lord?" and do fervently and kindly beseech of you to "sit down quickly and write" to H. L. Kellogg, No. 13, Wabash Ave., Chicago, specifying amount and time of payment "that the work be not hindered."

Very respectfully, your brother in Christ, J. P. STODDARD.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. J. E. Roy, the well known agent of the American Home Missionary Society, does not recover from the severe injury he received in a Pullman car last June and it is a serious probability that he will never be able to fully engage again upon his work. The blow caused extreme nervous difficulty preventing sleep except from use of opiates. The Congregational churches of the West can ill afford to lose the efficient labors of Dr. Roy.

—Fifteen persons united with the Scotch Presbyterian church in this city on a late Sabbath. In other Presbyterian churches, forty-one joined the Third, Dr. Kittridge; fourteen the Second, and eighteen the Fifth. The revival work is doubtless bearing fruits in other churches.

—In his recent sermon in behalf of the American Sunday-school Union, the Rev. Dr. John Hall spoke of this association, especially in the new States and Territories, where the rush of new population is so great and the church privileges are so limited. "During the last year," he said, "it is estimated that 400,000 emigrants have gone into Texas. Now there are whole counties without church or pastor Many of the worst classes have gone there. The American Sunday-school Union has entered the field and is providing religious instruction. A single worker writes that he has organized forty-nine schools." The collection taken up after Dr. Hall's discourse amounted to $5,-236.85.

—At the May meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions in Boston, Mass., a gold necklace was shown which had been contributed as a Centennial offering by a lady in whose family it had belonged for one hundred years. A lady from another State, at the meeting in October, who was present at that meeting had bought the necklace by a Centennial offering of one hundred dollars, and desired that it should be returned to its recent owner. Both these offerings were anonymous.

News of the Week.

—Nine murders have been committed in this city since the McAllister fiasco. Sullivan's case is to be brought up again soon.

—Two large boilers in the Union Rolling Mills, Chicago, exploded with terrible force on Thursday night last. Some half dozen men were wounded, two fatally, the hundreds of workmen through the buildings wonderfully escaped, as also two families whose house was nearly demolished.

—An appalling catastrophe, resulting in the death of seven persons and the wounding of about 100 more, occurred at Sacramento Saturday night at the opening performance in a new variety theater. The auditorium was situated above a livery stable, and had been converted into a theater, having a seating capacity of 1,000 without adopting even the simplest means of supporting the weight of the crowd; as a consequence the floor gave way.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The Calcutta correspondent of the Times states that estimates, based on official returns from the various police sections, gives the total loss of life as from the recent cyclone 215,000 in three districts, and it is probable that even this estimate is too small.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable; interest bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"The object of this Association is:—"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Heart Search.

BY M. E. FISK.

God the heart doth search! With flaming torch
As twere
Through windows dark and labyrinthine maze
He treads,
Long passage dim, and chamber dark. He does not err,
In nook and den; sin, vainly hid, His presence
dreads;
He sees the purpose secret veiled by deep design,
The thought He views that trembling speeds
the darksome plan
Intents half-formed pertinance, appears to eye divine,
And every impulse slight which moves the soul of man.

God the reins doth try! His hand doth sweep the strings,
Of that celestial harp, the soul; their tune
doth try,
However minute the fault (so noiseless ne'er the wings
Of sound do move but that) it gains His ear,
His eye.
The faintest touch of passion's hand doth mar
the sound,
Ambition's arm and anger's power doth discord make,
Not one, save He who gave it power divine, is formed,
Who can with skilful touch its sweetest echoes wake.

Then tremble, man! nor dare the harp of God to play,
With passion's hand or wild ambition's finger touch,
Nor think that human skill or wisdom proud
the lay
Of heaven can make from chords ne'er strung for artists such.
Aye, guard the thought, the purpose guard that stirs the soul,
The beacon trim and search dim nooks for lurking foe,
Oh! list the gentle warning ere the thunders roll,
And forked tongue of vengeance speak the endless woe.

Startling Questions.

I see it is the almost universal opinion of the civilized world as expressed in both the secular and the religious press that European Turkey ought to be blotted from the map of nations. Were it not for the jealousy existing between the great powers of Europe, she would be absorbed or dismembered in less than three months. The reason for this state of things is, that by common consent civilization has decided that a nation which cannot maintain and enforce her treaty stipulations without other powers, nor enforce her own laws upon her subjects, has no right to an existence among the fraternity of nations. This is the condition of Turkey. Instead of her authorities ruling, they are ruled, or overawed by a bigoted and blood-thirsty people, so that instead of law and order, lawless violence bears rule. Because of this, the accepted verdict of Christendom is that she should have no place among the nations of the earth and that her name should be expunged from the roll of nations. Now if this be true of nations, what of a church that cannot enforce her discipline? If it is God's order to destroy nations that cannot maintain their laws, what is his order with a church that has not sufficient moral force to execute her rules? If a nation ought to be destroyed for this sin, then by a parity of reasoning how can a church escape the same divine doom when it is guilty of the same sin? Who will deny that the discipline of the M. E. church cannot now be enforced upon her members? or who will say that it can? The attention of one of our bishops was called to this fact at one of our annual conferences. He admitted that we could not enforce our rules, neither ought any preacher to undertake to do it at the present status of the church; and he more than intimated that in case any one should try it, he need expect no encouragement from the appointing power. It was conceded both by the bishop and conference, that the most that could now be done was to kindly urge our people to keep our rules, but not intimate the possibility or probability of their enforcement in case of disobedience. What nation would stand one year after such a confession as that? Can a church stand before God with a moral standard below that which decides the fate of civil institutions? I do not answer these questions myself, but I put them forth for the consideration of our Zion. They are startling to me, and if a favorable answer can be given to them, I shall be truly thankful to God for it.

That I may not be brushed away as a croaker, I will bring Bishop Foster to the stand, and let him speak on this momentous question. At a meeting of the Women's Missionary Society in Cincinnati, he used the following language as reported in the Western Christian Advocate: "Just now, four out of five with their names on church rolls, are doing nothing—almost absolutely nothing. Four out of five contribute but little to the treasury of the church's benevolence, and four out of five do nothing in the line of personal work for Christ. They go to church perhaps, once on each Sabbath, if the weather is not inauspicious, and when the next Sunday comes, and the conditions are the same, they go again; so on, through the weeks, and months, and years, and God's blessed cause is not made one the stronger in numbers or in influence for their living. Of course with a continuance of this state of affairs in the church, it is idle to talk of the world's conversion, and equally idle to complain that the cause of truth moves so sluggishly."

If the bishop is not mistaken in his estimate (and we think he is not), how long will our Lord wait on us with such a record as that? How long would a nation survive with four out of five of its subjects disloyal? How long would an army remain in the field with four out of five of its number stragglers and in sympathy and co-operation with the enemy? With not one in ten in the class, and not more than one in four in the prayer-meeting, and with a general attendance upon fairs, where horse-racing is the principal item of interest, with a fair representation at theatres and circus shows, and the pastor armed with no more dangerous weapons than kind admonitions to the desecrators of our rules, and with a general understanding that our discipline is to be regarded as nothing more than so much advice to our people in regard to the same: how long will God tolerate such moral insolvency on the part of a church? How can we complain of the civil authorities for not enforcing the liquor or the Sunday laws, when we cannot enforce our own wholesome rules? How can we complain of treachery and perjury on the part of civil officers in the matter of taking the oath of office, while we deem it no great offence to break our baptismal and sacramental vows which are solemn oaths taken in the name of the Trinity? Have we any right at all to preach to others while sins so enormous lie at our own door? Hear the word of the Lord in the 50th Psalm, 16th and 17th verses: "But unto the wicked God saith, "What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth, seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee?" While contemplating the Eastern question which now occupies such a prominent place in the daily news, the above reflections came on me with such stunning force, that I was almost overcome with the vision. I dare not express my convictions in the case any farther than simply suggest the above questions, hoping that they may call attention to what seems to me an alarming condition of things. Not only is the above true of the M. E. church, but it is also true of all the great religious bodies of our land. "Awake, O Zion, put on thy strength."—Chris. Standard.

Anecdote of Rowland Hill.

Rowland Hill was once driven by a storm of rain into a village inn, and compelled to spend the night. When it grew late, the landlord sent a request by the waiter that the guest would go to bed. Mr. Hill replied, "I have been waiting a long time expecting to be called to family prayer." "Family prayer! I don't know what you mean, sir; we don't have such things here." "Indeed! then tell your master I cannot go to bed until we have had family prayer." The waiter informed his master, who in great consternation bounced into the room occupied by the faithful minister, and said, "Sir, I wish you would go to bed, I cannot go until I have seen all the lights out; I am so afraid of fire." "So am I," was the reply, "but I have been expecting to be summoned to family prayer." "All very good, sir, but it cannot be done at an inn." "Indeed! then pray get me my horse. I cannot sleep in a house where there is no family prayer." The host preferred to dismiss his prejudice rather than his guest, and said: "I have no objection to have prayer, but I don't know how.' "Well, then summon your people and let us see what can be done." The landlord obeyed, and directly the astonished domestics were upon their knees, and the landlord was called upon to pray. "Sir, I never prayed in my life, I don't know how." "Ask God to teach you," was the gentle reply. The landlord said, folding his hands, "God teach us how to pray." "That is prayer, my friend," cried Mr. Hill, joyfully: "go on." "I am sure I don't know what to say now, sir." "Yes you do; God has taught you how to pray. Now thank him for it. Thank you, God Almighty, for letting us pray to you!' "Amen!" "Amen!" exclaimed Mr. Hill, and prayed himself. Two years afterward, Mr. Hill found in that village a chapel and a school, as the result of the first effort of family prayer at the "Black Lion."

Kindness and Love.

Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
Kind deeds are the fruits;
Love is the sweet sunshine

Grow hatred and strife.

The Big Brother.

There is nobody in the household who has so many chances to make the rest happy as the big brother. He is the pride and delight of his father and mother, and the younger children love him. His sisters are ready to do whatever he wishes, and unless he is very unkind and disobliging, they are quite right in this disposition; for the big brother is always supposed to be a manly, generous fellow, willing to help weaker people, and ready to lend a hand to those who need it.

I remember one big brother whom I greatly admired. He was about eighteen years old, tall and broad shouldered, with a faint shadow of moustache on his upper lip. He was studying hard for his profession, but there was not a moment when he would not lay his books aside to solve a difficulty for Lulu or Jennie, whose parsing troubled them, and he never said an ungentle word to the little brother ten years his junior who came to him with his kites and skate-straps and broken toys to be mended. The manly big brother lost nothing by his kindness and suavity, and now, that he is a physician, a little bald, and with boys of his own to bring up, the same gentleness of demeanor recommends him to patients and friends.

Some boys seem to think it very fine to affect rudeness and bluntness of manner at home. They take off their hats very gallantly to the young ladies who reside in the opposite house, but it is too much trouble to be courteous to their own sisters. They scorn the idea of encumbering themselves with a little brother or cousin who wants to go and see a procession, or to accompany them on an excursion. It does involve some self-sacrifice to give up one's careless independence on a journey, and be responsible for the safety of a child; but then if all the world were looking out simply for itself, where would the happiness go to?

Believe me, boys, that the people for whose opinion you really care, will value and honor you far more for your habitual tenderness, good nature, steadiness, and patience with those who are younger than yourselves, than for your most brilliant performances in the school-room. If you are tempted sometimes to be cross and petulant, to say sarcastic things to those who cannot easily answer them, and to snub your little sisters and brothers, ask yourselves whether or not after all you do not love these home folks better than any others in the world. Are you not sure of their love for you? Then is it not worth your while to be amiable and lovely to those whose love makes earth's sunshine, and whose absence would make earth dark indeed? I often think, if we were more careful to be kind in little things, we would be repaid by the comfort we should have in our own consciences. It is very easy to say a gruff word, when a gentle word would be the right one, but to most boys there is apt to be a troublesome prick afterward. A kind and pleasant word even in the way of reproof costs no more than a gruff one, and is a hundred fold better. If you doubt it, try it.—Christian at Work.

Hints to Young Christians.

Don't be afraid to "show your colors." A cowardly Christian is a misnomer. Shrink from no declaration, from no duty that Christ desires of you. The timid, vascillating course is the hardest and most barren. The brave, outspoken, faithful life is the happiest and most effective.

There are many things you do not understand as yet. But let no doubts or uncertainties prevent you from acting on what you do know. There are some spiritual facts clear enough, plenty of Christian duties plain enough, to you, act immediately on these. Do faithfully all you know you ought to do, and the larger knowledge will follow in due time.

Use earnestly every means that will enlarge and strengthen your Christian life. Study the Bible. Pray without ceasing. Do not neglect the prayermeeting or the Sabbath school. Stir up your Sabbath school teacher and get your doubts explained. Go to your pastor with your questions, and find out the best he knows on the things that perplex you. Keep your heart warm by doing good.

Make your life beautiful in the sight of men, and show them the sweetness and power of Christianity. Be conscientious in little things. Let the Master's spirit shine through every hour of your life. In school, in shop, in field, in society, the young Christian ought to be the most faithful, the most courteous, the most generous and kind, the noblest of any person there.

Follow Christ. Seek to reproduce his traits in your life. Do always as you believe he would do if he were in your place; so you will have a growing, joyful, successful Christian career.

In the year 1600 land was worth twelve years purchase, and in 1990, eighteen.

In the year 1306 the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London by royal proclamation.

In the time of Henry the Eighth little skewers, made of the wood of holly tree, were used to fasten dresses, as metal pins at that period were hardly known.

Home and Farm.

Smoked Meat.—The following suggestions are among those made by Professor Nessler in regard to the preservation of meat: The keeping qualities of smoked meat do not depend upon the amount of smoking, but upon the uniform and proper drying of the meat. Smoke of high temperature and moisture, and the condensation of water upon the meat, are all injurious in smoking meat. With hot dry smoke the surface is dried too rapidly; a crust filled with cracks is formed, and the fat may partially liquify, and the drying of the interior of the meat be hindered. Bacon is often met with that is brown to the depth of an inch, or even more, simply because it was too warm, or at times moist (sweat), either during the smoking or the subsequent storing. It is doubtless of considerable advantage to roll the meat, on its removal from the salt, before smoking, in sawdust or bran, or to strew it with them, since the crust formed in smoking will not be so thick, and if moisture condenses upon the meat (sweating) it remains in the bran or sawdust, and the brown coloring-matter of the smoke does not penetrate the meat. Warmth, of itself, is not regarded as injurious to smoked meat if moisture is absent and the air is not too confined. In Greece, meat is preserved in the shade of trees, in an airy place, rather than in cellars, although the latter are much cooler, because they are at the same time much cheaper. If a cellar is not very dry, smoked meat will soon mould in it, even if covered with sawdust, ashes, charcoal etc. For the preservation of smoked meat, a warm room is also preferable to inclosures liable to great variations in temperature, since in the latter, moisture is apt to condence upon it. By far the best place, in most cases, for keeping smoked meat, is a suitable smokehouse, in which it remains dry without drying out entirely, as it does when hung in a chimney.

The best time to cut hard wood for durability is early winter before the sap has a thought of moving. December is far better than February, and November, or even October often better than later. During the latter part of the growing season those substances which, with access of water, form and enrich the sap, are produced in the wood. They gradually become soluble as the winter advances, and before spring fairly opens (trees varying considerably in time) are in a soluble condition, and taxing the soil for water to carry them to every twig and swelling bud. If cut thus, when full of water or when full of soluble substances, the durability of the timber is much less than when these substances are in a chiefly in soluble condition, as they are in the autumn. The above indicates a general principle. It may, however, be considerably modified in practice. For many trees may be cut in full leaf even shortly after midsummer to good advantage. For firewood it is important to cut soon after the leaves fall.

—"Oh! I'm only going to stop a minute, I don't need to cover my horse," is a frequent exclamation, when a friend goes to make a call at a house, store or shop. But the "minute" often extends to a quarter or half an hour, and in the meantime the horse suffers.

GOSPEL MEETING.

Mr. Moody's Second Discourse on the Holy Spirit.

We very often hear people asking "What is a sin against the Holy Spirit?" They have been told that there is no hope for them because they have sinned away the day of grace, they have committed an unpardonable sin, and there is no chance of their being saved. Let us read what it says in the Scriptures upon the question of an unpardonable sin. Turn to Matthew xii., 23. If you just turn to those passages it will help you to bear them in mind:

And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David?

But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of devils.

And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them: Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself, shall not stand.

And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?

And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.

He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

Now Matthew leaves us in darkness about what it means—he don't explain it; but turn over to Mark's gospel, where you will find Christ explaining it himself. If people would but turn to the Scriptures and read them more carefully, they would soon get light on many of those passages which appear dark to them. In the third chapter of Mark and twenty-sixth verse we read:

And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end

No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man, and then he will spoil his house.

Verily I say unto you, all sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme.

But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation.

A great many people stop right there. They don't read the next verse at all, which explains all that has gone before:

"Because they said he hath an unclean spirit."

Now, the reasoning is this, that if he cast out devils by the power of the prince of devils, and was a devil himself, and all his works that had been done by the power of the Holy Ghost had been done really by the power of the devil, why, of course there is no hope. There is no hope; for if a man believes that the devil was working through Christ he wouldn't come to Christ. Some people believe they have committed an unpardonable sin; but have you ever met a man who said that the devil was working through Christ? Those who think they have committed an unpardonable sin turn over to Genesis and give out that verse: "My Spirit shall not always strive with men." They think that because the Spirit is not striving with them now they have committed an unpardonable sin. A man in New York was approached, and, after quoting the verse in Genesis, said there was no hope for him. Why, the very fact that the Spirit spoke through this Christian man to him showed that it was striving with him. That is the way the devil speaks. He says first, "You don't need the Holy Spirit," and if he cannot get them to believe that, he tells them the Holy Ghost has given them up, they don't need to try to come. But if they believed this verse in Genesis, they might as well believe that they will live 120 years, for in the next verse we read: "Yet his days will be 120 years." He strove with those antediluvians 120 years to get them to repent. He strove with them all their lives. It is a question with me whether the Holy Ghost does not strive with a man from his cradle to his grave. So don't let any man go away from here saying that he has committed an unpardonable sin, and that his Spirit of God has left him. It is this influence that has brought you here. A man would be deaf and blind to all heavenly truths if his Spirit had left him. He wouldn't want to talk about any religious subject; he wouldn't want to hear anything about religion. The very fact of your coming to this meeting is conclusive evidence that the Spirit is striving with you. The devil wouldn't bring you here; it is the Spirit of God working with you.

The next thought I would direct your attention to is, "How shall we know we have been born of the Spirit?" A great many people say, "Mr. Moody, I would like to know whether I am a Christian or not. I would like to know if I am saved." The longer I live the more I am convinced that it is one of the greatest privileges of a child of God to know—to be able to say "I am saved." The idea of walking through life without knowing this until we get to the great white throne is exploded. If the Bible don't teach assurance it don't teach justification by faith; if it don't teach assurance it don't teach redemption. The doctrine of assurance is as clear as any doctrine in the Bible. How many people in the Tabernacle when I ask them if they are Christians, say: "Well, I hope so," in a sort of a hesitating way. Another class say, "I am trying to be." This is a queer kind of testimony, my friends, I notice no man is willing to go into the inquiry room till he has got a step beyond that. That class of Christians don't amount to much. The real Christian puts it, "I believe; I believe that my Redeemer liveth; I believe that if this building of flesh were destroyed I have a building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." No hoping and trusting with them. It is, "I know why hope is assured to the Christian. It is a sure hope; it isn't a doubting hope." Suppose a man asked me if my name was Moody, and I said, "Well I hope so," wouldn't it sound rather strange?" "I hope it is;" or "I'm trying to be Moody." Now, if a man asks you if you are a Christian, you ought to be able to give a reason. How do you know you are a Christian? Turn to the eighth chapter of Romans and ninth verse: "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, it so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of us"—a meek, gentle, loving, forbearing spirit. If a man has not that spirit he is not a Christian. I don't care if he is a member of fifty churches, or has his name on 100 church records; if he hasn't the Spirit of Christ he isn't a Christian. That is the question, has he the same Spirit as Christ had. We can soon tell if we have his Spirit. If we have the Spirit we will follow in his footsteps. We won't be in darkness at all if we only take the Word of God as our examiner as to whether we have it or not.

"And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness.

"But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you.

"Therefore, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh to live after the flesh.

"For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are sons of God."

Now you can tell whether you are led by the Spirit of God or not. How happy this world would be if it was led by the Spirit of God. Do you think the Spirit of God would lead men into darkness, into sorrow or trouble or iniquity? Do you think if Lot had not been led by the Spirit of God he would have left Sodom? Do you think the sons and daughters of the earth who are going down to death are being led by the Spirit of God? When we are led by the Spirit there is peace and joy and light.

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons and daughters of God

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

There's another point I want to call your attention to: The Spirit of the Holy Ghost bears witness to us that we are the children of God. That's how we know we are children of God. Don't let any unconverted person look here for a witness of the Spirit. We find many in the inquiry-room saying: "Mr. Moody, I haven't found the Spirit." That's not the first thing to look for. The first thing to look for is Christ, then the Holy Ghost comes into our hearts and shows us we are children of God. John, the favorite disciple, says, "Now we know we are the children of God." We are as much children of God when we have the Spirit as if we were in heaven this afternoon. There is not an inch of ground to stand upon for this doubting. Our doubts ought to be swept out of the way, and we should be able to say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Suppose you go into the inquiry room to-night and commence talking to a weeping man about his being saved. If you feel yourself that you are only trying, and you can't just say whether you are saved or not, you can't talk to that man. You cannot go to a river and try to get a man out if you are in the river yourself. If you are in the ditch yourself you must get out first before you try to get anybody else out. If any child of God is here to-day who does'nt know whether he is saved, it is your privilege to know definitely before you leave here; to be able to say: "Christ is my faithful Savior, heaven is my beautiful home." Christians have been doubting and hoping long enough. Now know that you have been born of the Holy Ghost. In Ephesians i. 13, we find how we are sealed by the Holy Ghost.

"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

And in the fourth chapter, thirtieth verse, we read:

"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Now, when we are washed by the blood we become a temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. When we are cleansed by the blood we become a temple for him, and are sealed till the day of redemption, and neither devil nor man can break God's seal. And when we are cleansed the Holy Ghost comes and cleansed the Holy Ghost comes and dwells with the believer. You haven't to go up and bring him down or go down and bring him up. He dwells with us and seals us for the day of redemption. There was a poor man who had been a servant of God and died in the poor house. The people were hurrying him off, and a gentleman happening to pass said, "Tread softly, for you are carrying a temple of the Holy Ghost." By the Redeemer's grace we become a temple, my friends, and are sealed for the day of redemption.

The work of the Holy Ghost is the next point I wish to call your attention to. Turn to John xv., 26.

"He shall testify of me." He saw him when he went into heaven when he came home after being down on this earth. He saw him when he swept through the pearly gates, and then he came to testify of him: and so when Peter came to speak at the day of Pentecost and addressed those unbelievers of Jerusalem and told them he had ascended into heaven he indorsed Peter. That's so. I suppose there were more converts made from that sermon of Peter than were made from the years of Christ's teaching. Don't you see, if he didn't come and testify to men of Christ, we couldn't convince men that he who had died such an ignominious death outside the walls of Jerusalem—the death of a common malefactor—we couldn't convince men that he was a Savior. The Greeks, in all their wisdom, couldn't see this. The Jews can't understand why his name has been heralded through the world for nineteen centuries. It is the Holy Ghost convincing men that this Savior is a living reality and when we speak to inquirers we should remember that it is the Holy Ghost testifying this truth. Why, how quick they forgot his birth! They would have forgotten his death in thirty years if it hadn't been for the Holy Ghost. We couldn't convince men of him as a Savior it it wasn't for the Holy Ghost. Said an old man some time ago in Chicago: "I don't understand the Holy Ghost. He's never revealed himself to me. I can't just get him right in my mind." "Well," said the old saint he was talking to, "He don't intend you should. He has come to testify of Christ; he don't speak about himself, he speaks of Christ." This remark has helped me wonderfully when I have stood up and preached to the perishing multitude. My friends, if we but keep Christ up and put ourselves in the background, he will be true to his mission; he will fulfill his promises if we proclaim him. Upon this point let me turn to John xvi., 13:

"Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come."

He don't speak about himself, but about the Master. In Genesis we find Abraham sending his faithful servant off into another county for a bride for his only son Isaac. The servant went, and he found Rebekah at the well. He told her what his mission was; showed her jewels, and talked about his master's son. He didn't talk about himself. He came to get a bride for his master's son. He represented the absent one to her and his position, and at last she consented to go. Her parents wanted her to remain ten days. Ah, those ten days! How many say they want to become Christians, but they must wait—wait just a few days more. The servant said, "Call the damsel, and leave it with her." Rebekah was called, and she was asked, "Wilt thou go with this man?" and she answered, "I will go." I can see them starting off on their joyful journey, the servant talking to Rebekah all the time about Abraham's son. It was that that prompted Rebekah to go with him. When they came home they see many standing at the door of the house and she asks, "Who is that man?" "That's my master's son," and he just handed the bride over to him. He brought her through the wilderness and then handed her over to his master's son. That's the work of the Holy Ghost with the church. He conducts the church through the wilderness, and then will hand it over to the bridegroom. Suppose a man came to me and said, "Moody, I'm going down to Connecticut. You've an old mother on the Connecticut River, and as I am going near her place I will take any message you want to send her." I give him a message, and when he gets to my mother's home, he says: "Mrs. Moody, I've just come from Chicago. Would you like to hear from your absent boy?" "Yes, I would; tell me all about him." Well, he commences to talk about nothing except what concerns himself. That's not what she wants. She wants to hear from her absent boy. That's what the bride wants to hear in this wilderness. He wants to hear about Christ, not about his servants.

The next thought is that the Holy Ghost is a teacher. The past and the future are all alike to God, and the Spirit will teach us all about the future. We can see what is before us in the misty future, and he will bring to remembrance all things past. If a man filled with the Spirit takes up this book and opens it, it seems as if it was filled with light. You know before they lighted the hall how dim and dark everything looked, but the moment the light was put to the gas everything was clear. So when the Spirit of God falls upon us we are filled with light and see wonderful things. Then when we take up this Bible we will see things in a new way. We find we have everything in it—it is the greatest book that was ever written. You talk about your newspapers—this is the only newspaper that was ever written in the world. It tells you all that has taken place in the past, and you will see all about the wonderful things in the future if you study it with the Spirit. Turn over to First Corinthians ii. 9, and we read:

"But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

But when people get here, then they stop. But let them read the next verse:

"But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

We need not be in darkness about our future home, for in Revelation we get a full description of it. By the Spirit we can see all things. Look at Stephen how he, when filled with the Spirit, saw the kingdom of God. When the Spirit of God comes upon us he teaches us all about our future home, for "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God." Many people when they come to some verse they say, "It's so dark and mysterious I can't understand one word of it." Suppose if that's the case with you, you just get down on your knees and cry, "May the Spirit open my eyes; may the God of heaven help me to dig out this deep truth." There are passages in the Scriptures deep and dark that we cannot solve unless we have the Spirit. You cannot find all about them in a day; you can't find them all at once; but if the Spirit of God is our teacher we will find out wonderful things. And I have not much hope in the churches till the ministers understand them. If a man is running after this or that minister, especially if he preaches moral essays, he won't find it out. If the church of God is not taught by the Spirit you can't expect it to know much about the deep things in the Scriptures. When we have the Spirit of God we learn the secrets of heaven.

A great difficulty with us is that the Spirit of God is not sufficiently alone with us. If we want to get the secrets of heaven we have to be alone with God an hour or two a day. If we are continually in the buzz of the world, and don't give God a chance to tell them to us we can't expect to learn them. Why, it is when I am alone with my wife that I talk about my secrets, and so when the children of God are alone with him it is then that he will tell them the secrets of heaven. May the Spirit of the living God show us the deep things of the Scriptures. My friends, the Gospel of Jesus Christ is not a matter of investigation, but a matter of revelation, and when the Spirit shows himself to us in his beauty and loveliness this world will look very small.

Obituary.

Rev. A. S. Allen died at his residence at Clear Lake, Iowa, on the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 7th, aged seventy-nine years. Father Allen, as he was familiarly known, was beloved and revered in all the region of central Iowa. On the formation of an Anti-masonic society in Clear Lake some three years since his testimony as a seceder from the lodge was a final answer to all the attacks and arguments of the fraternity, for the universal esteem in which he was held gave his words the greatest effect. He has ever since been known as an active and consistent opponent of the idolatrous system. He suffered an attack of paralysis while lying on his sofa, in the evening of Nov. 1st, and lingered unconscious for several days. The following notice of his ministerial labors we take from the Advance: "He was born in Medfield, Mass., and for nearly forty years was in the active ministry in the States of New York, Wisconsin, and Iowa, most of the time as a home missionary. Until within a year of his death, he had never known sickness. He had organized, in the course of his ministry, ten churches, assisted in building five houses of worship, supporting and educating in the meantime a numerous family, on a salary never more than $600, and sometimes only $400 a year. He leaves behind the fragrance of a simple but earnest piety."

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Forward! March!

The Chicago Tribune, Monday Nov. 20th reports about one hundred and fifty American party votes in the State of Illinois, one half of Gideon's band in Illinois alone! The pitchers are broken. The lights shine. And now will the ten thousand reserves rush in with local and State elections and with God's blessing upon strong and continued efforts save our country from those forces which unresisted would cause her destruction?

Every man in HIS PLACE. FORWARD! MARCH!!

(To be Continued.)

MAN PROPOSES; GOD DISPOSES.—The recent election has surprised every one. We considered our estimate of American party votes very moderate (probably half of those actually cast will never be reported) but results show it was far from accurate.

The Chicago Tribune of Nov. 16th says:

"This close vote in 1876 was not anticipated by either party. The Democrats considered a majority of the electoral vote beyond a doubt, and, getting that vote, they estimated as probable the vote of several other States, which would made Tilden's vote over 200. On the other hand, the Republicans never estimated Hayes' vote as low as 185; they assumed that the popular feeling which would elect him would carry all the doubtful States. The best estimates of both parties were at fault. Hayes got votes which the Democrats considered safe to them beyond all question; and Tilden got the votes of North Carolina and New Jersey, to say nothing of New York and Indiana, which the Republicans confidently expected. Hayes' election without New York was considered possible, as in fact it will prove, should there be no change in the present appearances."

The different States have widely differing laws regarding the style and size of ballots, and on account of our ignorance of these laws the tickets for New York and Ohio had to be printed over again and a circular was sent with each lot to every one who had received the illegal ones, stating that the first ballots were illegal, but that those enclosed were all right. Second lots were sent to New York in ample time and those for Ohio were all mailed Nov. 3d, but some did not receive them in time. Among the number who failed to receive tickets in time is Alexander Needles of Sparta, Morrow Co., who writes:

"The first bunch of tickets you sent were not legal, as you tell me yourself, the legal ones did not reach me until the eighth in the evening and of course too late. Although living in the State I was ignorant of the law as you were and put in one of the first for which I was arrested with a State warrant on the 9th by the Masons. I am now a prisoner, running at large, awaiting my trial which will come off on the 18th. Here I give the honorable fraternity the credit of neither putting me under bonds or giving security for an appearance. You will hear more about it if I live."

We wish that there no more reason for arrest for illegel voting than there is in this case.

The American party votes cast at this election are worth more to this reform than twice as many speeches. Hear the Chicago Tribune on the value of one vote: Writing on the supposition that Tilden is not elected, it says:

Here is a case of a brilliant, hopeful, costly and ably-conducted political campaign failing for the want of one vote. Of what avail was all the labor at St. Louis, and of the expenditure of the "bar'l of money" to secure the nomination? Of what avail was the desperate campaign in Indiana and the expenditure of perhaps a half million of dollars to have Democratic Greenbackers vote for Tilden and Republican Greenbackers vote for Cooper? Of what avail was the protracted labor of reconciling Tammany and anti-Tammany, and the lavish expenditure of money all over the State of New York, and especially in the cities of New York and Brooklyn? Why was staid Connecticut shaken and disturbed to her very centre by the howl for reform? Of what use was the capture of New Jersey? Of what avail was the Literary Bureau with its 160 writers, and all their productions? All these things and their cost have been wasted because of the want of one vote.

The importance of a few votes is illustrated in the election of Congressmen. There are a dozen members of Congress elect whose majorities will not in any one case reach 100, and one of these cases is in Illinois. When it is remembered that the possible majority in the next House of Representatives will not exceed four or five either way, the importance of a few votes in a Congressional District will be evident. In the same category is the probable condition of parties in the next Legislature of Illinois. The whole number of members on joint ballot is 204, and it is not probable that the Republicans will have more than 101 or 102, and many of the members are elected by majorities of less than fifty. When citizens omit voting because they do not consider one vote of any consequence, they make a sad mistake. The great popular vote of the country is made up of single votes.

From All Along the Line.

Asa Cook, Thornton, Ind., writes:

"Election passed with one Anti-mason ticket only. I claim the honor of voting the first in Boone county toward the overthrow of the secret kingdom. I threw out a large number of tracts election day and they were gladly received. I live in an excellent community and we need a few lectures."

Can any of our lecturers in Indiana arrange to supply this want?

Moses Varney, writes that they nominated a township ticket on the American platform in Springdale, Cedar county, Iowa, and adds:

"I hope we shall not go to sleep after the campaign is over, but push the war into the township elections and get the machinery in good working order for State and National work when the time comes round again."

Samuel Bennett, Randolph, Wisconsin, writes:

"Those tickets you sent I have made good use of in giving to those I thought would vote right. I sent them into three townships and voted one myself. I will send you the number of votes cast as soon as possible. I believe in voting as I pray."

S. Wing, East Douglas, Massachusetts, writes:

"The seed is sown and is yet to germinate. One vote cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in Douglas."

Theodore Gracfe, Taylorville, Ill., writes:

"There were four votes cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in Mechanics township, Holmes county, Ohio."

A. Pattison, Birmingham, Iowa, writes:

"Dear Sir:—You can put down to the credit of Birmingham twenty-four votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick. There are a great many here who are opposed to secret societies and who say that the platform of the American party is every thing that could be desired, but that it would not do to vote it now, for fear that it might take from Hayes and elect Tilden. If we could have had a good lecturer here just before the election, I think we might have had as many more votes for Walker. But what we have done we did by distributing the Cynosure and without any other effort. We have never had a lecture here on the subject, nor any organization, and all things considered I think we made a very good beginning, and I believe the cause must and will succeed until every lodge is rooted out of the land, because I know it is the cause of God and therefore must prevail.

Joseph O. Risheil, Kewanee, Ill., writes:

"There were three Anti-masonic votes cast in Kewanee. The seed has been sown; harvest time will come if we faint not."

Hiel Lewis, Amboy, Ill., writes:

"I here send you the election returns for Lee Co., by which you will see that there was not one vote for Walker. Now it is a horrible crime for Democratic Masons in the South to suppress Republican votes by intimidation, but Democratic Masons and Republican Masons in Lee Co., Illinois have a very religious way of suppressing every Anti-mason vote. It is done in this way. The election passes off perfectly quiet, every voter is allowed to vote just as he pleases, without the least molestation, but when the returns are published in the papers, every Walker vote has been thrown out. I enclose the returns from this county as given in the Amboy Journal. Of course they are not full, but it is shown that in some towns how many Presidential votes for each candidate. For example. East Grove, Hayes, 28; Tilden, 105; Cooper, 1. Amboy, Hayes, 351; Tilden, 343; Cooper, 29. So the Walker votes were not thrown out because they were so few; because Cooper's votes though but one in a township were counted. Now I know that at least four Walker votes were deposited in Amboy, and perhaps more. In Lee Center, I think certainly two Walker votes. Christ says, "He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much." So if they will suppress one vote, they, by the same rule will suppress a thousand."

Many more American Party votes would have been polled in Iowa and Ohio if the legal votes had been sent to parties ordering sooner.

Rev. J. P. Richards, Bowensburg, Ill., writes:

"The American Party is only the baby giant in its swaddling clothes." It is a very promising child, requires great care, and will be a bill of expense to its guardians for a number of years. It is worth raising, and if we cherish it for God he will give us good wages for our work.

TRACT NO. 19.

BRICKS FOR MASONS TO LAY.

WASHINGTON, MADISON, MARSHALL, RUSH, HANCOCK ADAMS AND WEBSTER, ve brief clear testimony against the Lodge A 2-page tract 25 ce[illegible] per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 20:

OBJECTIONS TO MASONRY.

By A SECEDING MASON, of Cornton, Vermont.

This tract contains many strong arguments against the Lodge drawn from personal experience, observation and study of its character A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE.

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 22.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Author a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have prononnced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made np of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing ah out the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to nse the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

Translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,
CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

John Ziegler, Francisco, Ind., writes:

"I was the only one who voted the American ticket in Center Town, so there is one planted to raise seed. There are a good many in the county who advocate the American party, but when the day came to try their faith by their works, their hearts failed them. They say they will be all right next time when Tilden is not a candidate."

John Finney, Mansfield, O., reports four votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and asks:

"Will some brother write a good article on the second plank of our platform, and direct us how to stop the running of the railroad cars on the Sabbath day, or take up any other plank of our honest party?"

We would be glad to publish a good article on each of the planks in our platform.

Adam Andre, Wauseon, Ohio, writes:

"I think there were only two votes cast in this town, and the board called them "scattering;" if our votes go by that name there were fourteen votes cast in the whole county. They also considered them illegal, because the electors had not the full given name on them; this, they said, the law required. There are more than one hundred voters in this county who would have voted for Walker and Kirkpatrick, if (?). I hope and pray, with God's blessing, that the American party may finally prosper until we may be able to oust every secretist out of office, from a school-director to the President of the United States. Let us all stand by and encourage President Tilden, and I think he will make us a good President. And we also look for reform; this they promised us."

"The powers that be are ordained of God," and when we find out who they are, let us do our duty as we find it explained in the 13th chapter of Romans.

Hibben Cheyney, Waterloo, Ind., writes:

"One vote at this precinct for God and the right. There would have been quite a number but old associations and the fear of man caused many to shirk a plain duty. Many, very many follow the two great political parties; right or wrong, they follow the crowd, and go to the polls like sheep to the shambles. I shall talk against and vote to put down such institutions as gambling and liquor saloons and brothels, and all kindred institutions, and shall pray and talk and vote to sustain the Christian Sabbath as God designed it should be kept."

Ferdinand Huber, Mt. Heron, O writes:

"There should have been some forty votes polled for the American party at Greenville, Darke Co., O., as it was there were ten. Prospects good. May we never draw back, but ever go forward, and this our cause, with the help of God, will come out victorious."

Jeremiah Chadwick, Southport, Pa., writes:

"Mine was the only Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket voted in the county. 'Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone.' Bless the Lord I have done my duty, for which I receive abuse. Yet none of these things move me. 'Keep to the right, boys, keep to the right.'"

BRIGHTER DAYS.

November has had many gloomy days in Chicago thus far. Much of the weather has been very dark. Many things besides the election returns have been cloudy in other than physical aspects. Only one hundred and twenty renewals have been received this month at date Nov. 18th, and five hundred and twenty-four subscriptions expire this month.

"I am doing what I can and hoping for brighter days," writes one of the faithful. Just what we are doing and the light begins to stream in. Rev. H. S. Limbocker sends eight new subscriptions for a year and writes: "I hope to obtain a number more."

Thomas Hodge sends in one for a year; four for six months and one for three months.

Will the four hundred others whose subscriptions expire in November add to the gladness of the coming days by forwarding their renewals?

Will those whose subscriptions expire in December secure other names if possible to send in early in the month with their renewals?

Below are given the names of persons having sent five or more subscriptions at one time from Oct. 9th to Nov. 9th:

Asa Warren of New York, sent in five three months subscriptions. T. K. Bufkinn, Lynville Iowa, five, together with his renewal; Rev. J. P. Stoddard, nine; twelve were received from Niagara county, New York. A. C. Jennings, Rio, Wisconsin, sends five renewals for a year each. Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill., nine; John Motter, Atlanta, Kansas, five three months subscriptions. James Spencer, Remington, Indiana, six renewals for a year each.

Will you help illuminate the "BRIGHTER DAYS"?

CLUB OF TEN FIFTEEN DOLLARS.

READERS AND FRIENDS OF THE CYNOSURE:

If you were copying in oil colors a beautiful landscape, under the direction of a master artist, he would not allow you to sit all the time toiling at the easel. "Get up! and STUDY THE EFFECT," he would frequently say. And by doing so you would perhaps discover that the distant snow capped peak was too rigid in outline or too deep in color; that the colors in the rugged mountains nearer were not blended so as to produce a natural and life-like effect, or that the trees looked too stiff. At the same time by the change of position your body and eye would be rested; you would be refreshed by the discovery of new beauties in the picture and qualified to improve your copy of it. On this thanksgiving week let us look over our whole work, and be refreshed and strengthened for new labors for God and humanity. We are all working together under a Master Artist to produce the beautiful picture,

"On Earth Peace good will to men."

Let us look for a moment at the whole work of the National Christian Association and then at the relation the Christian Cynosure sustains to this work.

The past year has given its testimony to the vital power and great necessity of the reforms promoted by

The National Christian Association.

In fact, if not in form, the Christian Cynosure is the organ of an Association which includes every person who spurns fellowship with or the worship of devils; of all who seek to separate the traditions of men which make void the law of God from the Scriptures; which are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in rightcousness; of all who find Christ their all and in all.

It has a wider purpose than the overthrow of a single evil or set of evils; to enthrone Christ, the God of nations and of individuals. To promote the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of saints.

In the special work to which it is devoting its best energies victory after victory has been achieved.

A petition for the removal of the lodge power signed by persons from all parts of the States and territories has been presented to the United States Senate and placed on record, and this fact has been widely published in Masonic as well as other journals.

In April an important work was successfully completed by having raised the first $10,000 for the Publishing House.

The Carpenter Building was turned over to your National Association, and a room fitted up where meetings have been and are to be held in the interest of our work.

Important State Conventions have been held in New York, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Iowa, Connecticut, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas.

At seven of these conventions Mr. Ronayne was present.

The Ninth National Convention held in Farwell Hall in June was another great step toward lodge deliverance in this center of the great Northwest.

Edmond Ronayne's Expositions were attended by thousands who beheld with a curiosity, not perhaps unmixed with a superstitious awe of the lodge, yet rejoicing at its failing power; while Freemasons, unable to defend their institution or to prevent the uncovering of its loathsomeness looked on with amazement.

These expositions have been given in other centers of influence in many States; Past Master Ronayne having devoted his whole time to meeting the appointments that crowd upon him. He has been continually bringing men out of the lodge.

During the year there have been sent out from the Cynosure office

Two Million Six Hundred Thousand pages of Anti-masonic literature, 1,725,000 pages of which were books and 875,000 pages of tracts. Also 50,000 pages of Masonic books.

The Centennial Exhibition has been well improved to bring our reform before thousands on thousands from every class and condition and various parts of the world.

There were given away from the stand in the Main Building 392,000 pages of tracts and 25,000 pages of books. The Centennial agents found a wide-spread abhorrence of the lodge even among its own members, more than one half of these manifesting their detestation of the idolatrous system and rejoicing that a standard of reform was raised. At the Annual Exposition at Chicago also 41,000 pages of tracts were given out.

Many Holiness conventions have witnessed public renunciations of Freemasonry.

The Great Evangelical Meetings

here in Chicago which are so wonderfully arousing the North-west, have been emphatically brought against the ungodly secret order system by the God-fearing boldness of Dwight L. Moody. While he declared its hostility to the Gospel thousands involuntarily applauded the testimony. These steps of progress are wonderful to human eyes. They are of God, and to him alone be the glory.

True, there are DARK SHADES IN THE PICTURE. Ministerial hirelings leading sheep astray—ignorance, indifference, selfishness and, worse still, hatred of the truth, and anger at its advocates. Self-denying philanthropists, while foregoing the comforts of home and laboring in a gentlemanly and Christian manner for God and their fellowmen, in a few instances have been assailed by mobs, covered with eggs, insulted, maligned; windows have been shattered with billets of wood, respectable audiences have been annoyed; free discussion has been prevented, editors have failed to expose or rebuke these things and even murder has been attempted. What shall we do to and to carry on this reform most effectively? How help these thousands of ministers of the various denominations throughout our land, whose hearts respond to Moody's warning, to set the fires of reform aglow on their own church altars? How unite and strengthen the hundreds of REFORMED LODGEMEN and bring out other multitudes to take a bold stand with them for God and a free conscience? How push forward the great Publishing House enterprise? How best strengthen the hands of that noble band of churches that have already taken their place in line against the lodge? How prepare the way for lectures and perpetuate their influence. The answer comes with emphasis from all experienced workers for the reform,

Extend the Circulation of the Christian Cynosure.

The fundamental importance of this work is ably presented by Mr. Ronayne who writes:

IN all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public expositions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.

The paper has approving friends and supporters in almost all Christian denominations. Dr. W. W. Barr, pastor of a large United Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, and late editor of the Evangelical Repository, in the following, repeats the sentiment expressed by many of our readers:

"I have read the Christian Cynosure since its commencement, and can give it my cordial endorsement. It fearlessly attacks and exposes one of the most gigantic evils in the land and in the world—namely secret oath-bound societies. Besides this, its special mission, it has much good, religious reading for the individual and the family. Patriots and Christians throughout the country should give it cordial support. Nov. 14, 1876.

The third convention of the Indiana eldership of the church of God, (Winebrennarian), opposed to the lodge, lately Resolved: "That we endorse the Christian Cynosure as a good reform journal."

The late New York Free Methodist Conference commended the Cynosure. Nearly every convention against the false fraternity system endorses the Cynosure and recommends it to every friend of God and truth. E. J. Chalfant of York, Pa., echoes our thought of the importance of work for the paper:—

The Cynosure is the great engine which moves the machinery of the anti-secret reform. It IS A POWERFUL ENGINE, but we must give it more steam. We must make the wheels of reform go faster. It is your duty thus to protect yourself and your friends.

As the Cynosure is the main-spring of the reform it is very important to increase its list immediately. Here is a plan to get subscribers at once:

1. Let every reader start a club.
2. Keep lists of all the subscribers you secure and get them to renew when their first subscription expires, and persuade others to take the paper.
3. Let all who can spare fifty cents, one dollar or a larger amount send the Cynosure for three months or more to the most intelligent and the most moral men and women they have knowledge of.
4. Carefully prepare yourselves with tracts, Cynosures, arguments, etc., before starting out to canvass.
5. Let every reader keep tracts at hand to inclose in all letters he writes to friends, business men and others.
6. Keep a few tracts to give to any man or woman whom you happen to meet.
7. Let every reader try to devise plans to get subscribers for the Cynosure. Do your very best now. You do not know how much good you can do until you try."

In addition to these suggestions which we heartily endorse, we add one:

Wherever possible have every house in your locality visited by an intelligent, competent canvasser for the Christian Cynosure, if you cannot do the whole work yourself. A faithful is what swells subscription lists.

"House to House Canvass"

We are endeavoring to help workers by making the paper as cheap as possible to clubs.

The winter is the harvest time for subscribers.

Having looked over past achievements and mercies just long enough to be thankful for them; let us, forgetting the things that are behind, in the strength of God, press on the battle for Christ and his kingdom.

A Hymn of Praise.

Because thine only Son thou didst not spare,
But sent him down to die,
Great King of heaven, didst yet for rebels care,
And bring the aliens nigh—
Therefore thy sovereign bounty we will praise,
And of thy mercies sing,
Telling of this thy love through endless days,
O God, our King!

Because thou dost thy gracious care bestow,
And thy protecting arm
Extend to us in every time of woe,
Of danger and alarm—
We will make mention of thy glorious name,
To thee our praises yield,
Thou art a refuge ever found the same,
O God, our Shield!

Because thou hast prepared for us a place,
Where toil and turmoil cease,
Where strife must flee away before thy face,
And conflict change to peace—
We will remember this thy love, and pray,
"Father, thy name be blest,
Hasten the dawning of Redemption's day,
O God, our Rest!"

Because thy grace Thou didst to us extend,
And bid us sinners live;
Because Thou wilt preserve us to the end,
And thy free spirit give—
Therefore with angels will we praise thy name,
Before thy footstool fall,
And raise our songs to Thee with loud acclaim,
O God, our All!

A New Witness.

BY PROF. S. C. KIMBALL.

The New Englander, a quarterly review, published at New Haven, Conn., and for thirty-three years one of the ablest exponents of New England theology, recently contained an article on "The Eleusinian Mysteries" by Prof. Jacob Cooper, Ph. D., Rutgers College, N. J., which confirms some of the most important truths advocated by the Cynosure and strikes a blow against all secret societies. Prof. Cooper says: "Compared with the time these mysteries flourished. Freemasonry, which boasts so ancient an origin, is but a child in years. For the latter, despite its lofty pretentions, can trace its history with certainty but two or three centuries at most; while Eleusinia has an undoubted record of more than a thousand years. * * * * Other mystic orders have invariably been betrayed. The fate of Masonry is fresh in memory; and the attempted punishment of the traiter shows conclusively that he betrayed what was vital to the order."

Thus the the conservative New Englander permits Prof. Cooper:

1. To condemn Masonic boasting.

2. To refute the Masonic claim to antiquity.

3. To prove that the secrets of Masonry have been correctly divulged.

The language of the article seems to indicate that Prof. Cooper, while denying the silly claims of Masonry to antiquity and affirming that it has no real secrets, still considers William Morgan who exposed the false pretences of the lodge as a "traitor." Or is that merely a sop thrown to Masonic readers to enable them to swallow such unpalatable truths? Again. Prof. C. says: "From the nature of the mysteries as a secret institution, they contained elements which could easily be turned to abuse." The article goes on to show into what unspeakable wickedness the Eleusinia led its devotees and its consequent overthrow. "At Christ's advent the heathen oracles were dumb because God had spoken. Mystery had passed away because the true Light had come into the world." That is sound doctrine, but why does the New Englander turn its heavy artillery against an enemy that has been dead a thousand years. and not even reserve a pistol shot for the living Eleusinia that is corrupting the youth and undermining the church? "And Gallio cared for none of those things." O, New Englander, "add to your faith, courage."

Degrees.

BY H. W. MARSH, M. D.

The majority of persons who first see an exposition of Freemasonry are very skeptical of its truth, and why should they not be? It is something almost incredible to think that ministers of the Gospel, doctors, lawyers, merchants, the fastidious dandy and the sober farmer or mechanic, all, without exception, must pass through the same disgraceful humiliation to become Masons; but the evidence is too overwhelming, and the facts set forth in Ronayne's "Hand Book" are fully sustained. We occasionally meet a Mason who flatly denies some little technicality in the book, because he has been initiated by some incompetent W. M. and failed to get the whole of Masonry. As for instance, a seceding Mason informed me that he was not required to remove his pantaloons, as there was nothing metallic about them; and he also wore one boot, hence a Mason who had never seen drawers or slippers furnished by the lodge would declare that part false, and deny the whole book.

Another Masonic dodge to beget skepticism in the uninitiated, is to ask, would you believe a stranger who has written a book to sell, rather than your neighbors whom you have known for years? This is a poser and the subject is generally dropped, unless the "cowan" insists upon an explicit denial, when the usual answer is, "he lies"; or a haughty refusal to converse any more on the subject closes the conversation. I conjecture that the "lie" they mean to charge him with, is that he promised the lodge that he wouldn't tell, and now he has told it all, for good and sufficient reasons on his part.

We sometimes get hold of Masonic testimony to confirm the truth of Bro. R.'s work and here I offer a little. I have a neat little circular published by John C. W. Bailey, manufacturer of Masonic regalia, 183 West Manroe St., Chicago, in which he gives a price list of "every article required for the use of lodges." I will mention a few as holding prominence in the "Hand Book," and it would seem, indispensable for the proper manufacture of Masons. The first article we find put down as "Officers collars;" these vary in price from one to twenty-five dollars. Aprons—linen; $4 per dozen; lambskin, at one $1 each, and a very fine satin one, $25. Jewels, twelve ps. plated, $30; coin silver, $60 to $150. Square, level, plumb and gauge (complete set), $5.50. Gavels $2.25. Trowels M. M., plated, $3.50. Low twelve bell, $15. Cable tows, $1.50. Hoodwinks, 50 cents; setting maul, $2.50 to $3.50. Canvas for third degree, $10. Drawers per pair $2. Slippers per pair $1.50. I could extend this list but perhaps not profitably; it can be seen that the articles above named, and the use of which Bro. R. so graphically describes, are really important items in the out fit of a Masonic lodge.

By this circular I find that the furniture, regalia, tools and necessary machinery for a lodge, including charter, can be purchased at the lowest price for $480.75. While those disposed to get the best, can be accommodated for $1,301 or more. I find however by the Voice of Masonry that there is another way to make Masons which is not so high-toned, yet they turn out Masons, and why not? for the obligation makes the Mason. But Geo. Frank Gouley can tell it well enough, so I will use his words. He says of Freemasonry:

"The degrees themselves are simple and plain enough, even when done with all the machinery necessary to make them impressive and beautiful; but when we come to see them done by workmen who do not know or feel what they are talking about, and with a lot of tin jewels, bare floors, no charts, no columns, a dry goods box for an altar; the floors not deafened, and the windows only a good cat's jump from the ground, so that the workmen must do their work in a whisper; the walls dirty and dingy; insufficient light and ventilation; uncomfortable seats; no proper apparel for the candidate; each member walking about and talking as he pleases without permission of the Master, the Master himself probably sitting with his feet upon a so-called pedestal, and smoking a pipe," etc.

Mr. Gouley waxes eloquent over the wrongs that Freemasonry suffers at the hands of its friends, but he says that Anti-masons "do not, and cannot be expected to comprehend our ceremonies, their secret teachings and principles." He says further of some Masonic teachers, "and the work is done by officers who do not know whether Hiram Abiff fell from a derrick and was killed, or whether he died of Bright's disease." Then he asks, "Is it any wonder that such 'Masons' so-called, never think of looking beneath the surface of our truly beautiful symbolism for those grand principles of thought which underlie the foundations of intelligent and refined society, governed by the lessons of a pure and exalted education?"

Now I should like to know what hinders Anti-masons from finding those "grand principles which underlie the foundations of intelligent and refined society?" And if Masonic sybolism is between the "so-called Masons" and those grand principles, to such an extent as to prevent all thought of looking beneath it, why not take the symbolism?

If Masons can find truth and beauty in historical lies, and foolish traditions, they must be gifted with very acute perceptions; and if to preserve these great truths from the vandalism of Anti-masons, they must resort to downright falsehood, and the meanest little equivocations by "good men," I think they pay too great a price for what Mr. Gouley calls "the divine philosophy of the principles of truth, justice, charity, intelligence and immortality taught in our degrees." "So mote it be."

Is a Violation of Masonic Obligations Perjury?

BY E. RONAYNE.

Mr. Editor:—There is a great deal said now-a-days, in fact a great deal of what may be lawfully termed clap-trap is indulged in by men calling themselves Freemasons, on the subject of the violation of Masonic obligations. Men who secede from the institution of Freemasonry from motives of honest conviction, and who feel it their bounden duty to warn all others from affiliation with that iniquitous society, and who, in doing this must of very necessity expose the silly, nonsensical, so-called secrets of the order, are charged by the members of the craft with what they are pleased to call perjury, because as is alleged they have taken a solemn oath not to reveal these secrets.

Considering that this question should be fully and finally settled and set at rest, I will ask space enough in your columns to give my views of the subject, and to show that so far from a violation of the secret clause of the Masonic obligations being a perjury, or even a breach of trust in any manner or form whatever, that it is a sacred duty which every Mason owes to his God, his country, his neighbors, his family, and himself to make known to the world at large the deceit, the falsehood, the hypocrisy, the blasphemy and the glaring wickedness silently and secretly lurking beneath the heathen ceremonies as well as the grips and pass-words of speculative Freemasonry.

And now to enter upon the investigation of this question, allow me first of all to ask. What is perjury? In what does perjury consist? What is the meaning of the term? I turn to Webster.

"Perjury—False swearing, the act or crime of wilfully making a false oath when lawfully administered; or the crime committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding to a person who swears wilfully, absolutely, and falsely in a matter material to the issue."

Now then how does a violation of the secret clause of the Mason's obligation tally with this definition of the word perjury as given by the world's great lexicographer? Here it will be observed that perjury consists: 1st, in false swearing; 2nd, in wilfully making a false oath when lawfully administered; and 3rd, in wilfully, absolutely, and falsely swearing in a matter material to the issue, when the oath is lawfully administered in some judicial proceeding. In which of these particulars, if in any, is perjury committed by disclosing the abominable villainy lying concealed beneath the signs, tokens, and grips of the grog-shop emanation known to-day under the false name of Freemasonry? In none whatever. There is in the first place no legal authority for administering such an oath in the Masonic lodge. Neither the so-called Grand Lodge, the Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master, the District Deputy Grand Master, nor the Worshipful Master of a lodge has the smallest, the most infinitesimal particle of authority from any officer in or belonging to this or any other free government to administer any such an oath. There is no law, statute, or precedence on record in any statute book on earth which can in the most indirect possible manner be interpreted or construed as supporting such a claim. The Masonic oath is administered without sanction of law, and hence it is just as void as an oath would be when administered on election day by a man who had not qualified to act as notary, or by a man in acknowledging a deed who had no authority under the law to administer an oath. How then, in the name of truth and common sense can the violation of such an oath in any manner whatever or under any circumstances be termed perjury?

But notwithstanding that the Masonic oath is administered in all lodges without the least sanction of legal authority, yet is it not a fact that a seceding Mason swears falsely when he reveals the so-called secrets of the craft, and hence according to Webster's first definition is he not a perjurer nevertheless? Why, it might as well have been claimed that any one of the Missouri train robbers and midnight marauders who would violate the wicked oath which bound him to his pals in crime would be guilty of perjury. Suppose any one of a band of horse-thieves, house-breakers, pickpockets or gamblers were to turn state's evidence and disclose the haunts and evil-workings of his gang, whichever it may be, would that man, thus violating the secret oath which bound him to his brothers in crime be considered as guilty of perjury because he exposed the evil deeds of a society which he found from bitter experience to be detrimental to the good order and well-being of society. Such an idea is too absurd to be even considered for a single moment. There is no man, Mason or non-Mason, who is at all worthy of the name that will for an instant try to maintain any such proposition. Such an act on the part of a criminal is even perfectly lawful and praiseworthy, and his evidence in legal proceedings is always eagerly sought after, and most highly prized by the state and nation in prosecuting and punishing his companions in guilt. And again, it is a well-known principle in law and of which any lawyer will inform you, that no oath or obligation is legally or morally binding, or is binding in any manner or under any circumstances whatever if that oath or obligation be administered through misrepresentation, falsehood, or fraud, and every Masonic obligation, even that of the first or Entered Apprentice degree, being always and everywhere administered and assumed through misrepresentation and fraud, and under false pretenses, it follows beyond a question that no Masonic obligation can be legally and morally binding, and hence a violation of these obligations must be not only lawful, but in fact the bounden duty of every right-thinking man and Mason.

But is it a fact, and can this fact be positively proven that the Masonic obligations are administered under false pretenses and misrepresentations? Is the candidate in every Masonic lodge deceived by authority of Masonry in regard to the nature of every obligation, this deception being practiced through the Worshipful Master? Is it a fact that while generally speaking there is no coercion employed, yet the candidate before taking his obligation, and while standing blindfolded in front of the altar, receives positive assurance from the Worshipful Master respecting the nature of the obligation he (the candidate) is about to assume, and which assurances are afterwards discovered upon even the slightest examination to be absolutely and positively false and untenable, and that by strictly adhering to these Masonic obligations one must of necessity, from the very force of circumstances, violate every known duty which he may owe to God, to his country, his neighbor, his family, or himself? And finally, is it a fact and is the truth of this fact beyond the possibility of a doubt that the candidate under the same misprehension and through the same misrepresentations is induced to bind himself under a death penalty in various barbarous forms in case he should ever violate his obligation or any part thereof under any circumstances whatever? All this is true as every Freemason will know, and hence how a violation of any promise or obligation given or obtained in such a manner and under such conditions, and which from the very nature of these obligations lead to such fearful consequences can be otherwise than laudable, how in fact such a violation can be perjury is more than any man, Mason or otherwise, can or dare attempt to maintain.

In my next letter then I shall call attention to these Masonic obligations in their order, beginning with the Entered Apprentice and shall clearly demonstrate that they are fraudulently administered, fraudulently assumed, illegal, and their various requirements in direct violation of every known duty, whether to God or to man.

Endurance.

'Tis bitter to endure the wrong
Which evil hands and tongues commit:
The bold encroachments of the strong,
The shafts of calumny and wit,
The scornful bearing of the proud,
The sneers and laughter of the crowd.

And harder still it is to bear
The censure of the good and wise,
Who, ignorant of what you are,
Or blinded by the slanderer's lies,
Look coldly on, or pass you by
In silence, with averted eye.

But, when the friends in whom you trust
As steadfast as the mountain rock,
Fly, and are scattered like the dust,
Before misfortune's whirlwind shock,
Nor love remains to cheer your fall,
This is more terrible than all.

But, even this, and these—aye, more
Can be endured, and hope survive;
The noble spirit still may soar,
Although the body fail to thrive;
Disease and want may wear the frame,
Thank God! the soul is still the same.

Hold up your head, then, man of grief,
Nor longer to the tempest bend,
Or soon or late must come relief—
The coldest, darkest night will end;
Hope in the true heart never dies!
Trust on—the day-star yet shall rise.

Conscious of purity and worth,
You may with calm assurance wait
The tardy recompense of earth;
And e'en should justice come too late,
To soothe the spirit's homeward flight,
Still heaven, at last, the wrong shall right.

Our National Festival.

The bare mention of the word, the Old Thanksgiving Day—what a power has it to revive the pleasantest reminiscences, and recall the bright scenes of other days in many hearts! It transports them to the home of their childhood. It takes them at once into the presence of the father and mother who, it may be, for many years have been sleeping in the grave. It recalls their smiles of affectionate greeting, their tones of cheerful welcome; tones and smiles such as none but they could give. Every image of peace, contentment, competence, abundance, and joy comes back spontaneously on each return of the grateful festival. It is a day not indeed heralded and emblazoned, like the corresponding festivals in our ancestral land, in all the pomp and glory of song. It has not been celebrated like Christmas, by the imperial song of Milton, the dove-like notes of Herbert, or the classic beauty of Keble. Connected with it are no superstitious rites handed down from time immemorial; no revelings in baronial halls; no decorations of churches or houses with garlands of evergreens; no shoutings; no carols; no riotous dissipations. Simpler in its nature, humbler in its pretensions, better suited to a people of a more recent origin, it is set apart to the exercise of those home-bred affections, those "honest fireside delights," which are greener than laurel or fir-tree, and which from a natural affinity, most closely harmonize with the sweet sanctities of our holy religion. As the day drew on anticipation was busy in the young and the old. The aged pair, from beneath whose shelter their children, one after the other, had gone forth into the world, leaving them alone, looked forward with delight to the prospect of being surrounded once more by their numerous progeny on a day of gladness; and children separated widely apart, and already grown familiar with life's perplexities and cares, hailed with pleasure the "yearly sacrifice" when they should all rally again around the paternal hearth, and renew their faith and affection among the long-cherished scenes of their childhood. Happy was the venerable sire, who went up that day to the house of God, in company with his children and children's children, and who sat down to the table of plenty with his whole household, in health, peace and contentment. If any were detained from the gathering by stern necessity, places were prepared for them as if they were present, in order that all might feel how closely they were linked by invisible sympathies; and the absent ones wherever on sea or land they roamed, were as "a bird wandering from his nest," or crippled in the time of migration, looking far away, and longing to join himself unto his fellows.—Dr. Adams.

Christians at the Polls.

One of your correspondents from Pennsylvania very properly says in the Cynosure of October 18th, that it is not only our duty to pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom in the world, but also to vote for Christ's kingdom in politics. The old cry, he says, that religion and politics have nothing to do with each other is false. "Politics not founded on the Bible must be full of confusion; and the idea that men can be Christians and practice corruption in politics is the bane of our nation."

In an arricle in the Christian Mirror of Maine, by Rev. Henry T. Cheever, entitled "The Temperance Problem to be solved by Christian voters," are some important and cheering thoughts:

The article says it is not possible to effect the desired redemption from the horrors of intemperance until the traffic in intoxicating drinks be thoroughly suppressed by law. And further, that it is not possible to obtain and enforce such a law until Christian voters unite as a party in the demand for it, out of conscience toward God and benevolence to men. And then follows this passage which is quoted verbatim: "When Secretary Seward, in his day, was once asked in private which of the great parties he thought would, in the end, get the ascendency in the land, he answered that it would be that party or body of men which could endure the longest. And, as he looked over the land that body seemed to him to be the Christians of the land, because of the fixedness and enduring nature of their principles. The sagacity of the astute secretary was to be commended. And the Christians of the land may thank him for that answer, which they have only to do their duty at the polls and in politics generally, as well as at the throne of grace, to see realized and the problem of the temperance reform happily solved. The education of the people for which Neal Dow and others so earnestly argue, to look upon the liquor traffic with the same feelings of loathing and abhorrence with which they once regarded slavery and the slave trade, is going on; and Christian voters are fast advancing to the position of refusing to vote for any man to any office who will not favor the summary extinguishment of the liquor traffic by law. But we do well, in our natural anxiety for immediate results, to remember those motto-words of our living American poet.

"Be patient, oh, be patient! the germs of mighty thought Must have their silent under-growth, and in the earth be wrought!"

As the French Abbe said to the Minister of State, in regard to an important concession, "Nous pouvons attendre,"—we can wait—so we can wait. Men sure of victory can always afford to wait. The Christian can wait for the evangelization of the world, for he knows that blessed consummation is sure in the end, and in God's good time, whatever of disaster and delay intervene. So can we wait for the suppression of the baleful liquor traffic by law, and the triumph of truth and humanity, because we are sure it is at hand."

After we have done our whole duty it becomes us trustfully and particularly (rejoicing evermore) to wait for the salvation of the Lord. Joseph doubtless thought that he would soon be released from prison after the chief Butler was restored but a long period of humble service was a necessary preparation for his future work.

The Decline of Religious Sentiment in New England.

We know a village in New England that has maintained an Episcopal church with more or less efficiency for some sixty years. It was once filled with a large congregation, say from two to three hundred souls. The population of the town at that time was one-third larger than it is now, the more enterprising portion of the people having died out or emigrated to the West and other quarters.

The social and religious sentiment of the parish was at one period decidedly opposed to secret societies. At a later period this sentiment gradually subsided; but still the major part of the pillars of the church were not members of secret societies. As time wore on, however, one became a Mason, another an Odd-fellow, another still a granger, and so on, until finally the church is entirely closed, with no immediate prospect of ever being opened again. And so far as we can judge, the church in all the smaller towns of New England has had a similar history; it has gradually declined, while secret societies, with their mock priests and pharisaical religious services have been on the increase. The initiation fees and assessments paid to secret organizations might not perhaps be sufficient to maintain the church; lodge service is cheaper, while the qualifications for admission to the "Grand Lodge above" are less difficult of attainment than those exacted by the church as a means of salvation. The lodge, like Romanism, seems to offer more advantageous terms than those exacted by the Bible, and the tired sons of the Puritans seem inclined to wink or be hoodwinked, and accept these terms without a murmur.

To such an extent has this change in sentiment been carried, that the power of the lodge over the minds of the people has become as great as that of the Jesuit priesthood over the minds of France. The New England mind has lost its ancient freedom and healthy, liberty-loving tone. It is exceedingly difficult to get an article into any of its newspapers against the lodge. We know of one case where thirty dollars had to be paid to have an article against Masonry, moderate in length and tone, published in a paper which prides itself on being "liberal." The few of us in New England who venture to write against the lodge have to send our articles to Western newspapers to have them published, so completely is the press here under the benumbing and degrading influence of secret societies. We doubt if in any quarter of the world, no not even in England, where Masonry was invented, nor in the South where it is used to intimidate and kill Republicans, is the mind more completely under the inquisitorial power of the lodge than it is here in New England. Men fear political and social ostracism, and a loss in business from a loss of its favor. An organization that while it secures to you the smiles of men; protects illicit business; sustains broken-down reputations; gives good suppers; decks itself in showy toggery, and, when this life is over provides you with a grip for an easy admissio.. into heaven, has powers to rule men that are hardly surpassed by those of Jesuitry itself.

This organization is arrogant in the exercise of power, and tramples upon law like a despot. Where religious sentiment declines of course the laws must become weakened. In Vermont, where the lodge exists right in the face of a law that proscribes it, but where the lodge has had the political control of the State nevertheless, the law is run over with graceless impunity. Neither a bank nor a bar-room nor a political convention, nor a legislative body conceives it necessary to abide by the laws of the State. To such an extreme is this spirit of lawlessness carried that as one of its last results the Constitution of the United States has been utterly ignored in the election of a Federal office-holder to the position of Presidential elector. This lawless act may determine the election in favor of Tilden, which of course the Republican party does not desire, athough its ruler, the lodge, may do so.

The question arises whether this apparent stumble of the lodge will occasion it the loss of the favor of respectable men. It is possible that it may lead the Republican party to make a show of sending Masonry to the rear for a time. It is possible that open reform clubs (so-called) will be formed, the officers of which may not be Masons; but Masons will enter the clubs and covertly control them. Indeed it looks as if reform clubs were merely to serve the purpose of throwing a mantle over Masonry, for a time, until public suspicion is allayed when it may come forth again.

Every American ought to be assured of one thing, viz.: that no reform is possible that does not begin with the entire expulsion of Masonry from our religious and political affairs; and the only possible way of effecting this in a free country is to vote against Masonic candidates for office on all occasions and forever. This is the only law that Masons cannot violate, and which will prevent them from ruling and ruining the Republic.

Religious Intelligence

In Virginia City Nevada, Ah For, a Chinese missionary, has erected a chapel with money furnished by his countrymen, 150 of whom were present at the dedication, most of them converts to Christianity. What a pity the Christian people of this country cannot give an open Bible to the Chinese on the Pacific coast, instead of treating them with the inhumanity so often witnessed.

—The different denominations have the following list of Theological seminaries in this country: The Congregationalists have seven, the Presbyterians eighteen, the Methodists eleven, the Baptists nineteen, the Unitarians and Universalists two each, the Episcopalians seventeen, the Lutherans fourteen, the Roman Catholics eighteen and other denominations seventeen, making in all one hundred and twenty-five. Of these probably 100 are evangelical and have from 3,000 to 4,000 young men preparing to preach the everlasting gospel. Now should not the prayers of the church be given that these schools may be visited with the demonstration of the Spirit and with power and every student be wholly consecrated to the awful work of the ministry.

—The great work of Gospel grace begun in Chicago is spreading wonderfully throughout the Northwest through the efforts of the evangelists, Whittle and Bliss in Michigan, Needham and Stebbens in Wisconsin, and Morehouse, Inglis, Rockwell and Morton at various points in Illinois. Every week adds to the good news of the week before of salvation from sin experienced by hundreds of rejoicing souls.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, has left his office for a few weeks with assistants to look after an ingathering of souls in a somewhat neglected district in Senaca Co., N. Y. The gospel work called for special work a month ago and a protracted effort will be continued for some time. May the Lord bless these laborers in his harvest more abundantly than they have dared to hope.

—The new Publishing House of the Wesleyan church at Syracuse, N. Y., is now enclosed and ready for glazing and interior finishing. The building excites universal admiration, and has been put up without incurring debt. This great work completed will make a denominational headquarters where will center influences of untold value to Christian reform.

—Rev. Samuel Collins, the genial and true-hearted superintendent of the United Presbyterian Board of Publication, at Pittsburgh, has accepted a call for a portion of his time, to the pastoral care of the Ohio United Presbyterian Church, New Scottsville, Pa., in the Presbytery of Frankfort.

—The United Presbyterian mission at Knoxville, Tenn., among the freedmen is reported in a flourishing condition. There are seventy-five students in the collegiate institution and eighty-one pupils in the Sabbath school connected with it.

—Rev. A. Worth, of Albion, Ind., a well-known and staunch reformer, is holding special services, building up the church spiritually while its material walls are being completed. A number of new Wesleyan churches are being built, each a pillar for reform.

—Rev. A. Blauvelt, D. D., whose article, in Scribner's Monthly, of September last, on "Protestant Vaticanism" has been widely noticed, has just been suspended from the Gospel ministry by the Classis of Kingston, of the Reformed (Dutch) church. Dr. Blauvelt made no defense, but acknowledged his "very decided disagreement with the received views as to the canonical books of Scripture and their authority."

Reform News.

Morning Sun and Mediapolis, Iowa.—The Expositions There.

MEDIAPOLIS, Iowa,
Nov. 21. 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As none of the other brethren have reported Mr. Ronayne's meeting here, I send you this brief account.

The opportunity of hearing this Anti-masonic champion, for which many in this community had long been waiting, came at last. Friday evening, Nov. 3, we took the train for Morning Sun, where the first meeting was announced. Calling at Rev. C. D. Trumbull's, where Mr. Ronayne was quartered, we had an interesting conversation with him and we think learned wherein his great strength lies. Like John B. Gough, on temperance, and Martin Luther on Romanism; his own past experience has intensified his convictions to an uncommon degree. His subject has taken entire possession of him. He feels intensely himself and does not fail to make others feel after him. He is ably working out one great idea, and that is to deal out death blows to that most blasphemous organization—Freemasonry.

His exposition in Morning Sun was given in the large stone church in the center of the town, and long before the time it was crowded to its utmost capacity; every seat, all the standing room, even to the crowding of the pulpit and window sills. Many of the craft were present and a large portion of the audience were women and children.

For nearly four hours Mr. Ronayne held this audience in wrapt attention. The most perfect order prevailed to the close. Quoting from the highest Masonic authorities he proceeded to scale off one by one all their false and vain-glorious pretentions and when he came to initiate "Rev. Dr. Willson" in the first degree, the candidate's seminude condition and the degrading and heathenish ceremonies made the institution so disgustingly silly and blasphemously profane that it was almost too much for the audience to endure.

Mr. Ronayne lectured again on Saturday and Monday evenings keeping up the same unabated interest to the close.

Monday morning he lectured to a very appreciative audience in Sharon church, three miles South of Morning Sun. Here also after an introductory lecture for about two hours he initiated another candidate leaving as before an impression of loathing and disgust of Masonry; indeed the general impression made by these expositions seemed akin to that made by witnessing an execution.

You would not wish to see it again, and the great wonder is how men claiming to be Christians can submit to these debasing and heathenish ceremonies.

On Tuesday afternoon he lectured in the U. P. church at Mediapolis. This is a town on the R. R. two miles west of Kossuth, formerly the seat of Yellow Spring College. With a community high-toned and moral, and few who do not make a profession of religion, one would suppose that Masonry could not flourish, yet it has taken deep root in all the churches except the U. P. and Covenanter; and it has remained undisturbed for years—many of the leading men are Masons, others are in a position even more to be deplored that of neutrality and indifference, afraid to speak out for fear of injuring their business. When we proposed to bring Mr. Ronayne here we were earnestly warned not to do so or the Masons would make serious trouble; but he came and for the time opened the shutter and let in the light on this cage of unclean birds. His lecture, which lasted over three hours, we considered the best of the course. He showed most conslusively the perfect parallelism between Masonry and Romanism; also giving a verbal exposition of the three degrees which we felt was as much as an intelligent, refined audience could endure. Organizing the lodge and actually initiating a candidate is too hideously profane, though after all it may be the best way to convince the public of the heathenish nature of the institution. Some of the craft had the fortitude to quietly hear Mr. Ronayne to the end, but several unable to bear his scathing argument left the church, muttering in true Masonic style some imprecation on the speaker as they closed the door. The order has opened its heaviest batteries, which consists in heaping every kind of abuse on the man Ronayne, while not one solitary argument has been produced in defense of the lodge.

Our prayer is that Ronayne may be abundantly prospered in the great work of exposing to the light this dark and giant system of imposture. M. A. GAULT.

Resolutions of the Western Penn'a Convention.

The convention lately held at Sandy Lake, Pa., passed the following, which were crowded out of last week's report:

WHEREAS, There is a growing tendency in our country among certain classes of citizens to form combinations for purposes of their own of a secret character, bound by oaths and imprecations of the most fearful kind, and

WHEREAS, Many of these associations have already shown themselves to be most dangerous and destructive to the welfare and very existence of society, and others have excited the greatest suspicions and fears in regard to their purpose and character, and

WHEREAS, any organizations acting in darkness and sworn to secrecy, afford a favorable base of operations upon which to erect any conspiracy, and an instrumentality well adapted to screen and cover the tracks of every kind of evil workers, and protect from the hands of justice the greatest criminals; therefore,

Resolved, That the danger arising from these associations is so great and pressing as to seriously alarm and awaken the most active efforts of every patriotic and Christian citizen.

Resolved, That the time has come that all friends of honesty and openness should openly combine to fortify and protect themselves and society from these secret combinations.

Resolved, That it is unsafe to entrust the liberty and life of this Republic in the hands of men who are members of these secret combinations, and who have sworn oaths which they consider more solemn and binding than any other which the state can impose upon them, and therefore that the true friends of our country should see to it that such men be neither nominated nor elected to offices of trust in the nation.

Resolved, That the church of Christ, which "is the light of the world," cannot consistently have fellowship with the "unfruitful works of darkness," by permitting members of its communion to enter into these leagues and conspiracies which have stolen the livery of heaven to cover their deeds of darkness and serve the devil in.

Resolved, That we warn the youth of our country that the inducements held out to lead them into these orders are but a bait to lure them into the snares and traps that lie hid beneath, and that they are endangering their own personal liberty, their relations to their families, their church and their nation.

Correspondence.

Our Centennial Letter.

Nov. 10th, 1876.

To-day closes the great Centennial Exhibition, and with it the opportunity of observing any more of the strange developments of character under the despotic influence of that usurper over the human will and conscience to which the free men of America, in such numbers, are bowing their heads in slavish subserviency. I had a very inadequate idea of the vast importance of the work which you were engaged, until I met in such numbers, and in such strangely inconsistent variety the uniformly pernicious effects upon the declarations even of the Scriptures, not to speak of other truths, such as have been told by members of that deluded fraternity, who repented and confessed their sin, and therefore desired to prevent others from being ensnared. I shall now give a short statement of the events since I last wrote. Perhaps I may ask you by and by to let me write my young friends again before saying farewell as your correspondent.

A lady espied your stand and expressed astonishment at its purpose. "Why! my father is a Mason, and is now an old man, and is as good a man as ever lived. Oh! I'm in favor of Freemasonry!" Your readers may transfer such language as the above to men who had been slaveholders and such ladies would be convinced of the excellence of slavery; or, if a kind father keeps a drunkard factory, the excellence of that calling would be equally proved! We are willing, however to make all due allowance for a false reasoning arising from such an amiable feature of humanity as a daughter's love. If such love tries to cover such a multitude of sins as must have been committed in the years of obedience to sinful oaths, and a worship of God without Christ in the lodge, how much greater must be the power of such love when the father's course has been free from such a snare and blight upon the purest aspirations of Christian manhood.

Your fund must be credited with $2 from the Rev. Howard Malcolm, D. D., and one each from Rev. A. B. Hubbard and Wm. H. Sawyer, who thus again prove that their hearts are in the cause. Not less so do we regard the welcome offering of 25 cents from our excellent sister Mrs. A. Cole, of Tiffin, O., by the hands of her nephew, who bravely sought us till he found us. But what deformity is this which appears before us? Do we hear aright? A Royal Arch QUAKER Mason and his wife! Of course remarks were elicited by such a compound, and the attempt was made to impart such curatives as the case required. We conversed courteously together until others began to cluster around us. That appeared to cause uneasiness to this R. A. M., and so they passed away while I gazed in amazement! Can it be that the Quaker swore? or that the lodge admitted him on his affirmation? Either way, they would be the very same in principle. The affirmation would be profanity the more grotesque. Let us see how he can get out of the dilemma. "Well," he may say, "as oaths were authorized in the Old Testament, and as Solomon's Temple was built before Christ came, I can swear as easily as any other Mason!" and he may demand, "Why not?" or, if he shall not thus cut the connexion with the New Testament, as all Masons virtually do by entering the ancient lodge, then he must affirm, as others swear, "to conceal and never reveal," etc., under penalties unknown to the civil law. Shall we here fancy him using the subterfuge that he is less guilty than his swearing brethren, if he still fancies there is guilt in taking an oath? He certainly sanctions the whole of their proceedings by his inconsistent course.

Now that there is guilt in the Masonic oath is to us clear as the light of the sun. True, we have never taken the oath, nor ever desired to do so, and were never blackballed, although Masons have sometimes ascribed this as the cause of our reasoning against them, but that which we regard as the very foundation of the error and sin of the Masonic oath is here: The Divine law specifies distinctly, Lev. 5: 4, 5, that whatsoever it shall be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty, in one of these—that is whether good or evil—the guilt lies in taking the oath concerning anything hid, and the guilt is consummated "when he knows of it;" on which he is required to confess that he has sinned, and make the specified offering under the law. But this modern tempter, Freemasonry, whispers with delusive power, "never tel our secrets, or if you do, declare you consent to have your tongue torn out by the roots!" Any schoolboy can see that these two rules must conflict, and the not uncommon experience in our courts demonstrates the fact that they do.

Three Reverend looking gentlemen assumed the style of inquirers and received as full answers to their inquiries as the verbal source could supply. I fancied an air of amusement in the face of a young gentleman with them, who I thought might know that one or two of the three were Masons. One answered that I regarded him as really welcoming, and assenting to the Scripture quoted, whatsoever a man swears to that is hid from him is a wrong act, and it has often surprised me to find how ready Masons, especially if preachers, were to deny the guilt of the act. "Oh," said one, "guilty don't mean guilty there," and the same spirit often uttered words of similar character. Somewhat remarkable in this respect was a Rev. M. E. of thirty-two degrees, from Michigan. He rejoiced in Masonry. "Yes, it was a religion so far. It taught men that the Bible was from God. Oh, sir, only get men to believe in the Bible, and then it is very easy to get them to believe in Christ!" I must confess that the assurance with which such words were uttered, while he must have been conscious that they would be equally true if applied to the Koran and Mohammed on Masonic principles, caused a feeling of despondency concerning the Christian candor of the speaker, and I found a rather startling solution of the case in the judgment of a highly intelligent gentleman to whom I mentioned it when he coolly responded, "A Methodist minister who takes thirty-two degrees in Masonry is either a rogue or a fool." Shall we not rather try in charity to consider him a dupe? But oh, what a delusion it does seem to say that it is easy to have men believe in Christ when Masonry gets them into its secret den. How opposite are the first principles of the Gospel of Christ for all the world, and those of that other gospel, Masonry, whose blessings are received by those who pay their fees and swear to "conceal and never reveal" its wicked inventions.

But here is another who is startled at the sword of the Spirit, wielded by unclerical hands. "I am a clergyman, sir. I know the word of God. Those verses in Lev. cannot have the interpretation you put upon them, and as for Masons mutilating that passage (2 Thess. 3: 6 and 12, by leaving out the name of Christ), you are a slanderer, sir," and off he went in high dudgeon. I must say, however, that I regarded the last as a more sincere man than the M. E. previously named, and that in honest ignorance he vented his indignation on your agent. If he had had a little more patience he might have had "more light."

Another Canadian arrived with evident purpose and got some anti-secret writings, perhaps the first he had ever seen. These Canucks need the Cynosure light as well as our people. In the very heart of their country the Roman Catholic church holds them, as it were, by the throat. Arrayed against it may always be found the Orangemen and other professedly Protestant secretisms, from whose ranks Freemasonry seeks support, or rather, perhaps, Freemasonry assumes the garb of Protestantism, while it undermines its principles. But as these provinces have self-government, like our States, Quebec, while nursing Romanism, is powerless to extend it and the Dominion holds a place in relation to that church very similar to that of the United States. The war of opinion will continue in both countries under very similar circumstances, and the time may come ere long, yes, now is, when Romanism in both will form a Union for its own ends. But alas for either or both countries, if they shall welcome Freemasonry as an ally in defense of their civil and religious liberty. Shall we not rather hope that the influence of a free Gospel shall secure true liberty to the people on both sides of the line. God's providence will, however, develop true wisdom, and we may safely rely on him.

Among those friends who have cheered us in the closing days of the great Centennial Exposition were a lady and gentleman from Marion, Ind. The father of this gentleman and himself had voted the Anti-masonic ticket. Also a zealous couple from Pa., and one from Farmer Village, N. Y. But it was Joseph Travis of the Free Methodist church at Albion, Pa., who drew up the first resolutions for the cause in that quarter. Mr. Andrus, Rev. W. Lamont of Ind., W. H. Parker of Elmira, N. Y., Frank M. Miller of Warsaw, Elbert Marcy, Del., who left a parcel of printed matter which was distributed, Robert Speer of Pa., and we have particular pleasure in referring to an agent of the Bible Society in California and W. C. Foster of Batavia, N. Y., and last, though not least, was Rev. J. P. Stoddard himself, who enjoyed very much a half day's management of the vessel as she neared her port, breasted the stream and saluted friends and foes. He met some old friends and found new ones, a very pleasing thing to any one, but I fancy there are not many who receive and confer greater pleasure in this respect than your esteemed General Agent.

I ought not, perhaps, to close without telling that on the evening of the 9th the fireworks were most magnificent, and on the 10th it was rainy, but that the close was otherwise all that could be desired. President Grant gave the signal, and all was over. Sic transit gloria mundi.

THOS. HODGE.

That Baraboo Case.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I notice in your issue of the 9th inst., Mr. Hinman reports another Ellen Slade case at Baraboo, Wisconsin, but this time with a far different denouement as regards the fate of the seducer. Miss Slade had no male relative to avenge her wrongs, but the Baraboo girl had. The scoundrel guilty of her undoing and untimely usherance into an unknown eternity, lies himself close to death's door, and soon may be called hence to account for his crimes at that dread tribunal before which no mystic word, sign, or grip was ever imparted, and from the just punishment of which no guilty soul has ever escaped. The arraignment and acquittal of this vile wretch, by his lodge, because the crimes he committed were perpetrated on a girl who happened not to be the wife, widow, daughter, mother or sister of another Master Mason, conclusively establishes the oft-repeated and incontrovertible truth that Masonry is subversive of every sound and correct principle known to morality, law and justice. The Baraboo lodge has slapped in the face the lying Masonic pretense that "Masonry is the most moral institution the world ever saw." It has furnished undeniable and sufficient evidence that it is the most immoral and vicious curse ever inflicted upon the children of men. Indeed, that it has been truly said "that a Masonic lodge is a standing insult to every virtuous woman living in the community, of its existence." By its conduct that lodge has proclaimed that seduction and murder perpetrated by Masons upon the people of the outer world, are no crimes in Masonry, and that a Mason guilty of such crimes cannot be punished by any law known to the institution! And it now remains to be seen whether the people of the outer world will shut their eyes and say Amen to this additional intance of Masonic aggression upon their rights, rather than hold the vile institution to a strict accountability and a sturdy demand for unconditional abatement.

Mr. Hinman informs us that this case is likely to involve "a full legal investigation of the Master Mason's obligation," to which I respond Amen, so mote it be. But how is that obligation to be proven? Certainly men who are sworn "to conceal and never reveal," and who adhere to the purposes of that oath, will not be a very reliable kind of evidence to evolve "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the the truth" in this regard. Seceders must be looked up. Men who value the commands of God rather than the edicts of mortal man. And of such for the whole State of Wisconsin, your "Roll of Honor" furnishes but two examples, to wit: Dennison Alcott of Brodhead, and Albert E. Watkins of Baraboo. Others are needed, and who can now fail to see the all-pervading necessity there is for ascertaining and disclosing the name and residence of every outspoken seceded Mason within the length and breadth of the United States?

Here is a young man, in danger of being sacrificed to Masonic vengeance, for having avenged the seduction and death of his sister by an attempt to slay her seducer and murderer! Shall he be sacrificed? It must not be. For his protection and the protection of all alike, let the friends of our cause, every one of them, in Wisconsin, set actively at work and obtain the names and address of every seceded Mason in that State and report the same to the Cynosure office forthwith for publication. Let us make it interesting to Masons not to seduce and murder the people of the outer world. Let us give them to understand that if they must needs commit crime, they must confine it to their own household; but let them not commit crime at all.

In the trial of that young man's cause, no Mason should be permitted to serve on bench or panel. Before issue is joined, he, or his counsel for him, should give notice to the court of the reservation of every exception in his favor known to law, and that among these reserved exceptions is the right of challenge to the favor against all adhering Masons serving on bench or panel by reason of the extraordinary obligations they are under as to each other, and which obligations preclude a faithful and impartial discharge of sworn duty in judge or juror. If Masons are permitted to serve in this case, that young man will rue the hour such fatal mistake was made. He should be warned against it, and be firm in his resolve for their exclusion. It is his only hope, his only safety. All adhering Masons are his enemies, and any pretense to the contrary if indulged by him will prove to him a snare and delusion. Exclude cable-tow influence from the courts if justice is to be meted out, or otherwise it cannot be done. John Quincy Adams in a letter to Edward Livingston in May 1833, stated:

"It has been judicially decided in the State of New York and of Rhode Island, that a person under Masonic obligations must be set aside as disqualified to serve upon a jury in cases where one of the parties is a Mason and the other is not. From the letter of his obligations he cannot be impartial and although some Masons may understand them otherwise, neither the court, nor the party whose rights and interests are staked upon the trial, can have any assurance that the trial will be fair."

Stearns in his letters on Freemasonry, pages 47 and 48, declares that men "under the influence of Masonic principles and obligations are not qualified to act as impartial witnesses or jurors in a case where Masonry or a brother Mason is concerned." He adds, "this has been decided in a court of justice,, at the trial of Elihu Mather for a conspiracy to kidnap William Morgan, at the Orleans county Court (N. Y.) Nov. 11, 1829." That "on this trial several men were called as jurors who were Masons;" that "they were objected to on this account." That "triers were appointed by the court," and that "these triers after hearing the nature of Masonic oaths discussed, and the arguments on both sides, decided that such men were not impartial." That "seven of those called were rejected on this account." That "it was on this account that, in those days, the States of Vermont and Rhode Island enacted statutes prohibiting the administration of extra-judicial oaths." The New American Encyclopedia, Vol, 1, page 658 remarks: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party and his antagonist was not."

It may be here remarked in reference to the above questions, that in this case should the seducer die, and the State of Wisconsin thereby become the plaintiff and prosecutor in action on an indictment for murder or should the seducer survive and the action still go on in the name of the State under some other charge against the prisoner, such fact would not waive the attainder of Masonic obligations. The disqualification would continue and Masons still remain ineligible to bench and panel. The tie or interest created by obligations assumed between Masons would be asserted and felt through the partyship of the State, all the same as if one or any number of them were directly acting in the premises. It will not and cannot be contended that a brother of the seducer's by consanguinity of blood, would be an impartial judge or juror in the trial of this cause, so no more could be a brother Mason, for the Masonic tie or relationship is falsely made stronger than that of consanguinity. If consanguinity of blood is a bar, then Masonic obligation most assuredly is.

As an example of the fact that lodge legerdemain is a matter of, I might say, almost daily and constant practice in the routine of court proceedings, I quote an instance or two from Bain's "Freemasonry and kindred societies self-condemned." On pages 145-6, he remarks concerning the obligations and influence of secret societies on the judgment, that they "very often prevent impartial trials in our courts of justice." That "during the winter term of the court (1872) in the city of New Castle, Pennsylvania, when a jury was to be impanneled in a certain cause, you might have seen a certain lawyer with a list of jurors marked thus: Mr. C., a Mason; Mr. F., an Oddfellow; Mr. G., a Mason, etc. What did this mean? This lawyer, being a fraternity man, knew it would be greatly to the interest of his client to get Messrs C. and G. on that jury." He adds "since writing the above, a lawyer told me he lost a case in this court through members of secret orders on the jury, and after the trial was over he said to the opposing client: 'Mr. C. in that case the evidence was strong against you, the charge of Judge T. was strong against you, how did you come to win it?' Mr. C. replied: 'If the evidence and charge had been ten times as strong I would have beaten you with that jury.' Comment is needless." In which opinion I concur and so close my article. J. H. H. WOODWARD.

P. S.—Should a contest with Masonry in the court arise in this case, as quite likely it will, some one at Baraboo ought to report progress and particulars to the Cynosure for publication. I am certain it would very much interest the readers of that paper. I know it would me, for I feel a concern in the result. I wish to see if Masonry has power to commit evil and then punish its avengement. Don't forget to look up the seceders and report them. Such work is God's service. We will be rewarded in the great hereafter. W.

THE GAMBLER'S FRATERNITY.

But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the glorious light of the Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them - 2 Cor. 4: 3, 4.

Satan is said to be the "prince of the power of the air," who rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience. In the passage above he is called the god of this world, because he rules, controls the great mass of mankind. John says, "the whole world lieth in wickedness." All men who are not worshippers of the true God are under the control of the god of this world. Permit me to speak of some of the means Satan uses to blind the minds of them that are lost. The whole empire of darkness embraces a large field of operation; every oath-bound society, every gambling hell, every dram shop, with every sink of moral corruption and every means to blind the minds of mankind and lead them on to the pit of woe.

When Mr. Green, the reformed gambler, uncapt the empire of darkness, he made a revelation of the operations of the secret brotherhood of crimes most damnable. He gives an account of a man who went from Connecticut to Arkansas, with his wife, a most amiable lady, and several bright children. The man was a physician, but unfortunately a drunkard. The country was new; he built a log house with two rooms; one was the lodge room. The doctor was a member ot the brotherhood. In some of his unguarded moments he told some of their secrets. The members met in their lodge-room, got their victim in, barred the door, and had a midnight carousal. Next morning when the door was opened, the doctor was found a lifeless corpse, with his throat cut from ear to ear. Soon after this Mr. Green was in that region and there was at the time quite a stir about the matter. He was told by the craft that he had better not go to see the poor, friendless lady, as they said she was insane; but he went, notwithstanding, and found her perfectly sane. Her tale was a sad one. He gave her money and with it she made an effort to return to her friends in Connecticut with her children, but every obstruction was thrown in her way. Her letters were intercepted; she never reached her friends.

Green tells of other cases of robbery. One was of a talkative old man traveling to Ohio with $800 in his pocket. He put up at a hotel over night. The landlord made it his business to find out all he could; advised his guest where to stop next night, and wrote him a letter of introduction and read it to him. The letter appeared all right on its face, but a part was especially for his secret brother, which was written in cypher. The old man arrived at the place and was robbed of his money. This gambling brotherhood had a vocabulary of their own. They could talk over their business in the presence of outsiders with perfect security. It was part of their plan to get as many of their men as they could into the church, and into county, town and State offices. When we see the similarity of the secret Masonic brotherhood, and how many clergymen belong to it, the most charitable construction we can put on their conduct is that they are blinded by the god of this world.

Yours truly, E. DARLING.

STRONG DRINK A MURDERER.

HUDSON, Mich., Nov. 18, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Some time previous to the election I was at a stand to know what to do about voting the American ticket, but in our neighborhood in the township of Dover, a few days before election an old man upwards of seventy-two years old under the influence of liquor, drew his gun and shot his son, a man of about thirty-five, in his own house, causing his death in about an hour after. This was Friday the 3rd of November. The old man was arrested and taken to Adrian jail. On Sunday the fifth was the funeral at the Freewill Baptist church in Dover. The old man was bronght back to attend, and as he marched into the church followed by his family and took his seat in front of the pulpit the tears were coursing down the deep furrows in his cheeks and his frame would shake until it seemed as though his heart would break. It was the most heart-rending scene I ever saw. And this is the result of the manufacture and sale and use of intoxicating liquors, licensed by the party to which I belong. I was led to ask myself the question, 'Can I vote for a party that will license men to sell the infernal stuff to their fellow men until they become so overpowered as to shoot down their own sons in their own houses, and by it sending hundreds and thousands to perdition every day? The answer came, No, I can't. I will cast my vote against whiskey. And so the day before election I made a bargain with a Democrat who has a drunken father to vote the American ticket as it was Prohibition and Anti-masonic, which we did, he cast his in Dover, and I in Hudson, (Lenawee Co).

I am glad there is such a party that has such a platform, the best I ever saw, although we as a party, are, as it were, like the small cloud. Austin, the Masonic lecturer, says it is not larger than a man's hand; yet it may rise and spread until it shall sweep all before it, and I pray God that it may spread all over our land until all those dens of vice are broken up. Let us not fear, for the good word of God says there is "nothing covered that shall not be revealed and hid that shall not be known." Yours for the truth,

E. S. GRATTAN.

LESSON L.—DEC. 10, 1876.—SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts 11: 19-30. Commit 21-26; Primary Verse 23.

19. Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:

26 And when he had found him he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

27 And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cesar.

29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

30 Which also they did and sent it to the elders by the hand of Barnabas and Saul.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOV. 30, 1876.

In all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

Moody on Secret Societies.

On Thursday, Nov. 23, 1876, during the Christian Convention called by the Evangelists and the Chicago clergy, an hour was given to answering practical questions, when Mr. Moody read, "Is it consistent, with a deep state of spirituality, to unite with a secret society, and take an oath?"

Answer, as reported in the Chicago Tribune:

"Of course every man is free to do as he pleases. I would not belong to a secret society. [Applause.] I would not like to be yoked up with unbelievers in anything. I do not see how a Christian man can yoke himself in partnership with an unconverted man. I know a Christian who is in difficulty now. He formed a partnership with two unconverted men, and they have done something which will compromise him—break him—or make him do an infamous thing. God wants his people separate. They will have ten thousand times more influence when separate from the world. The cry ought to be raised all over this Western country, "Separation!" "separation!" People say, "If you take that stand—lift yourselves so high—a great many of these men will leave the church." Never mind. Hundreds will come in and take their places. There should be no compromise. Some men try to control the pulpits. "He don't preach according to our ideas. We don't want him." May the good Lord deliver us. [Applause.]

Answer as given by the Inter-Ocean:

"In secret my Master taught nothing. I can't speak for others, but I could not belong to any secret society. "Be ye not yoked with unbelievers," says Paul. Separate yourselves from the world and the things of the world. The cry 'separate" should be raised throughout the Northwest instead of "compromise" [Applause.] We should lose some of our church members but gain many better men. May God, in His love, deliver us from the many difficulties we have to contend against.

The above reports give a fair but imperfect idea of Mr. Moody's answer, which he was several minutes, rapid utterance, in delivering. A thousand or more ministers, of all denominations, were hanging on his lips, flanked on all sides, in the gallery and on the main floor, by other thousands, the throng of constant and eager listeners in the great Chicago tabernacle.

I was on the platform and saw that breathing, palpitating mass of humanity lean forward at the words "secret societies." Near Mr. Moody, at the front of the gallery, of course, were some prominent ministers who were Freemasons, pleased to be recognized by the mass of lodge-men in the great crowd as Masonic "brothers" who had stood the stripping and swearing to conceal crime in the lodges without a blush; and who had prayed "to the unknown god" of the lodge without a twinge. I have myself seen and heard O. R. Tiffany, D. D., read a written, Christless prayer at the corner-stone laying of the Douglas monument, with Andy Johnson and the Deputy Grand Master of Illinois as his brothers and superiors. And now a little while before I had seen and heard this same person arise and speak in the interest of the Gospel and the work of the Evangelists; and many in the crowd doubtless saw and knew these prominent public Masons, standing near and around the speaker. And I saw a thousand hands raised to as many ears, to catch and save the answer of the speaker to the question on secret societies. Will Mr. Moody face this sea? Will he flinch at the flash of this terrible battery of human eyes? At first he actually did flinch. "It is a free country," said he, "and every one can do as he pleases." True, Mr. Moody, true. So every one can dance, drink, or haunt brothels, "who pleases." But no sinner was reminded of his liberty to sin, by you, except the man who insults God by a spurious worship, and his country by his spurious oath. At these introductory words a shadow flitted over the thousand faces as when a light mist flits across the moon, and the Freemasons drew a long breath.

It was but an instant, and the evangelist righted. "But for myself," he continued, "I could not belong to a secret society. My Master 'in secret said nothing;' and the apostle Paul forbids me to 'be unequally yoked with unbelievers.'"

Till then there had been no applause that day; and now, it seemed as if there would be none. But as the great fact that Christ and Paul condemned the lodge, fell into the intelligence of the hearers, it seemed first as though their hearts began to beat aloud. A low, sweet breathing throb rose on all sides, until hands and feet beat time to it, and the solemn and subdued cadence took us forward, in fancy, to that "Hallelujah for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth;" which is to hymn the fall of Anti-Christ, and inaugurate the reign of peace.

I have seen men moved by eloquence, melted by pity, and thrilled with victory or hope; but this was neither. It was a burst of joy at the escape of entrammeled truth. It was a heart-gush of love for the brave and good man who dared to utter it. There was, in that applause, though thousands joined to swell it, who had not been Anti-masons, neither uproar nor clangor; but it was as if all the angels of God who were invisibly presiding in that Tabernacle, had at once rustled their wings with delight, that the atonement of Christ was asserted, and its human and Satanic substitutes were condemned.

Mr. Moody's testimony was complete. He left no one in doubt that adhering Freemasons, even those near him on the platform, must, in his judgment, either quit the lodge, or the church. The reporters were correct in making him say, "Never mind; hundreds of better men will come in and take their places when they are gone."

Mr. Moody is an evangelist. He is digging out and melting the cold rich ore imbedded in the hearts of the American ministry; and hammering the flinty rock of popular indifference and unbelief. He is but a proselyte of the gate. He is not instructed, as for years I was not. I knew neither the nature nor the strength of the beast which I attacked. He preaches the revivals under Moses, Elijah, and Ezra; and charges ministers to read "distinctly" as did Ezra, and give the people "the sense," and "cause them to understand" it. (Neh. viii. 8.) But Mr. Moody did not tell the people before him that that "Book of the Law," which Ezra read and explained, though based on supreme love to God and equal love to man, was chiefly directed against the false worships of that day; which have their exact counterparts in the secret altars and ceremonies of the lodge; and that there is not a blacksmith's shop and half a dozen houses on the American continent, not a hamlet between the oceans, where these idolatries are not practiced!

But as, with beautiful humility, he tells us that he has "got his eyes open," to the nature of mock fairs in churches; let us hope that soon his eyes will be fully open to the dark and damning idolatry of the lodge, to the fact that all Christless religions rites are idolatry, and in his own graphic phrase, false religions have "switched off" this globe from its God; and that Christ's atonement will never bring back those who practice mock religions; that Freemasons, like slave-holders, will stick to the holiest churches which will allow them; that secret societies, whose power over mind is in their rites, are the "groves" and "high places" of the Old Testament, brought down and modernized; that this dark system of substitutes for Christ's atonement will yield to no atonement less stringent than that of Moses toward the calf-worship, when he ground the idol and made the people drink its dust, or than those of Ezra and Nehemiah, Elijah and all the prophets, the burden of whose preaching was against these spurious altars; that we must treat them as Paul treated Elymas (Acts xiii. 10), or as Peter dealt with Simon Magus, who, like Masonic ministers now, was willing to alternate in his worship between Satan and Christ, and to make money by both. (Acts viii. 18.)

Meantime let us praise and glorify God that he is "pouring out his Spirit on all flesh;" is moving on the masses. And let us pray for these dear and beloved brethren, who will surely be assailed by the devils whom they cast out.

Centennial Thanksgiving Day.

On more than general principles the family circles where the Cynosure comes a guest to-day, have reason to keep this Thanksgiving Day. At no time of late years has the national festival come to us with louder calls for grateful praise, not even in those morning days when the angels of Emancipation and of Peace stretched their bright wings over the land and we all sang with loud voice the President's hymn—

"Give thanks, all ye people, Give thanks and rejoice."

This Centennial year we must thank God for living in. It is an era from which to reckon events. It is a great year to be born in or to die in, to be married in or to be joined to the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in; and one of the best to keep an honest old-fashioned Thanksgiving in; a year to make more memorable any crisis in our lives, to make stronger any right principles just discovered and adopted.

But we have other things for this day. We have not been drawn into the wicked follies of the lodge. We have seen the reform, dear to our hearts, enlarging, bringing within its grasp new forces of influence and power: the Publishing House interest has passed safely its first crisis; the lecture work is extending and new auxiliaries forming; Ronayne is carrying his expositions into every stronghold of the lodge and crashing down its gates of brass; the noble band of delivered men praises God with bolder voice and growing numbers; the nations have read our testimony, and beheld our banner raised for the truth amid the handi work of men, saying, "What hath God wrought;" and now Mr. Moody has catalogued the lodge iniquity and set the great revival work of the age against it. Surely may we sing,

"O magnify the Lord with me,
And let us exalt his name together.
Sing praises to God, sing praises:
Sing praises unto our King, sing praises.
For God is King of all the earth;
Sing ye praises with understanding.

God reigneth over the heathen,
God sitteth on the throne of his holiness;
The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind:
The Lord raiseth them that are bowed down:
The Lord loveth the righteous.
He showeth his word unto Jacob,
His statues and his judgments unto Israel.
He hath not dealt so with any nation,
Praise ye the Lord.
Let the saints be joyful in glory:
Let them sing aloud upon their beds.
Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.
Praise ye the Lord.

—The General Agent wrote last week from the vicinity of Boston, where he was seeking an opening to present the reform. He finds the pall and dread of secretism settling more and more heavily upon the churches of New England. Here and there a break in the clouds gives a gleam of hope. He will probably attend the New Hampshire convention at Center Strafford, Dec. 6th and 7th. There is encouragement in the thought that it is always darkest before day, and the time may be at hand for a powerful commotion and revolution among churches.

—Wm. M. Tweed, the deposed New York Tammany "Boss," and member of Perfect Ashlar Lodge, A. F. and A. M. New York, has been, against his will, returned to the cells of Ludlow Street jail. His escape from the deputies of Sheriff Connor something near a year ago will be remembered. His wanderings on land and sea, his recognition in Cuba, and capture in Spain are romantic as a novel. The U. S. frigate Franklin delivered him into the Sheriff's hands again last week, and the question is now what to do with him. Perhaps the lodge will answer the riddle, unless they too, like the politicians, have deserted their former magnate.

—A county convention was appointed to meet yesterday the 29th in Unionville, Putnam Co., Mo., for the purpose of discussing the relations of secret orders to Christian work, and to organize an auxiliary association. God speed the new society.

—A county convention was also, we learn from Mr. Ronayne, to be held in Wasioja, Minn., this week with a probable enlargement into a State auxiliary. This speedy result of the expositions in that section is commendation enough of their power.

—The Inter-ocean of this city publishes a column of the secrets of the grange, its passwords, grips and secret workings very opportunely, for the National Grange has been holding its session about two weeks at the Palmer House. Let the Inter-ocean proceed; there are other orders run by grips and secrecy. Follow them up and give the public the benefit of the best there is in them.

—Friend Woodward must not be understood in his able letter to defend the crime of murder, which though there may be extenuating circumstances, is justly regarded as of the most serious nature. He demands only that justice may be done the young in Baraboo, man and the hands of the lodge kept off.

—We had the pleasure last week of welcoming Prof. Milton Wright of The Telescope, who called while attending the great convention of Christian workers here, in connection with the Moody meetings. His visit to Chicago was most timely, for he was in the reporter's gallery in the Tabernacle when Mr. Moody made his reply to the question of lodge association. The clear, earnest, strong-words of the great evangelist and the deep-felt approbation that broke out twice in applause during the short speech made it an occasion never to be forgotten. Bro. Wright and every straight-forward, conscientious member of the United Brethren in Christ will feel that their advanced but Scriptural position against these lodge worships is wonderfully strengthened by both. Here were thousands of the ministers and leading members from the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian and other churches of the North-west, which have made no distinct stand against this evil, yet approving it when brought face to face with it.

—W. M. Beden, a most earnest worker in Michigan, who has for years struggled to enjoy religious privileges free from lodge trammels has now the satisfaction of fellowshiping the Rev. R. D. Robinson, a seceding Royal Arch Mason (with five side degrees thrown in) who preaches on the Hadley circuit of the Free Methodist church. Others who may be struggling as was Bro. Beden should keep their faith pure and strengthen it with honest effort for the truth assured that the Lord will hear and send relief in due time.

—To-day, Thanksgiving day, a Jewish secret society begs for some sort of recognition by erecting in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, a statue to Religious Liberty. It may be all right to allow such a statue to be erected if it bears no sign that would perpetuate the memory of any sort of lodge. The Freemasons have got their brass plates and commemorative chiselings distributed widely enough on public buildings all through the land. The time will come when these will be monuments of sh ame.

News of the Week.

—A Louisville court has imposed a heavy fine and six months imprisonment on a lot of gamblers. They have appealed, and the fraternity throughout the country is helping them to funds.

—The South Carolina Board of Canvassers finished their work last week and reported the State for Hayes and Wheeler by a small majority. The returns from Florida and Louisiana have not yet been officially counted. The S. Carolina Board was enjoined from issuing certificates of election, but did so, nevertheless. The court has imprisoned and fined the whole board, and in consequence of the excited feeling, Gov. Chamberlain has applied for U. S. troops.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—A special dispatch to the Times from Argos (the most ancient city of Greece), announces that Dr. Schliemann, while excavating at the supposed site of the Tombs of Agamemnon and Cassandra, has discovered immense subterranean chambers or tombs containing a great variety of gold and silver plate and jewelry.

—The official compilation of the record of admissions for the Centennial, shows that the total number of cash admissions from May 10th to Nov. 10th, inclusive, were 8,004,274. The free admissions were 1,906,692, these representing merely the admissions each day of some 12,000 persons, whose presence in the grounds was indispensable, namely, exhibitors and their attendants, employees, firemen, guards, waiters, etc. The total number of admissions was 9,910,966. The total of cash receipts at the gates was $3,813,724.49.

The gifts to Philadelphia, by which she will remember her visitors from abroad, are becoming numerous. Japan, Germany and England leave their buildings as memorials. The State of Ohio has done likewise. Several of the French, English and other exhibits are also to be left as the mementoes in the new Museum.

—Two Chicago thieves are now on trial in Springfield, Ill., for a supposed attempt to steal the body of Pres. Lincoln from the vault in the monument there. They were baffled by detectives. It is thought by experienced detectives in this city that the whole affair is a put up job to get somebody an office. The trial will make matters more clear.

—The Eastern question assumes more favorable aspects. The conclusion is universal that the reforms demanded present no insuperable obstacle to peace. Under the leadership of the English and Russian Plenipotentiaries they may be so moulded as to command the support of every guaranteeing Power, and secure the acceptance of the Porte.

—The London correspondent of the Post telegraphs that journal as follows: "I have authority of the Foreign Office for the statement that the circumstantial account of the British plans which was published by the Financier on Friday last, and which stated that, in case Russia should invade Turkey, a British army corps would immediately occupy Constantinople and defend it against all attacks, is purely conjectural."

NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the New Hampshire Anti-secret Christian Association will be held in Austin Academy, at Center Strafford, Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 6 and 7, 1876. The friends of reform in New Hampshire and the neighboring States are cordially invited to be present. The so called secrets of the more prominent secret societies will be thoroughly exposed and their anti Christian tendencies exhibited. God's blessing has rested upon our labors during the year. May his presence grace our first anniversary.

J. F. BROWNE, President.
S. C. KIMBALL, Secretary.
Center Stafford, N. H.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

The friends of Michigan will take notice that the second anniversary of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secrecy, will be held in the M. E. Church, Hastings, Barry county, on the 6th, 7th and 8th of December. The meeting to commence on the afternoon of the 6th at 2 o'clock. Hastings is easily reached, being on the railroad between Grand Rapids and Jackson. Arrangements are being made to secure a good list of prominent speakers and a pleasant time is anticipated. Arrangements have been made by the friends of Hastings to supply a home for all from abroad. Let every true reformer make it his or her business to attend for they will be expected. No excuse allowable but sickness.

By order of Executive Committee.
C. B. REMINGTON.
Fentonville, Mich.

MR. RONAYNE is now at home in Chicago, and is arranging for a short tour through Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Michigan before New Year's. Friends desiring to secure his services to work the Masonic degrees will write at once to this office. He will visit New York, Boston, and other Eastern States and cities after the holidays.

SPECIAL.—Will the Chairman of the Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, at Salem, Columbiana county Ohio, send his address to either Alex McGraw or S. Alexander at Leetonia, Columbiana county, Ohio, and oblige co-workers in the same cause.

ALEX MCGRAW,
S. ALEXANDER.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The National Christian Association.

PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.—Pres. H. H. George, D. D., W. Geneva, Ohio.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

The Family Thanksgiving.

The royal home-day of the flying year,
Whate'er may be the weather;
When scattered households, with a gladsome cheer,
Are all once more together.
When hearts, forgetting care, are full of joy
As summer lands of glories,
And in their overflow give time employ
With olden songs and stories.

What golden visions of the days of yore
Send thrills through all their being!
The circle as it never will be more,
The sights that charmed the seeing!
Parents are in their prime again in days
With gladness running over,
And children little, happy at their plays,
As lambs in fields of clover.

And grandsires, grandmas, long since gone to rest,
Then lips death's white lips pressing,
Made rapture for young hearts, so sweet, so blest,
With words and deeds of blessing!
Sunshine comes streaming up from olden days
To sweeten love's communion,
To cheer them when they go their chosen ways,
After this glad re-union.

Around the table older hands have spread
They take their wonted places,
On ample dainties feast, when grace is said,
With thanks on all their faces!
Or, if perchance they see an empty chair,
Though not a word be spoken,
Their hearts turn heavenward, and they pray that there
The circle be not broken!

And then together, as of old, they kneel
Around the fireside altar,
Give thanks for mercies, pray, come woe or weal
In faith they may not falter;
But evermore, as comes and goes each day,
Through love and holy living,
They all may press with growing joy their way
To God and Heaven's Thanksgiving.

About our Thanksgiving Dinner.

"Well, Emma, what are you going to do for Thanksgiving this year?" said Walter to me, as he stopped suddenly before me, with Robbie on his back, for whose benefit he had converted himself into a "horse," standing on all-fours, and going up and down the dining-room at break-neck speed.

I hesitated a moment in my task of clearing the tea-table, as if to give full weight to the answer of so great a question, and finally said, "We took a walk this afternoon!"

"Re-mark-a-ble!" replied Walter, indicating that he was amused, not enlightened, at the information he had received.

I laughed, in spite of the feelings which were in my heart, and had come there from the longing it had to help the suffering ones, met during the walk just spoken of, and I said, "You undress Robbie, while I finish the dishes, and then I'll tell you about my plans for Thanksgiving."

"And your walk!" asked Walter, like a young tease of a school-boy, which manner he made it a point to assume whenever he thought I felt badly, and holding Robbie up for his good-night kiss, he gave me one too, as he passed, while I said, "Yes, you shall have it, walk and all."

When we were seated in our cozy, home-like back parlor, which we used for our "sitting-room" in winter, to save the expense of an extra fire, and Walter, from force of habit had taken his paper, drawing his chair a little closer to where I sat with my knitting-work, a half finished stocking for Robbie, he laid his newspaper across his knees, and, taking a card from his pocket, held it in one hand and his pencil in the other, said:

"Now for business before pleasure. Item first, turkey, I suppose?" and he looked toward me for a "second" to his "proposition."

I shook my head as I answered, "Wait a moment, dear, let me tell you about the walk first, and then we'll order the Thanksgiving dinner."

"All right, I am only a passenger, you know," and as he sat back in an attentive manner, I continued by asking,

"Do you remember that delicate, neat-looking woman (Mrs. Barnes) who came to our house asking for work of any kind, last summer, and to whom Cousin Helen gave her's and Edgar's washing during their visit to us just at that time.

"Yes, I remember hearing Helen and you talk about her," said Walter in reply.

"Well," I resumed, "to-day when Robbie and I started out for our walk we had no special way to go, so I told Robbie he might go any way he chose. He was very dignified in this new privilege and said: 'I des we'd better do down Smif street den.' So down Smith street we went. After walking along, I found, on looking about me, that we were right before Mrs. Barnes' house. Impelled by some sudden motive, I said, 'Robbie, let's go in and see a lady.' He was delighted, and we were at the door before I had time to think what I should say As the door was soon opened by Mrs. Barnes' eldest child, a daughter about eight years old, I asked, 'Does Mrs. Barnes live here?' Upon receiving a sweet, quiet 'Yes'm' in reply, I said, 'May I come in and rest a few minutes? I used to know your mamma. Will you tell her that Mrs. Goddard is at the door?' She stepped within a moment, and soon returned, saying, 'My mamma is very sick, but if you will come in she'll see you.' I hardly knew what I was doing, this had all come so quickly, but saying, 'Thank you, I will come in,' I followed the child through the first room, which, I observed in passing, answered for kitchen, dining-room, and domestic purposes in general, and was as neat as could be.

"We entered the next room to find Mrs. Barnes with a tiny babe, only a week old, on a poor bed, scantily provided with clothing, looking very pale and sad. Upon seeing me she tried to speak, but her tears were more plentiful than her words, and I realized for the first time why my 'good angel' had turned my foot-steps in hither. Advancing at once to the side of the bed, I tried to soothe her by calling her attention to the fact that she was, as a consequence of her present condition, very weak and sensitive, and that she must not agitate herself too greatly. The little girl had taken Robbie into the adjoining room, and was keeping him quiet by showing him the pictures in an old school-book with which she was interesting herself when we rapped at the door.

"After a few moments Mrs. Barnes recovered herself sufficiently to say, 'God does answer prayer, for it is the only thing I have left to-day, and he has sent you to relieve great suffering!' I was small—but a 'worm of the dust,' before such nearness to my God as this confession brought me, but I sent up my prayers for right and discreet guidance, as I urged her to tell me something of her situation, for I felt that what would be discretion in ordinary cases, would certainly prove hurtful now; since talking to relieve her mind could surely be no more injurious than the sufferings of mind she had been enduring.

"Her story was that her husband had been out of work about three months, owing to his own sickness, and that her own condition had been one of unusual sickness and inability to earn anything, and that their only little boy (Eddie, who was about Robbie's age), had sickened a month since and died the day before the baby was born, and yesterday they ate the last morsel of food in the house, and had barely coal enough to keep warm to-day. Upon hearing this, I noticed that the rooms were chilly. Even with my outer wrappings on I was cold, though my interest had been so keenly awakened by the suffering before me, I had not observed it before. I asked her where her husband was, she said he had gone out to look for work, and that he was a kind husband and an honest, hard-working man. They were from England; they had been carefully reared and had had a good home over there, but he so strongly felt, like many others, the spirit of becoming rich at once in America, that they sold all, and came to this country when Mary (the eldest child) was two years old.

"It occurred to me just then that I had better see to making the house a little warmer, or I should expose Robbie to an attack of croup for to-night, so leaving the room I sent Mary with a list and a note to Mr. Jameson's, asking them to send the things at once as an especial favor to me. I let Robbie go with her, as I dared not trust him longer sitting still.

"Upon returning to the next room I asked Mrs. Barnes how they had provided for all that had come upon them during the past week. Feeling that I was disposed to befriend her she did not hesitate to tell me that she had sold her wedding-dress (a good silk which had been her 'churching-dress' over there), her underclothing and her engagement ring—and that now she had parted with all (except her wedding-ring) which they had brought with them from home—and in these thoughts the home-longing became so intense, that forgetting my presence, she groaned aloud, 'O mother, why will you not listen to my prayer for help?' and then suddenly remembering my being a listener, she continued, 'I beg pardon, dear madam, but my own mother lives in comfort. True to what she said when we left—if we would come not a bit of help would she give me; and surely enough, my letters are all unanswered!' Then turning her face to the wall she seemed utterly exhausted. I felt that I had gained enough to see it my duty to help her in this hour of her terrible need, and as soon as Mary came with the grocery-man, I made them comfortable for the present, and came home in time to have tea all ready for you."

I looked affectionately toward Walter, who, arousing himself from the quiet my long story had forced upon him, asked, "How long will your provision made to-day, last?"

"A day or two; I had only about two dollars and a half in my pocket-book," I replied.

"This is a very sad case, at this season of the year, too," said Walter.

"Yes; I am so glad we've found it out, and now I will order our Thanksgiving dinner," I continued, and Walter again made himself ready to "itemize" as I ordered.

"Firstly, one ton of coal; secondly, groceries; thirdly, make them comfortable; fourthly, try and help Mr. Barnes to a place where he can earn something, and, lastly, you may send home a nice steak and a can of tomatoes, which, with some little delicacies I can fix up at home, and with hearts full of thanksgiving, we will enjoy our dinner; and too," I added cheerfully, "we wish to hear the Thanksgiving sermon, and you know I do not like to get up too big a dinner on a 'church-day.'"

Walter smiled, as he said, "I am satisfied if you are. I know we shall not be sorry."

So this is what we had for our Thanksgiving dinner, and then, as now, I feel that the privilege of aiding one of Christ's suffering ones, brought me almost as near to him as was Peter when Jesus told him, "feed my sheep." We found our disposition to assist these sufferers a blessing to us as well as to them, for they proved themselves worthy and capable, and were soon able to make comfortable provision for themselves and their two bright little daughters.

May God send many another help for every time of need, and may his richest blessing attend the heart and hand which he chooses as the instruments for doing his work to even "the least of these."—The Standard.

"Te Deum" had been chanted in the cathedrals of the Old World by royal decree, at the birth of princes, the coronation of kings, and the issue of great battles; but the voluntary appointment of a day, by a whole people, for the distinctive purpose of rendering thanks to the Almighty for his manifold blessings, civil and religious, national and domestic, marks an epoch in history. —Thanksgiving day is the festival of religious liberty. Removed to a distance from all tyranny, passing from suffering, which called for brave defiance and patience, into success and enlargement which inspired gratitude; religion finding its freedom in the New World, poured out its carols at the very gate of heaven.—*Dr. Wm. Corn Song.

Heap high the farmer's wintry board!
Heap high the golden corn;
No richer has Autumn poured
From out her lavish horn!

Let other lands exulting, glean
The apple from the pine;
The orange from its glossy green,
The cluster from the vine.

We better love the hardy gift
Our rugged vales bestow,
To cheer us when the storm shall drift
Our harvest fields with snow.

Through vales of grass and flowers,
Our plows their furrows made,
While on the hills the sun and showers
Of changeful April played.

We dropped the seed o'er hill and plain,
Beneath the sun of May,
And frightened from our sprouting grain
The robber crows away.

All through the long bright days of June,
Its leaves grew bright and fair,
And waved in hot, midsummer noon,
Its soft and snowy hair.

And now with Autumn's moonlit eves,
Its harvest time is come,
We pluck away its frosty leaves,
And bear its treasures home.

Then richer than the fabled gifts
Apollo showered of old,
Fair hands the broken grains shall sift,
And knead the meal of gold.

Let vapid idlers loll in silk,
Around the costly board;
Give us the bowl of samp and milk,
By homespun beauty poured.

Then shame on all the proud and vain,
Whose folly laughs to scorn
The blessings of our hardy grain,
Our wealth of golden corn.

Let earth withhold her goodly root,
Let mildew blight the rye;
Give to the worm the orchard fruit,
And wheatfields to the fly;

But let the good old crop adorn
The hills our fathers trod;
Still let us for his golden corn
Send up our thanks to God.

Children's Corner.

The Children's Letter.

New Texas, Allegheny Co., Penn., Nov. 12, 1876.

Dear Sir:—I have studied out an enigma which I send to you. I do not know whether you will think it worth putting in your paper or not. I have been a regular reader of the Cynosure for about four or five years and I like it very much, especially the "Children's Corner." We are the only ones that take your paper at this office.

Yours truly,
H. H. Hervey.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of fourteen letters:
My 1, 6 and 5 is a domestic animal.
My 13, 2, 6 and 7 means to lend.
My 10, 6, 12, 13, 14 and 4 is a city in Italy.
My 9 and 3 is a preposition.
My 1, 11, 5, 8, 2 and 7 is a kind of goods.
My whole is a city of Europe.

[We thank our young friend for his letter and enigma. Who will guess it out? In every town where the Cynosure is read in but one family we think it would be a good plan to get others to take it and share the pleasure of reading it.—Ed.]

Fan's Chicken.

A THANKSGIVING STORY FOR CHILDREN.

What has little Fan got in her apron? How carefully she holds it, peeping in now and then to see her treasure, as she trips through the barnyard to mamma. Has anybody guessed what it is?

"A chicken?" calls out somebody.

Yes, a chicken — a round, soft, downy, white chicken, just out of the shell

"O mamma, mamma, just see what grandma has given me!" says Fan, bursting into the room where her mother lies on the sofa; "did you ever see anything so cunning? and I am going to feed it all myself. Grandma says chicky will grow and grow, and next summer will lay eggs, and hatch out more chickens; only think, mamma, I shall have a whole flock!"

Mamma took the little heap of down, and praised it and petted it, and cuddled it in Fan's neck till the child thought the hen would miss her baby; then Fan put chicky in her apron again, and carried it to the little house made of lattus, under the maple tree in the backyard.

Fanny had never been in the country before, since she could remember and her chicken was more to her than a lump of solid gold.

"Grandma says it will have feathers pretty soon," she said; "it has got nothing but down now. When is pretty soon; a day or two?"

She watched for the feathers to come and fed her pet so many times a day that her mother told her it would be sick, and be obliged to take medicine. So she tried to be a little more patient, and to think of something else.

At last it was time for Fan to go back to the city. She went into the farmyard to bid chicky good bye, and said to her:

"I am coming back next June; and I hope you will be very good, and get into your coop early in the evening, and not let the hawks catch you. I expect great things of you when you are quite grown up."

The last part of this speech was what Fanny's grandmother said to her, and like a little parrot she repeated it to the feathered child of her adoption.

Fanny went home to the great city. She was a poor man's child, and lived in one of the crowded avenues, over a grocery store. Her father was a carpenter and, though he earned enough to make his wife and child comfortable, there was never anything over. The clothes were mended and remended by the mother's careful hand, and the only luxury of the year was the visit to the little farm in midsummer. As the bright September days passed away, and the soft blue sky became like polished steel, and the leaves on the city trees were whisked, one by one, over the cold pavements, Fan often sat by the window and watched the rugged little children, whose bare feet seemed to shrink from the cold stones. She longed, with all the strength of her young heart, to do something for them, and dreamed many dreams of the great future, when she should be rich, and could give money to everybody. Her mother told her that there was but one way for a little girl without money to help others.

"Learn to give up your own pleasures," she said, "for the sake of making others happy. See that each day's duties are done, and each day's lessons are perfect: then you will be prepared to help, in one way or another, and the chances will come fast enough."

"It would be easier to give money right out," said Fanny.

Fanny went to Sunday school, and in her class was a boy she pitied and loved. They often walked part way home together, and Fan had told him all about her visit to the country, and about the chicken that was to lay eggs next summer. Mike had never been in the country, and he asked many questions of his little friend, and always ended by saying:

"It must be awfully jolly to have a reg'lar grandmother livin' on a farm."

Mike's affairs were in a very low state. He had a sister who was a cripple, and his mother, who took in fine washing, was very delicate, and was often so sick that she was quite unable to work. One day he confided to Fanny a great secret. He was "saving up" for Thanksgiving, and nobody knew anything about it. He had held horses and run of errands, and had almost money enough to buy a chicken. His mother and sister should have a roast dinner, with potatoes and onions and cranberry sauce. Wouldn't that be jolly?

"That's what we are going to have," said Fan.

The great city got ready for Thanksgiving, and no one was happier or more expectant of coming joy than little Mike. There were great holes in his shoes, and his jacket was very thin, and his hands were quite purple with cold, but his heart was so warm with the joy of making the poor, tired mother happy, and giving one good dinner to the sick sister, that he scarcely felt the cold at all.

Thus all was moving on merrily when Mike's hopes were suddenly dashed to the ground. Fanny met him the very day before Thanksgiving, bending under a great bundle that he was carrying for a gentleman.

"Got enough for the chicken?" she said, gaily, as she was passing.

Mike suddenly burst into tears.

"Why, what is the matter?" asked Fan, greatly astonished.

"Mother slipped yesterday and broke her arm, and — and — I had to use all the money — and we shan't have any Thanksgiving dinner. You know I don't care," he said, wiping away the tears with the back of his hand; "but I thought they would have such a good time." The tears came again, and Mike hurried on with his heart heavier than the bundle on his sturdy shoulders.

"O dear! I wish I could help them," said Fan, her eyes cast down, and her thoughts busy. "But I haven't a cent in the world, nor anything that will bring a cent." Suddenly a new thought crossed her mind. The chicken! Her own little chicken, on the farm, now quite big enough to be killed for Thanksgiving.

What; have her chicken killed? The thought was dreadful. But there was Mike, and his mother and sister; she wanted so much to give them a dinner. She could have another chicken next summer, only another would never be that one, and she shouldn't care about it one bit. Before the child got home her mind was made up.

"Mother," she said, bursting into the kitchen where the good woman was paring apples for pies, "I want grandma to sell my chicken with the rest."

"Sell your chicken!"

"Yes; and I want father to lend me as much money as it is worth, so I can buy another chicken here; for I can't wait to have that one sent."

Then Fanny told the whole story, and when the father came home, he fell in with the plan gladly.

Mike was the saddest boy in the city, I am sure, as he lingered around the corner groceries, and watched the magnificent orders of fruit and vegetables and poultry as they were put up and carried off to the houses of the fortunate buyers.

"It's no use for a feller to try," he said to himself; "everything goes against poor folks. If mother had been rich she wouldn't have fell down on that old slippery pavement. I don't believe God cares either; if he had cared, he'd a-helped me get a dinner for 'em someway, when I tried so hard."

With all these dreary thoughts in his heart Mike couldn't bear to go home; so he stayed out till he thought they were sound asleep in the little room on the third floor, back. But as he climbed the stairs, near ten o'clock, he was surprised to see a light streaming through the key-hole and the big cracks around the door.

"Why, Mike, my boy, what made you stay out so?" exclaimed his mother. "Come here and see what a man left at the door just now. We'll have a real Thanksgiving dinner, to-morrow, and my arm is ever so much better. We couldn't bear to go to bed till you got home and saw the good things."

The mother's eyes were sparkling with joy, and the lame sister looked so bright that Mike, in his delight, ran to her, and kissed her, and told her that she was a real beauty.

"Have you any idea who brought these things, my boy?" asked the mother, touching the plump chicken with her left hand.

"Some idea," said the boy, with his face turned from them; "I think I can find out."

Then all three looked over the contents of the Thanksgiving basket together — their hearts glowing with the thought that the great, cold, lonesome world contained somebody who remembered them, and cared for them.

"God does care," said Mike to himself, as he settled himself in his hard bed, "and I'll never say that he don't again; but I guess little Fan was his errand girl," he added, laughing softly.—Independent.

Praying and Doing.

"Bless the poor children who haven't got any beds to-night," prayed a little boy, just before he lay down on his nice warm cot, on a cold wintry night.

As he rose from his knees his mother said, "You have just asked God to bless the poor children; what will you do to bless them?"

The boy thought a moment. "Why, if I had a hundred cakes, enough for all the family, I would give them some."

"But you have no cakes; what then, are you willing to do?"

"When I get money enough to buy all the things I want, and have some over, I'll give them some."

"But you haven't half enough money to buy all you want, and perhaps never will have; what will you do to bless the poor now?"

"I'll give them some bread."

"You have no bread; the bread is mine."

"Then I could earn money and buy a loaf myself."

"Take things as they are now. You know what you have that is your own; what are you willing to give to help the poor?"

The boy thought again. "I have seven pennies; I'll give them four. Wouldn't that be right?"

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

BIBLE-READING BY MR. MOODY ON THE HOLY SPIRIT.

I was glad to see the storm this morning, for I then felt that there would be present this afternoon those who wanted the Bible-reading. Sometimes in the afternoon a great many come who have nothing else to do; they come from curiosity, and, while I was glad to see all who will come, yet I felt glad to know that those who did would come this afternoon to hear the Bible read.

Since I came into the hall a note was handed to me, which I will now read to you: "Need a person who thinks he has grieved the Holy Spirit ever try to become a Christian?" In answer to this note, I will read from Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, fourth chapter, twenty-ninth and thirtieth verses: "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

This letter was written by Paul to the Church at Ephesus, who had grieved the Holy Spirit by their conversation and action. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." That's the way believers grieve the Spirit; when you hear some brother unkindly talking of another, that's grieving the Holy Spirit. There are hundreds of ways in which it is possible to grieve the Holy Spirit. It ought to grieve us. The Holy Spirit is a friend sent to lead us to Heaven. If we would be guided and taught by him, we would have no burden to carry. Satan is always on the lookout for us, and is constantly leading us into bondage. A man can't say he was prompted to iniquity by the Holy Spirit, for that would make the Holy Ghost a participator in the sin. Satan has nine-tenths of the professing children of God bound hand and foot, simply because they grieve the Holy Spirit. Our business men are tied up with their worldly affairs, and they grieve the Spirit. I tell you, my friends, we must get rid of self, and then the Spirit will be free; it will not be grieved nor hampered. We read in Thessalonians, v. 19,: "Quench not the Spirit." Fairs, festivals, dances, and dramatic performances quench the Spirit. They should be cleaned out, like a cage of unclean birds. I know how it is myself. They grieve and quench the Spirit. Fashion has a great deal to say in the church. It is not necessary to go to Paris to see the fashions; you can see them by going to church. Hundreds of churches want intellectual ability to preach to them, and not men inspired with the Holy Ghost. They want preachers who can draw with their splendid eloquence. What we want is preachers who can draw with eloquence from heaven, and not with eloquence from earth. The Spirit will respond when we appeal to heaven and not to earth; and not until the Spirit is called upon will the revival come. Believers grieve the Holy Spirit; the Church quenches it and the earth resists it.

In Acts, vii. 51,52- we read "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted, and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One;of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers." This is what Stephen said to the Scribes, and the elders, and the people just before they stoned him to death. The world is resisting the Holy Ghost. The moment this resistance is at an end God saves. Some people think that they should wait until the Holy Ghost comes unto them. The Holy Ghost has striven with every one. Out here on the Western plains the Holy Spirit has striven with the Indians. They worship no idols. They worship a Great Spirit, and with them this Spirit has striven. The trouble with the world is, it won't be led by the Spirit. The Spirit testifies against man. It never flatters him, as some preachers do. The Holy Ghost shows a man how unclean he is,how corrupt his heart is, and the man is troubled. He don't like it. I remember the first time the Holy Ghost impressed me. I went to church one morning, and fell asleep. As I dozed, a man sitting near me hunched me. I woke suddenly, and it seemed to me as though the preacher was talking to me personally. I thought I was held up to the gaze of the whole congregation. I thought the preaching was too personal, and I buttoned up my coat and went out. That's the kind of preaching we want now. We want personal preaching. The Holy Ghost can show a man how wicked he is. He convicts men of their sins. The Spirit of God tries to take a man from the reach of sin; and if men will only yield to the Spirit they will walk in the light and have eternal peace and joy.

In 2 Corinthians, iii. 6, we read: "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Remember, my friends, the Spirit giveth life. A lady said to me the other day: "Our minister preaches the Gospel, but there are no conversions." That preacher, and there are others like him, hath the letter, but the spirit is wanting. Everywhere around us is a dead orthodoxy, and this dead orthodoxy is killing the church. We want an earnest, living truth. Much of the preaching that is done Sunday after Sunday has too much of the letter. The preacher says, "That sermon is logically perfect; there is no logical controversion of the argument;" and, when it is delivered, it falls dead. It has too much of the letter, and no spirit. How many times I have failed. Many a sermon is as lifeless as a corpse. I fear a dead orthodoxy more than all the "isms" that have been propogated. It creates infidelity. The infidel is as much a master of intellect and argument as the preacher, but if the latter have not the spirit he can be of no avail. We want the Spirit in our work. In fact, my brethren, it seems to me that we should stop our work and inquire what the trouble is, why we make so little progress in the conversion of sinners. When we stop we may find out that we have the letter, but have not the Spirit. The Word of God gives no life, if the Spirit be not there.

In Paul's epistle to the Ephesians, 7th chap. and 17th verse, we read: "And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God." Many people wonder why God don't use them in the work of conversion. The reason is they don't have the Word of God. An army without weapons is no good. Look at an army of 10,000 men without arms. Why, 100 men with arms could capture or make away with them all. These people who wonder why God don't use them don't know how to use the sword. They should know perfectly the Word of God, and also how to use it. When a sinner comes to them and complains that he has no strength, or is in doubt, or don't know the way or what to do, they should be able to turn immediately to the Word of God and tell the poor sinner what to do. We must know the Bible, which is the only sword of the Spirit. In John, xiv. 17, we read: "Even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." A great many grieve the Spirit, and yet the Spirit dwells with them. Many people have the Spirit, but the manifestations are so slight that they will never find it out, and even they don't know that they will be saved. The Spirit of God never fills the old man; it is the new man whom it fills. The old man is dead in his trespasses and sins, but when the old man is put away, and the new man comes, then will the Holy Ghost guide and lead us. Then we shall put away pride and arrogance; we shall be clad in humility. If you want the Spirit of God to be with you, you must take off the old man. There are three notable instances when the Holy Spirit made himself manifest, and dwelt among us. The first was in the tabernacle, as recorded in Exodus, xl. 34; the second, at the completion of Solomon's Temple; and the third on the day of Pentecost, when there "suddenly came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind." On that day the Spirit came and filled those men. He has dwelt here for 1800 years. It is the privilege of every child of God to be filled with the Holy Spirit, like Paul and Barnabas Some people say that the Spirit is only with some, and not with others. This is a mistake. I never saw a hungry Christian seeking the Spirit who did not receive it. If the heart is filled with worldly matters or something else, how can it be filled with the blessing? It puts me in mind of the boy whose thoughts were constantly absorbed by his play, and not by his study. He could not study. So one day his father told him to take two baskets and fill one with chips and the other with apples. The boy did so, and the father said, "Now fill the basket full of chips with the apples. The boy replied, "I can't do it, father; the basket is full already." "That's the way with you, my son," said the father, "you are too full of play and so can't study." That, my friends, is the condition of the Church. It is too full of chips. We must be emptied of every impure desire before we can be filled with the Spirit. Some people say we have no strength to work for God. The truth is, we have too much. If we had less, we would have more of God's strength, and then we could do his work Daniel did not say to Nebuchadnezzar that he had the secret. He said that God held it. It is not the pipe which made the gas which we burn. The pipe only conducts the gas. We are conductors of God.

In 1 Timothy, i. 21, we find "If a man therefore purge himself from these he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work." That don't say a few ministers and a few elders. It says, "If a man purge himself" he will be ready for the work. It is time we should be done serving God in the flesh. There are too many who, when asked to pray for the conversion of this one or direct that one to the way of salvation, say they can't do it. The church is full of these believers, who work for God in the flesh, but not in the spirit. There are professing Christians of ten, fifteen, or twenty years' standing who cannot speak to a man about his soul. They are not ready. Whose fault is it? It is not the fault of God. If you purge yourselves you will be ready for the work of the Master.

In the second chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians we read of the diversities of gifts. But they are of the same spirit. We don't teach that all workers in the vineyard will be preachers, but we preach that all can do something towards the conversion of an immortal soul. If every professing Christian would make one personal application, it would not be long before we should have Chicago converted. The man who is born of the Spirit acknowledges Jesus Christ as Lord. In the twenty-eighth verse of the same chapter occur these words: "And God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, second, prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." This diversity of gifts is natural. There are different members of the body—the leg, the arm, the foot, the eye, but it is all one body. So should it be in the Church. Therefore we want teachers, pastors, elders, evangelists, revivalists, and all who can aid in spreading the glad tidings and converting sinners. What we want most is the Spirit of God. No one can perform my mission. I cannot perform another's. There are business men here who can reach certain persons; there are clergymen who can reach others. Let them do so. There are missionaries who have made no conversions. Why not? They are not filled with the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. If we are filled with the Spirit the Holy Ghost will lead the way. We will have better preaching,more earnest preaching, if we are only filled with the Spirit. There are several beautiful symbols of the Holy Ghost mentioned in the Scriptures. They are water, which is cleansing, purifying, and freely given; fire, which is purifying and cleansing; the dove, which is gentle and meek; the wind, which is independent and powerful; the rain and dew, which are fertilizing, penetrating, and refreshing; a seal, which marks for eternity and Heaven.

THE DAILY INTER-OCEAN publishers on the whole the best reports of the great revival meetings now progressing in this city. It is mailed to any address for 85 cts per month. It has also published three supplements containing reports of the first three or four weeks' meetings.

—The returns from Illinois as published in the Chicago Times, give the following:

Walker and Kirkpatrick	157 votes.
Allen, for Governor,	128 "
French, Lieut. Gov.,	112 "
Robinson, Sec'y of State,	123 "

The other candidates on the State ticket are out given.

The Prohibition National ticket received 130 votes, State do. 115 votes.

Democratic, 258,560 and 275,597 votes.

Republican, 276,876 and 280,597 votes.

The Greenback, National, 17,057 votes.

The great advance made politically against the lodge must not be lost. Honest efforts at local elections must be kept up, even though at a greater self-sacrifice. All the friends of the reform are in favor of this though most of them declined to carry the measure into the national arena. But here WE CAN ALL UNITE and have hope of voting for something more than a testimony.

State Laws and Usages Concerning Election Tickets.

In Massachusetts there seems to be no law in regard to the size of the ticket, style of type or color of paper, and the different parties vie with each other to see who can get up the most attractive POSTER for a ticket. We call it a poster, for a Republican ticket sent us is six inches wide and fifteen and a half long. It has a fancy engraved heading, and is printed on green paper. A Democratic ticket from the same State has a spread eagle at the top. The Prohibition ticket is also in fancy style on pink paper. We have received quite a variety of Connecticut tickets, several of which are entirely engraved in fancy letters with a picture at the top. One of the Republican electoral tickets for this State is lithographed. The State and National tickets are not together on the same ballot as in most other States.

The New Hampshire tickets are more than half pictures. The Tilden ticket is headed: "Democratic Republican Ticket" in fancy letters over an elaborate engraving of the State arms. To the right is a rural scene, to the left a safe, with coin spread out near it, while Science is represented by a telescope, and mechanics by an anvil, etc. On each side of the cut are two large union flags, which run up through the title. Underneath is the motto: "Sound Currency, Economy, Reform. An honest administration will bring prosperity." The Republican ticket has the portraits of Hayes and Wheeler under the title, then the names of the Presidential candidates followed by a large cut, showing on the left a Continental and on the right a modern U. S. soldier, each with a flag and sword, with the famous cracked "liberty bell" in the center, surrounded by the original motto: "Proclaim liberty throughout the land, and to all the inhabitants thereof." Under the bell are two shields lettered 1776 and 1876. Over the bell is a diminutive landscape showing the State arms, and over the whole is the word "Centennial." All are on white paper, probably so ordered by law.

Vermont, Iowa and Nebraska tickets that we have received, also have pictures. Ohio, New York and some other States have laws prohibiting the use of pictures or fancy letters on ballots, and in New York not even the name of the party or of the Presidential candidates is allowed. California ballots must all be printed in plain type on rose tinted writing-paper five inches wide by twelve long. Owing to our ignorance of the peculiar laws of New York and Ohio, we had to print and mail ballots for those States the second time.

Election Expenses.

Fifty-five thousand American party tickets were sent from this office post paid to the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Vermont, Massachusetts, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska and West Virginia. A package of tickets was sent to one or more persons in each town in the States named where we had a subscriber to the Cynosure. Ninety-nine dollars covers the cost of printing and mailing these ticktes, and $68.22 has been received towards this expense. This leaves a balance of $30.88.

From all along the Line.

David Foreman, of Milton, Pike county, Ill., writes:

"In Montzeuma township there were four votes cast for Walker and the State ticket, and I hear one was voted in Pearl township. I could not persuade a single Democrat to vote the Anti-masonic ticket. I could have got several more Republican votes, but I saw it was all coming from the Republicans, so I did not make the effort as I would have done had it been otherwise. I shall push the cause into the county and township elections, from this date. There is a large Anti-masonic element here if it was once waked up."

Samuel French, Chapin, Morgan Co. Ill., candidate for Lieutenant Governor on the American ticket writes:

"I rejoice that I voted as I did, at the election. There was but one voted with me the Walker ticket, although I got sixteen votes in my precinct, so you see I made a fair race at home. There were many more who would have voted it but said it would do no good. But I do not think as they do, when as I believe the destiny of this nation is in the hands of an oath-bound secret organization, similar to Masonry."

Robert Berry, Carbondale, York county, Pa.. writes:

"I sent the American tickets to some five or six townships, but have not heard the result as yet. I voted the only one in Carbondale. There is quite a number of Anti-masons here but they are all afraid. I tell the people here that we Anti-masons are setting out good fruit trees. We don't expect they will bear this fall. I do not expect to live to see the fruit, but some young men will and the fruit will be good. I would like to hear from you about James B. Walker. How old is he? I was black-guarded about him. They say he is the Vinegar Bitters man! The Vinegar Bitters man lives in California, and three years ago he said in his almanac that he was sixty-seven years old, and his name is Joseph Walker."

James B. Walker D. D., resides at Wheaton, Dupage county, Illinois and is seventy-one years old.

Chas. F. A. Gantzchow, Hartsville, Indiana, writes:

"In the State election for Indiana, we had nine American votes, and in the National or November election we had three votes in favor of Walker and Kirkpatrick. Many more would have voted the American ticket but were afraid of Tilden being elected."

A. B. Powell, Towanda, Illinois, writes:

"The vote I put in I think was the only vote cast for the American party in Money Creek township. I endorse the platform of the American party. If we ever get reform it must come to us on this line. I have ever been opposed to Freemasonry. When I was but fourteen years old I read Morgan's exposition of Freemasonry. Ever since that I have believed it to be a dangerous institution, and since I witnessed Ronayne's expose at Streator, Illinois, I am more than ever convinced that is a child of the devil, and deserves to be strangled."

H. Hough, New Garden, Indiana, writes:

"Our vote for Walker was only five, and one of that number was a Mason. He thought our platform so good in other respects he waived that question. We would have had several more votes for reform but for the fear that Tilden would carry the State. They all see now that they had as well have voted for principle."

G. W. Howe, Dayton, Va., writes:

"If there had been an orgauization in this State I am confident that there would have been from 200 to 400 votes cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick."

We hope our friends in Virginia by local elections and the circulation of the Cynosure will begin now to prepare for the next Presidential election.

J. L. Benton, Morley, N. Y., writes:

"I think that our next campaign will chronicle a good round percentage of American party votes in this section."

Wm. Nickle, Nickleville, Pa., writes:

"There were four votes cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick at our election in this township. A number would have voted but knowing that that race between Hayes and Tilden would be very close, and having a decided preference for Hayes, and all being Republicans who favor the Anti-masonic principles, voted the republican ticket."

Thos. McClelland, Erie, Pa., writes:

"There was an old man in our county some forty-five or fifty years ago who said very slowly and deliberately that 'he was an Anti-mason, but he was not a political one!' It amounted to about this that he was not an Anti-mason at all."

J. W. Lewis, New Bedford, Bureau Co., Ill., writes:

"There were only three American party votes here in this town. There are others that are in sympathy with the movement. * * * I am thankful that some dare to vote as they talk and pray. So far as I am concerned I will stand by the truth and right if the heavens fall around me, and leave the results with God."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, California, writes:

"Our election is over; the American party got two votes. I took pains to inform the judges of election what those votes were and so got the notice of them in one of our town papers. I worked the best I could with the means I had, and gave considerable notoriety to the movement, and I found our platform more favorably received than I anticipated. I found the carrying it to the poles was just the thing to gain attention."

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH:

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worcheeter, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150,000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100,000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150,000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Judge Whitney's Defense Before the Grand Lodge of Ill.

Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the Lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the Lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry.

IN all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

Notices.

Mr. Ronayne has been invited to Litchfield, Mich., and proposes to go there immediately after New Year's. Can other friends in adjacent counties or other parts of the State so arrange that they could be visited at the same time? If so write to this office

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE INDIANA STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

Will (D. V.) hold its fourth annual meeting at West Newtown, Marion county, Indiana, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December A. D, 1876, to commence at 7 o'clock P. M. Arrangements have been made to secure the attendance of competent speakers, and Edmond Ronayne, late Past Master of Keystone Lodge, 639, of Chicago, is expected to publicly work the degrees of Masonry.

The great political contest is now ended; and never within the last forty years has there been so favorable a time for a calm and free discussion of the relation of the secret orders to Christianity and civil equality as now. Let all the anti-secret organizations in the State and all churches in sympathy with this reform send delegates without fail; and let all friends of the reform and all who wish to know the truth consider themselves personally invited.

Delegates will stop off at Valley Mills, eight miles southwest of Indianapolis, on the I. and V. R. R., where they will find conveyances to the place of meeting.

On behalf of Executive Committee.
PETER RICH, Chairman.

RESIGNATION.

To the Illinois State Christian Association:—Having been appointed Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the State Christian Association at their last annual meeting held in Jacksonville, Ill., Sept. 1876, after considering carefully the duties and requirements of the office, I respectfully decline the same.

I would beg leave to state in connection with the above that though declining the above honor conferred upon me I am still and hope to remain a friend of the cause.

BENJ F. COLE.

Topics of the Time

The American Missionary, organ of the Association of that name, has always been published from the central office in New York. It is now to be published from a new base altogether—the colored school at Hampton, Virginia. Richard Hoe of New York having given a printing press to that institution it will be provided with all needed facilities. The change marks a step in the progress of the colored race in America.

The continued election excitement has made nearly every one forget the assembling of Congress on Monday. The complications of this same election are likely to give that body matter for party quarrels for the whole session, and the people may look in upon the cockpit and be amused, for they pay roundly for it. The battle began in the caucuses of last week in which it was determined by the Democrats to elect Randall of Pennsylvania to the Speaker's chair, which means a perpetual party fight at the expense of legislation.

There is no longer much doubt of the issue between Russia and Turkey, whatever may be the result of the Conference of the Powers; both governments are preparing for war with desperate earnestness. The frank assurances of the Czar to England have greatly allayed the ill-temper of Disraeli and Derby. So long as Russia seeks only a reformation in favor of the Slavic provinces and no conquest, England will be neutral. The only present hope of peace is in the influence of the Conference in persuading Turkey to grant such reforms as will satisfy the Czar.

Yesterday, December 6th, our long perplexity came to an end through the mercy of the national law requiring the casting of the votes of the electoral college on that day; and this morning the wires will be telling who got the coveted 185 votes. On Monday the situation was somewhat in this wise in three troublesome States: The Florida canvassing board announced the State for Hayes by a majority of forty-seven; in South Carolina the board counted in the Republican electors, but the unwilling Supreme Court of the State by two of its members, the third objecting, determined to prevent their acting, probably without success; the Louisiana board, by throwing out some counties where intimidation had been carried on were likely to give that State also to Hayes, but they were threatened and the White Leagues were more bold and vindictive than two years ago. This would give Hayes the one needed vote. But just then came the rumor that a Massachusetts elector had determined to go back to first principles and vote irrespective of party, the true theory of the electoral college, and cast his vote for Tilden whom he believed to have received the popular vote. He must be a bold man to do it, and invulnerable to the curses of all the political screws of the party from Chandler down.

South Carolina has another troublesome matter on hand. Who are her State officers? Wade Hampton and the Supreme Court are determined that the Democrats shall be recognized. The Legislature met a week ago, both parties organized, and the two speakers sat chatting each other for a few days, the presence of U. S. troops only preventing an out-break. The United States Court has taken notice of the action of the State Supreme Court and will investigate, till then the result is only a speculation.

The Eastern question has brought into more public view the character of the Greek Church. A while since the Greek government at the request of the Bishops of that church excluded the Bible, as translated into modern Greek by the London Bible Society, from the public schools of the kingdom. Notwithstanding the bitter hostility between this body and Romanism they are much alike in spirit and formalism, and their reunion would not seem difficult to be brought about.

NOTES FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Orthodox New England is just now deeply moved by the lectures and preaching of Joseph Cook, a graduate of Andover in 1868, but not yet an ordained minister. He has lately supplied one of the pulpits of Worcester for two Sabbaths, taking for his themes, Man's part in Conversion—"I will arise and go to my Father;" Omnipresence of God proved by Science—"Whither shall I go from thy presence;" Eternal Sin—Mark 3: 29, "Is in danger of Eternal Sin;" False hopes. Amos 6: 1; "At Ease in Zion."

He has also lectured in the Mechanics' Association Course on Ultimate America—a comprehensive, masterly exhibit of the possibilities and probabilities that lie in the future of the United States, with eleven million square miles of arable soil and its population doubling once in twenty-five years, through what he calls the Five Great Powers—Parlor, Pulpit, Press, Politics, Police. He quoted a most impressive warning from Carlyle as to what would follow in America from the neglect of moral culture by working-men, the engendering of Huns and Vandals in our own bowels. Diffusion of light and intelligence by popular education, division of land, dispersion of riches among the masses, conscientiousness in politics, increasing strength and purity in the police or government of the nation, would be efficient but not sufficient to national salvation and perpetuity, without the Cross of Christ.

The argument on eternal sin was one of great strength and solemnity founded on the nature of things—the nature of man, and the permanency of moral law and moral character, and taking the new reading of Mark, now generally adopted by scholars, which substitutes sin for damnation.

The discourse on man's part in conversion, was highly suggestive, philosophic, and full of instruction. We are to do four things in the process of conversion—attend to evidence, admit the truth, surrender to it, scare our minds into a habit of obedience. The regeneration is God's part. We are prisms that transmit and unravel the light. There is absolute certainty if we obey the laws of optics in the heavens, we shall obtain the true light. God then flashes through the soul a new experience. He shines into the heart to give the light of the knowledge of his glory as it shineth in the face of Jesus, a final permanence of character, hating what God hates, loving what God loves. Religion is falling in love with Almighty God, when you have given him your attention and consent. Belief is assent, faith is consent. When you assent and consent, God will, by a natural law, enter your soul, and you are then a new man. Let the telescope of your mind be adjusted, its lenses cleansed, its axis rightly directed, then will the image of God, the Sun of the Universe, appear in your soul, in his light you will see light and will be a new creature in Christ Jesus, the Spirit of God indwelling.

The discourse on false hopes was startling, searching and critical, bringing to bear a calcium light on sham and shoddy in morals, politics and religion, both in church and state.

Mr. Cook's Monday noon lectures in Park St. church, Boston, are attended by large numbers of representative and thinking minds, on which he is making a profound impression. The lectures are the product of deep study and wide reading—delivered for the most part without notes, with earnest personal enthusiasm, and abounding magnetism of brain and brawn, and with a style of elocution confessedly faulty but forcible. They are reported in the Daily Advertiser, subject to Mr. Cook's revision. They are marked by definite statement, clear analysis, and vigorous, if not close reasoning. They abound in thought and terse illustrations, and a Carlyle way of putting things, and are crowded with rare quotations from copious reading. A sensible and aged minister was heard to say on coming away from one of the last lectures "Somehow I seem to get very near to God in hearing these lectures." They deal heavy blows at Huxleyism and materialism, and constitute a powerful defense of the faith once delivered to the saints.

Moody was said by him, indirectly, in the course of one of the sermons at Worcester, to have been ordained at London, re-ordained in Scotland, baptized anew with the Holy Ghost and with fire at Philadelphia and New York, his youth renewed at Chicago, and soon to be heard on Mars Hill in the Athens of America (if prayer be made without ceasing of the church unto God for him), reasoning of righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come. The "Christian at Work" and its False Teaching.

BY J. G. MATTOON.

Dear Cynosure:—The following from the Christian at Work seems intended to prove that the lodge is better than the churches. Would that it was the only "Christian at work" trying to prove the same thing. But hear it:

"Had the church of Christ faithfully done its duty, there would have been no necessity to-day for the existence of many of these powerful organizations without its pale. But the church shut herself up, in a great measure against human sympathies and human needs, making the great mistake of regarding the soul exclusively, and caring nothing for the body, its God-ordained temple. In this she has widely gone away from the teachings and example of the Master himself, who, while he pardoned sin and conferred eternal life, fed the hungry and healed the sick. What little the church does do in this direction is too much with the air of a prince towards a beggar. So long as it is necessary to go out of the church for the recognition of that brotherhood which Christ himself taught so long will these great secret associations continue to exist and flourish. However much there may be that is objectionable in them, it must be admitted that there is also much that is good, and that they are doing largely what the church ought to have been doing all the time. In fact they grew out of the neglect of the church to perform a class of duties as distinctly set forth by its great founder as any of the sublime doctrines which he taught. If the energies of good Christian brethren devoted so assiduously to the suppression of secret societies, would be devoted to the promotion of the brotherhood of men in the elevation of the masses the world would be much better, a good deal of waste force would be economized, and some good men would appear less to be worshipping a statue, hunting the wind, and crying aloud to the desert.

This is a sad, and alas! a true picture of many of the churches of the present day, but a sadder picture is a minister, paid for preaching the Gospel by people starving for the bread of life, and receiving bribes of God's enemies not to do it, yet floating with the popular tide, to meet that God he has so long dishonored. We have often thought that if every lost soul was to bear a mark showing the cause of its ruin, the most of the lost ministers would be labeled "Bread and Butter." If the church is not what it should be, who but her ministers are to blame for it?

Paul said, "I am pure from the blood of all men," and he gave this as his reason: "For I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God." From which we infer that any minister who knowingly does fail to do this is guilty of the blood of every one who perishes though his neglect. Here is an admission that the church that the Redeemer planted here on earth, and that he died to save, and of which he still claims to be head, is in a great measure a failure and that the lodges are doing what the church ought to have been doing all the time. "In fact they grew out of the neglect of the church," etc. Now we think if a corrupt church is the life of the lodge, a pure church would of course be its death. So it is a death struggle with the lodge to keep the church corrupt; and how well it is succeeding let the corrupt churches and prosperous lodges bear witness. Yes this slimy monster, the lodge, whose life is corruption, and whose bane is purity, to-day has about as much to do in running the churches, as the "Corliss engine" had in running machinery hall at the Centennial.

But here is a thrust directly at the Redeemer himself: "Had the church of Christ faithfully done all its duty, there would have been no necessity to-day for the existence of many of those powerful organizations without its pale;" and if not necessary to-day, they of course were not necessary when the Redeemer was on the earth. Now if, as we are told, Masonry has existed at least since the days of Solomon, and that the Saints John who lived in the days of the Redeemer and were his companions were eminent patrons of the order, then the church never has done its whole duty; an expression we might expect from Tom Paine, but hardly from a Christian editor. He speaks of the brotherhood which Christ himself taught, but which must now be sought for outside of the church, perhaps it can be found in the Grand Lodge of Ohio. (See their action at their last session, on the negro question.) He claims that they are doing largely what the church ought to have been doing all the time, but failed to tell us just what that was. Were the following acts, or any of them a part of the work that the Redeemer left for the church to do, but on account of its neglect were finished by the secret orders? to wit, The mobbing of Bro. Stoddard, Needles and others at Chillicothe, Mo., Aug. 30, 1876? or the mobbing of Hinman and Ronayne at Streator and other places for exposing these secret societies? Was it the abuse heaped upon such ministers as Bernard, Finney, Baird, Springstien, Cogswell and many other seceding Masons? Was it the mobbing, shooting and poisoning of D. P. Rathbun? The initiation of young Leggett into one of the secret orders of Ithaca N. Y., a few years ago? The rescuing of the murderer of Ellen Slade from the hand of justice by the lodge power? The murder of thousands of negroes in the South by the White Leagues? The murders committed in the coal districts of Pennsylvania by the Molly Maguires? The attempt to burn the office of David C. Miller of Batavia, New York? Or the abduction and murder of William Morgan?

For the benefit of the editor, and Masonic ministers generally, we will quote a few lines from the Freemason: "More light is the undying watchword of Freemasonry and yet how many ministers perjure themselves by a lie when they say it is their desire to have and receive all the light and knowledge they can obtain? About one in a hundred tell the truth on this subject if we judge from actual observation and the experience of others."

Who wonders at our churches being corrupted and at the increase of infidelity in our land? Some time ago a man asked me this question: "What am I to think of Christianity, when an acknowledged leader in the church, a man looked up to by the community as a Christian an eloquent Christian, and at times a noisy Christian, but who will, to screen a pet institution, tell a barefaced lie, that I know to be a lie, and I know he knows to be a lie? (We were talking of Masonry and he had been a Mason.) We replied, "Examine the Christian system, and if you find it requires falsehood of its followers, do all you can to destroy it and we'll help you; but if you don't find that to be the case, examine the other system, and if that does, help us to destroy it."

Masonic Statistics.

The lodge in Vermont is supposed to number from seven to ten thousand members. Let us suppose that there are eight thousand. These, at twenty-five dollars per head for initiation fees, would yield two hundred thousand dollars. If this sum should be placed at interest at seven per cent., it would yield an annual revenue of fourteen thousand dollars, which would be sufficient to give the newspapers of all the principal towns of the State a thousand dollars each.

The dues and other taxes imposed by the lodge under intimidation and promises of support, probably yield enough to pay all the expenses of feasting, paraphernalia, pittances to widows and orphans, and other such luxuries, so that this sum of fourteen thousand dollars a year may be regarded as a net income to be devoted to political purposes, support of the interests of Masonry, pay of ambassadors to foreign lodges, etc.

The Rutland Globe appears to be the especial Masonic organ of the State. With true Masonic charity it is sometimes given away to poor men, and it showed itself very busy to find a soft place—a judgeship, or something of the kind, for a poor, back-pay grabbing brother to fall on. The editor has been very busy during the war and since to help turn the crank of the Republican party, and, as the leaders of that party were chiefly made up of good Masons, he saw no corruption in it, no need of a reform.

But matters have changed somewhat of late. A change of party rule seems imminent. The Southern lodge seems to be gaining the ascendancy under the pretense of REFORM; and lo! the Rutland Globe, the organ of the lodge in Vermont, raises aloud its voice for reform! The echo of his cry for making a judge out of a broken-down political back-pay grabber has hardly died away, when he opens on a new track of reform.

Now the people of Vermont have been supposed to be intelligent and honest, and above the practice of fraud and imposition. It is certain, however, that they have been deceived by the frauds and impositions of the lodge. The most honest people in the world may be deceived once, but if they are deceived a second time and a third by the same tricks and the same class of tricksters, their reputation for honesty or intelligence must suffer. If any people can be made to believe in the gross impostures practiced by Masonry, or conceive it possible that a real reform can be effected by or through the Masonic lodge or its organs, they must surrender all claims to those qualifications that are necessary for free self-government. If the eight thousand Masons of Vermont cannot be restored to the original faith of the inhabitants of the State in open, plain, fair dealing—if they have not manliness enough to renounce with scorn the unworthy tricks of the lodge, then reform among them is simply impossible, for tricksters cannot be reformers. Men who teach imposition as an art, can never serve any honest purpose. The cry of the Rutland Globe for reform, is simply a piece of crafty, Jesuitical trickery for the support of the lodge, which must itself be abolished before a reform can be rendered possible. How many Vermonters will be deceived by this shallow trick remains to be seen.

We have thus given a brief statistical and political view of the lodge in Vermont. But since the lodge pretends to be a broader and better religion than Christianity, we may make some reference to the religious character of its members. We may say then, that the most frightfully cynical, dog-like, and inhuman sarcasms that we have ever seen or heard thrown at the Christian religion, come from editors of newspapers who are under the influence of the lodge. They are probably unconscious of this trait of character themselves. They thus work the lodge openly, and expose some of its secrets in public, on the housetops, without being aware of it. It is indeed possible that the church of Christ may be faulty and defective; but who, in his senses, could ever dream that men intelligent enough to be editors of newspapers, even though they might draw their support in part from the lodge, would think of supplying the place of these defects by the low, thimble-rigging jugglery of Freemasonry. The number of Congregational churches in Vermont at one time is said to have been one hundred and ninety-six. This was when Congregationalism, the mother church of New England, the American church we may say, was the prevailing church of the land in that quarter. But now there are only sixty-five settled Congregational ministers in the State. The church has decreased, while the lodge, a foreign religion made up of shams, has very greatly increased.

AMERICUS.

COLORED FREEMASONRY.

Our National Constitution recognizes no distinction on account of race or color, but Masonry which professes to recognize all men of every race or clime as equally entitled to its privileges, rigidly excludes the colored man from its fellowship and classes all colored lodges as clandestine.

The absurdity and injustice of this discrimination will be seen in the following extracts from the Grand Lodge Reports of Ohio, Oct. 10, 1875:

"Your committee, to whom was referred so much of the Annual Address of the Most Worshipful Grand Master as relates to the so-called colored lodges, respectfully submit the following:

"They are satisfied beyond all question that colored Freemasonry had a legitimate beginning in this country; as much so as any other Freemasonry; in fact it came from the same source.

"Your committee has the most satisfactory and conclusive evidence that these colored Freemasons practice the same rites and ceremonies and have substantially the same esoteric or secret modes of recognition as are practiced by ourselves and by the universal family of Freemasons throughout the world.

Respectfully submitted,
L. V. BIERCE,
E. T. CARSON,
C. A. WOODWARD,
L. M. PIKE.

To this L. V. Bierce, P. G. Master, adds: "The Colored Grand Lodge I can vouch for as Masons. Their work will compare favorably with that of most lodges of white Masons. They have the ritual complete." And yet while denying none of the statements in the report the Grand Lodge of Ohio sends the following as its conclusion:

1. That the negro lodges of Ohio are clandestine.

2. That some of the members of the Grand Lodge have held Masonic communication with and vouched for them (and been guilty of unmasonic conduct), and third that to recognize these lodges will destroy the sovereignty of the legitimate Grand Lodge of Ohio. Signed, Chas. A. Woodward, Grand Master, John D. Caldwell, Grand Secretary.

Such are some of the lying absurdities of Freemasonry.

H. H. HINMAN.

HORACE MANN ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Among the distinguished educators of America perhaps none have a national fame superior to that of Horace Mann. Like the most of the earnest anti-slavery men of his day, he abhorred secret societies. We present our readers with an extract from an able argument of his on the subject:

In the first place, before arguing against secret societies, it would seem proper that something should be adduced in their favor. The burden of proof, as the lawyers say, must be sustained by the advocates or defenders of such associations. Some argument in the affirmative should precede the argument in the negative.

But waiving this point, it seems to me that all the higher and nobler instincts of mankind are adverse to such associations. In all ages, openness, frankness, artlessness, sincerity, candor, or by whatever other name the free and true expression of a man's consciousness may be indicated, have always commanded the admiration of men; while secrecy, disguise, concealment, or a disposition to hide one's thoughts and purposes from his fellow-men, have been regarded with a strong repugnance and condemnation. Among moralists, poets, and dramatists, the first class of qualities has been the theme of praise; the last of satire. How deeply and inextricably has this sentiment of the world been wrought into language. Why do we say "open-handed" and "open-hearted" when commending, and "close-fisted," "close-mouthed" or "close-souled" when condemning? Why do all languages ascribe an "open countenance," to a brave and high-souled man, but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villians? "Hand open as the day for melting charity," says Shakspeare, and I think I could call to mind at least a dozen expressions in this one author where the word "open" is used in a praise-giving sense; and perhaps as many where the word "secret" is used for reproach and vituperation, as in the following from Othello: "Closest lock and key of villainous secrets."

The same universal sentiment characterizes the manners of men also. One man we call open, frank, transparent; having a window in his bosom through which we can read his heart; with no labyrinth between his breast and his tongue where truth gets lost. Another is secretive, counterfeit, buried in disguise, deceptive, only half opening his eyes, so that he may see out, but no one see in. Now why is this, in all languages and among all people, if there be not something attractive, praise-enkindling, and congenial to the best qualities in human nature, in what is above-board and undisguised; and something also that is repulsive and odious in predominance of the secretive, furtive propensity? To what class do the secretive animals belong—the fox the tiger, the cat, the snake?

Should brutes imitate men as in Æsop's time, would not these form the "secret societies?"

Is it not also an argument against secret societies that no one of the higher sentiments of men is ever ashamed of what it does, and therefore never desires to act clandestinely, or trickishly, or evasively. Veneration is never ashamed to worship God. The love of justice is never ashamed when holding the balance with untrembling hand between king and subject, between the titled, emblazoned lord and his lowest servitor. Benevolence is never ashamed when discovered at its divine work of charity. And so of all the rest. Avarice, concupiscence, vanity, self-love, must be leading members in the "secret society" of the brain.

Has not diplomacy got a bad name because of its secrecy? Were not the trials of the Inquisition conducted in secret? Are not all the lowest and meanest felonies committed in secret, and forty-nine fiftieths of them in the night? Was it before or after eating the apple that Adam and Eve skulked among the trees? Where do gamblers live? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market-place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong, as the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies. A bond of secrecy is the same to a society that a mask is to an individual; the mask covers the face of one man, the oath of secrecy covers the face of the body corporate.

A BAIT FOR PROTESTANTS!

A nice little pamphlet was put into my hands lately with vigorous expressions in favor of public schools, and equally vigorous protests against the claims of a foreign potentate, the pope, to lord it over any free American citizen. I was about to leave out that word free, for alas! although black slavery has ceased, yet soul slavery abounds. To whom are men in this country slaves? We answer to any power within our bounds which has secretism organized without the sanction of the law of the land, or the law of the Christian's God.

We wish to note here that Freemasons are ever ready to avow themselves as believers in God, but we caution our readers, especially young men who are Christians, against being content with that avowal, for, assuredly, when further inquiry is made, they will find that lodge-men worship their own god. viz: their great architect of the universe, and NOT "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Freemasonry professes to bind Mohammedans, Jews, Chinamen and Christians, as such respectively in a common worship, a common hope in the hereafter, and a reunion in the grand lodge above! But how? We reply by oath-bound worship and ceremonies totally unknown to Christianity. H.

—The Jewish Herald states that "the last four or five years have witnessed a return of the Jews to Palestine from all parts, but more especially from Russia, which has been altogether unprecedented. The Hebrew population of Jerusalem is now probably double what it was some ten years ago. Great accessions still continue daily; and whereas, ten years ago the Jews were confined to their own quarter at Jerusalem, the poorest and worst; they now inhabit all parts of the city, and are always ready to rent every house that is to be let."

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

MR. MOODY'S ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN.

I want to call your attention to-night to a text which you will find in the eighteenth chapter of First Kings, twenty-first verse: "And Elijah came unto all the people and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him, but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word." We found in this portion of the Word of God that Elijah was calling the people of Israel back, or he was calling them to a decision as to whether they were for God or Baal, and a great many were wavering, just halting between two opinions, like the people of Chicago at the present time. During the last eight weeks a great deal has been said upon the subject of religion. Men have talked about it all over the city. A great many are talking, a great many are taking their stand for and a great many against Him. Now what will you do to-night? I will just divide this audience into two portions—one against and one for Him. It seems to me a practical question to ask an audience like this, "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him, but if Baal, then follow him." A man who is undecided about any question of magnitude never has any comfort; never has any peace. Not only that, but we don't like a man who cannot decide upon a question. I like men of decision, and firmly believe that more men are lost by indecision than by anything else. It is a question whether I am not talking to many men to-night who intend some time to settle this question. Probably every one here intends to make heaven his home; but Satan is trying to get you to put off the settlement of the question till it will be too late. If he can only get men to put off till the to-morrow, which never comes, he has accomplished all he wants. How many in this audience have promised some friend years ago that they would settle this question. Maybe you said you would do it when you came of age. That time has gone with some of you, and it has not yet been settled. Some have reached 30, some 40, and others have reached 50 years, their eyes are growing dim, and they are hastening toward eternity, and this is not settled with them yet. Some of you have promised dying brothers that you would meet them in that world, some have promised dying wives that you would meet them in that land of light, and again others have given their word to dying children that you would meet them in heaven. Years have rolled away, and still you have not decided. You have kept putting it off week by week and year by year. My friends, why not decide to-night? "How long halt ye between two opinions?" If the Lord be God, serve Him; if not, turn your back upon Him. It seems to me a question every man can settle if he will. You like those grand old characters in the Bible who have made a decisive stand. Look at Moses! The turning point in his life was when he decided to give up the gilded court of Pharaoh and cast his lot with God's people You will find that every man who has left a record in the Bible have been men of decision. What made Daniel so great? It was because he was a man of decision. What saved the prodigal? It was not that he got into his father's arms, it was not his coming home. The turning point was when he decided the question: "I will rise and go to my father." It was the decision of the young man that saved him. Many a man has been lost because of indecision. Look at Felix, look at Agrippa. Felix said, "Go thy way for this time: when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." See what Agrippa said: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Look at Pilate—all lost; lost because of their indecision. His mind was thoroughly convinced that Jesus was the true Christ; he said, "I find no fault in Him," but he hadn't the courage to take a stand for Him. Thousands have gone down to the caverns of death for want of courage. My friends, let us look this question in the face. If there is anything at all in the religion of Christ give everything for it. If there is nothing in it—if it is a myth, if our mothers who have prayed over us have been deceived, if the praying people of the last 1,800 years have been deluded, let us find it out. The quicker the better. If there is nothing in the religion of Christ let us throw it over and eat, drink and be merry, for time will soon be gone. If there is no devil to deceive us, no hell to receive us, if Christianity is a sham, let us come out like men and say so. I hope to live to see the time when there will only be two classes in this world—Christians and infidels—those who take their stand bravely for Him and those who take their stand against Him. This idea of men standing still and saying, "Well, I don't know, but I think there must be something in it," is absurd. If there is anything in it there is everything in it. If the Bible of our mothers is not true, let us burn it. Is there one in this audience willing to say and do this? If it is a myth, why spend so much money in publishing it? Why send millions of Bibles to the nations of the earth? Let us destroy it if it is false and all those institutions giving the Gospel to the world. What is the use of all this waste of money? Are we mad, are we lunatics who have been deluded? Let us burn the book and send up a shout over its ashes. "There is no God; there is no hell; there is no heaven; there is no hereafter. When men die they die like dogs in the street!" But, my friends, if it is true—if heaven, if a hereafter, if the Bible is true, let us come out boldly, like men, for Christ. Let us take our stand and not be ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Why, it seems to me a question that ought to be settled in this nineteenth century easy enough, whether you are for or against him or not. Why, if Baal be God, follow him! but if the Lord be God, follow Him. If there is no truth in the religion of Jesus Christ, you may as well tear down all your churches, destroy your hospitals, your blind asylums. It's a waste of money to build them. Baalites don't build blind asylums, don't build hospitals, orphan asylums. If there hadn't been any Christians in the world, there would have been no charitable institutions. If it hadn't been for Christianity you would have had no praying mothers. Is it true that their prayers have exercised a pernicious influence? Is it true that a boy who had a praying father and mother, or a good teacher is no better off than a boy who has been brought up amid blasphemy and infamy? Is it true? It must be either one way or the other. Did bad men write that Bible? Certainly not, or they wouldn't have consigned themselves to eternal perdition. The very fact that the Bible has lived and grown during these 1,800 years is a strong proof that it came from God. Men have tried to put it out of the world; men have tried to burn it out of the world, but they have failed. It has come down to us—down these 1,800 years amid persecution, and now we are in a land where it is open to all, and no man need be without one. What put it into the minds of those men to give money liberally to print and circulate this book? Bad men wouldn't do this. This is a question that, it seems to me, could be decided to-night. If it is not good, then take your stand. If the Lord be God, follow Him, but if Baal be God, then follow him. Some one asked Alexander how he conquered the world, and he replied that he conquered it by not delaying. If you want to conquer the devil you must not delay—accept eternal life as a gift to-night. * * * Look at those 450 prophets of Baal and 400 prophets of the grove all covered with blood, as they cry out in their agony. They have no God. Young man, who is your master? Whom do you serve? If you are serving Baal I tell you if ever you get into trouble he will not answer you. No answer came. Three o'clock came, the hour for the evening sacrifice, and Elijah prepared his altar. He would have nothing to do with the altar of Baal. He merely took twelve stones, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, and built his altar, and laid his bullock on. No doubt some skeptic said he had some fire concealed in his garment, for he digs a trench all around it to hold water. Then he tells them to bring four barrels of water, and empties them over his sacrifice. Four more barrels are brought and thrown on the bullock, making eight, and then four barrels more are added, making twelve in all. Then there lies that bullock, dripping with water, and Elijah comes forward. Every ear and eye is open. Those bleeding Baalites look at him. What is going to be the end of it? He comes forward, calm as a summer evening. He prays to the God of Isaac and Abraham—when, behold, look! look! down it comes—fire from the very throne of God and consumed the wood, the stones and the sacrifice, and the people cry, "The Lord is the God." The question is decided. The God that answereth by fire is the God of man. My friends, who is your God now? The God who answers prayer, or have you no God?

I can imagine some of you saying, "If I had been on Mount Carmel and seen that I would have believed that." But I will tell you of a mount on which occurred another scene. That was a wonderful scene, but it does not compare with the scene on Calvary. Look there! God's own beloved Son hanging between two thieves and crying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Talk about wonderful things. This has been the wonder of ages. A man once gave me a book of wonderful things. I saw a good many wonders in it, but I did not see anything so wonderful in it as the story of the cross. My friends, see his expiring look. See what happened. The very rocks were rent, the vail of the Temple was rent, and all nature owned its God. The sun veiled its face and darkness fell over the earth when the Son of Man expired on Mount Calvary. Where can you find a more wonderful sight than this? Those Israelites lived on the other side of the cross; we live on this side of it. If a man wants proof of His Gospel, look around this assembly. See men who thirty days ago were slaves, bound hand and foot to some hellish passion which was drawing them to hell. What a transformation there is. All things seem changed to them. They have got a new nature. Is not this the power of God? Said a young convert to me to-day: "It seems as if we were living in the days of miracles, and the Son of God is coming down and giving men complete victory over lusts and passions." That is what the Son of God does for men, and yet, with all the proofs before their eyes, men are undecided.

What is it that keeps you from your decision. I wish I had time to tell you many of the reasons. Hundreds of thousands of men are thoroughly convinced, but they lack moral courage to come out and confess their sins. Others are being led captive by some sin. They have got some darling sin, and as long as they hold on to it there is no hope. A man the other day said he would like to become a Christian, but he had a bet upon the election, and he wanted that settled first. He did not think that he might die before that was decided. Eternity is drawing on. Suppose we die without God, without hope, without everlasting life, it seems to me it would have been better to never have been born. My friends, I ask you to-night, why not come out like men? Say, "Cost what it will, I will accept Jesus to-night." Now have moral courage. Come. How many of you are thoroughly convinced in your minds that you ought to be Christians to-night? Now just ask yourselves the question, "What hinders me, what stands in my way?" I can imagine some of you looking behind you to see how the one sitting there looks. If he seems serious, you look serious; if he laughs you will laugh, and come to the conclusion that you'll not accept him to-night. You think of your companions, and you say you cannot stand their jeers. Is not that so? Come. Trample the world under your feet and take the Lord to-night, cost what it will. Say, "By the grace of God I will serve him from this hour." Turn your backs upon hell, and set your faces toward heaven, and it will be the best night of your lives.

OUR FOREIGN LETTER.

London—Its buildings and Streets—Busy Bakers—A Post-office Incident—London Parks—Kensington Palace and Albert Memorial—Crystal Palace.

LONDON, Eng.

Though there are seen in London numberless buildings and objects of interest, black with age and bending under the weight of years, which remind one that he is in the "Old World", yet the larger portion of it is not so very different in general appearance from our American cities. The streets are crooked, but very cleanly, and many of them of good width. If the business blocks and buildings (with a few exceptions) are not so showy as those of New York and Chicago, at least they are more durable and substantial. Its system of railway travel is complicated; but when understood, nearly all parts of London are accessible to the traveller with the greatest of ease and speed and at little cost. It is a busy city; cabs and omnibuses and tram-cars drive at full speed continually along the streets, while heavy carts and monstrous wagons, bearing freight and goods help to fill up the thoroughfares. They make no tarryings at crossings,and foot passengers are supposed to look out for themselves, since they seem to have no rights that drivers are bound to respect. The wonder is that there are so few accidents, for really life and limb, to the stranger at least, seem hardly at all safe.

One can but observe as he passes along the streets of London the tempting displays, exhibited at every few doors of bread, cakes, pies and pastry of all kinds, all sold cheap in comparison with American prices. So many of the inhabitants live in lodgings and hire their victuals cooked, and buy their bread and pies, that these shops are perhaps more numerous here than in any other city in the world. There are coffee and chop houses everywhere, and one will frequently see persons go to a meat shop and buy a chop or a steak, and take it into a coffee house near by to have it cooked. No charge is generally made for the cooking, but he is expected to take a cup of coffee and bread with it.

I have not yet learned to appreciate the English postal system, although I have always understood that it was most excellent. All letters sent to London merely, are kept in a sort of "general delivery" for a few days, then are sent to the "return letter office on Telegraph St., and marked "insufficiently addressed", where they remain for a week and then are remailed or rather sent to the U. S. dead letter office (if from that country). To show the practical inconvenience of the plan, I will mention an incident. A young friend of mine went repeatedly for letters and got none. At last by chance hearing of the "return letter office", we went to it together, and after waiting a long time a letter was found for him which had been at that office a week and was to have been sent to the U. S. dead letter office the next day. Though the letter was addressed to the care of a well-known firm of the city, a little indistinctness in the writing, perhaps, had consigned it immediately to the return letter office. My friend was of course delighted at finding a letter there and in his mother's handwriting too — when the gentleman at the office took the letter from him again, and said that although it was his letter, he could not let him have it there, that the "return letter office" was not a "receiving office." "How am I to get my letter that I have been waiting so long for?" he asked. "You will have to leave your address," the man replied, "and it will be brought around to your stopping place by the postman." So he had to go away without opening his letter, and about eight at night, sure enough, the postman brought round the very letter that my friend had had in his own hand six or eight hours before, and had not been permitted to retain! How is that for red tape.

The parks of London, in some respects do not equal either those of New York or Chicago. There is less money constantly laid out upon them. The rustic bridges and shady retreats, and winding walks, the hills and bowers and pavilions, the cascades and caves. which form such a marked feature of Lincoln and Union Parks, Chicago, and of Central Park New York, are pretty generally wanting in the parks here. Yet they are beautiful, doubly so because of the crowded city in which they are placed. Many of them have trees, large and stately, hundreds of years old, giving abundance of shade. Hyde Park contains 388 acres; if to this be added Kensington Gardens, which really are a part of the park, we have 210 acres more. Serpentine lake or river in this park is a beautiful body of water, and the walks and drives cannot be surpassed in smoothness. Kensington Gardens have beautiful shady walks and almost a forest of large and ancient trees.

To the west of the gardens is Kensington Palace, an almost unsightly mass of irregular brick buildings spread over a large area, and noted as the birth-place of Queen Victoria; so I examined them more thoroughly than I otherwise would have done. The "Prince Albert Memorial" in the park is the most magnificent, most gorgeously beautiful monument I ever beheld. As we gazed at it in the light of the setting sun, its spire, cross, and gilt statues, seemed all afire, so brilliant were they in their gilded glory. Some idea of its vastness may be had from a knowledge of its height, which is 180 feet. Near by is Royal Albert Hall,—a music hall, as magnificent for a building as is the Memorial for a monument. I attended a concert given by a thousand voices in it. It is a circular building and seats 8,000 or more.

Its immense galleries rising above and behind the front and lower ones, circle the entire building and reminds one of descriptions of the Coliseum at Rome. It is lighted by some 6,000 gas jets which are lighted by electricity. Some of the other city parks are the St. James and Green; small, but gems of beauty, around which the houses of Royalty cluster; Regent's Park (472 acres) containing magnificent Zoological and Botanical gardens; Southwark Park, a green common with walks, and not entirely wanting in trees and shrubbery; and Battersea Park (265 acres) the newest. wildest and to my mind the most beautiful of them all. Here little birds in great numbers flit fearlessly around, and swans, both black and white, and ducks of different hues glide over its lake. Although it is October, certain portions of it abounded in flowers. Its walks led by dense woods and shrubbery, and winding waters girdled with flags, and upon whose surface pond-lily leaves floating, seemed to speak of blossoms that once were there. Here I found real rocks, rough and rugged, over which fell a beautiful stream of water, forming the only cascade I have seen in the parks of this city.

Crystal Palace, which I visited one bright sunny day in October, is at Sydenham, four miles south of Greenwich, on the south side of the Thames. It is an immense glass structure some 1,600 feet long and over 300 feet wide, full of wonders and interesting curiosities and collections, reminding one somewhat of the Centennial at Philadelphia, only its exhibits partake more of the ancient and unique. Its Egyptian, Greek and Roman courts and its Alhambra first interested me,—being exact representations of houses and dwellings of those nations of the past, as well as of the Moors of Spain. I could walk through their various room and apartments, and imagine myself living in the times of Pharoah, of Alexander or of the Cæsars, or in feudal times when castles and tournaments abounded and knight-erranty was all the rage. Here too was the Pompeian House, a fac simile of houses exhumed at Pompeii. In the tropical department were growing palms, bamboos and bananas and near them were tropical birds, cockatoos, parrots, love birds and the Laughing Jackass from Australia, &c. The view from the north tower of the palace is exceeding fine; some thirty miles of most beautiful English scenery, diversified with hills and valleys, houses and villages. The view from the Round tower of Windsor Castle which I visited afterwards perhaps rivals it. The castle is magnificent, besides having the additional charm of being a little ancient. I went over the State apartments of the Palace, its drawing rooms, ball-rooms, and dining hall, the Queen's audience chamber and "presence chamber", and saw beautiful tapestry, rare paintings, furniture, &c., &c. But I have not time to enlarge at present.

Correspondence

A New Order.

Leetonia, O., Nov. 10, 1876.

One of the great objections to all the old orders is that of secrecy, oath-binding, etc., but this new order which has sprung up within the last few weeks in Columbiana Co., State of Ohio, has made it a specialty to escape all the odium which attaches to many other orders, by leaving out all the objectionable features, as far as possible, and hence the following elements have been omitted by design: secrecy, oath-binding, antiquity, and all claim to benevolence and charity, and even the Christian features, claimed by most of the other orders, are entirely discarded. You may be ready to smile and ask, What kind of an order have you? Well, if you will be patient we will tell you, and not require you to keep it secret either.

Some three or more years ago,the Odd-fellows organized a lodge in a small village called Railtown in Beaver county, Pa., and about two miles from a congregation of United Presbyterians; and it happened that one of the members of this new order preached in said congregation, and in referring to secret orders condemned them as anti-Christian and anti republican, and thereby the wrath of those most honorable and benevolent orders was stirred (ad fundum), and said preacher was railed on as a liar and ignorant, and with other honorable and benevolent epithets.

But truth has a way of vindicating itself, and it transpired in process of time that a Mr. J. D. got hold of "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" and applied himself to the study of the mysterious rites and ceremonies of the mystic band of "brothers," and being naturally gifted for the work he had in view, in a very short time he commences an application of the revelations set forth in the illustrated work and found that they were admirably adapted to give an insight into the hidden workings of the lodge as regards this order, and it was but a short time until he was hailed as a brother, even by his most intimate friends and acquaintances. During that period of time of his supposed connection with the fraternity, the signs, grips and passwords peculiar to the order, were freely exchanged with him by the genuine members of the "Independent Order," and by this means all fears and doubts as to the truth of the revelation were dispelled, and now, being confident, he visited the lodge at Railtown and was very politely shown its furniture. All was exposed, even to the "scene," "the dry bones" in a box, the mortal remains "of one who was born as you were born, who lived as you now live, and who for many days enjoyed his possessions, his power and his pleasure." Now this quiddam brother, having seen all the glory of this lodge, and having attained to a good degree a knowledge of the secrets of the I. O. O. F., and being of a very generous turn of mind, began to instruct others in the mystic rites, and this very great generosity upon the part of this brother, very soon worked the ruin of said lodge at Railtown.

Now this generous brother, in connection with some others of a similar turn of mind, believing that "to do good and communicate" is a Scripture duty, after much thought and deliberation, at a public meeting called in the town of Columbiana,State of Ohio, on the 17th day of Oct., in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, proceeded to open a lodge in due form and work the first initiatory degree, and on Friday evening, the 3d of Nov., we also opened the lodge in due form and worked the same degree in a small village by the name of Clarkson before a full house. On this occasion we had prepared ourselves with the accoutrements, such as collars, gowns and masks, somewhat after the costume of the old order, and this equipment gave us a much better appearance, because it made us much more odd, and it produced a more thrilling effect on the audience, especially on that portion connected with or in sympathy with the secret orders.

ow let me tell your readers that we think we can do the working of the lodge very nearly as well as the ancient, honorable and benevolent secret lodges themselves; and we are led to this conclusion not because of any peculiar smartness on our part, but because of some peculiar advantages that have fallen in our way, which we need not mention, though under no obligation to keep it secret. Now as we have laid claim to great generosity, and as we wish to show our faith by our works, and do good unto all men as we have opportunity, we are ready and willing to go a reasonable distance and work our lodge publicly for parties wishing it, and we ask no remuneration except our traveling expenses, and we guarantee an exhibition of Odd-fellowship that will defy gainsaying. Hence any parties at a reasonable distance from the town of Columbiana, State of Ohio, wishing such an exhibition as above stated can obtain what information they may desire, by addressing either Mr. A. McGraw at Leetonia, Columbiana Co., State of Ohio; or Mr. J. Donavon at Clarkson, same county and State; or Rev. S. Patterson, Darlington, Beaver Co., Pa.

Let me say in conclusion that four at least, of this new order voted the American party ticket on last Tuesday (Nov. 7th). Your readers may see that we mean business. S. A.

Notes from a Centennial Trip.

Jacksonville, Ill., Nov. 27

Editor Cynosure:—Having like the Prodigal Son of old, wandered from my father's house (for the space of ten weeks), and spent my money, not like the Prodigal Son in riotous living, but in sight-seeing, I thought you would like to hear from a friend of the cause which you espouse and teach.

The Centennial, of course, was the great Mecca to which all pilgrims were bound, your humble servant among them, making a pleasure trip of it generally, visiting friends, and seeing places of note and interest on my route. The Falls of Niagara were on the way, and of course had to be seen; it took two days to see all the wonders and beauties connected with the great cataract. From there I went up to Lockport, N. Y., and visited an old relative and settler of that country. It being near the mouth of Niagara, where Morgan was no doubt sent to the other world by the Masonic fraternity, I made inquiries about it and found out that the fraternity had covered their tracks well, and the people generally seemed to be in the dark, and in doubt about the finale of that high-handed outrage. Such is the subtleness and sly working of Masonry; as it was then able to cover up and conceal its tracks and defy law, so it is able and does so do to-day, as anyone not blind can see.

After leaving Lockport, via. Hudson River Railway (two locomotives and twenty coaches; a Centennial train) I visited New York City four days, and saw some places of interest, among which was the great Court House, the history of whose cost and construction is familiar to most of the citizens of this nation. Suffice it to say for those not posted, that it was built by a reform ring, and the same building could be built by a ring not reformed for one-third of the money, and be completed at that, which the present building is not, but far from it.

Went to Brooklyn on Sunday, and heard the two popular preachers, Beecher and Talmage. Comments on them I will not make, but would say to all who visit Brooklyn to go and hear them, and think for themselves; but must say that I do not approve of a man getting up in a pulpit on Sunday and getting off some half-dozen rusty jokes during his sermon, as Beecher did. Think the circus arena is the place for such.

After visiting friends in New Jersey, I arrived at the great Centennial, the show of shows; had expected to see a large and grand exhibition, but was not prepared for quite such an extensive exhibit.

Found Bro. Hodge after some time, and spent many an hour with him; sometimes he would be alone and at other times would be surrounded by a crowd of foes and friends. It was highly amusing to see how different the Masons would act in regard to the exposing of the order; some would get mad and make some remark of contempt for any one who would talk against such a great and ancient order. Some would talk in a joking manner, but never acknowledge anything; some would try the bluff argument. All of these classes Bro. Hodge would be prepared, for either by extracts from Mackey's Ritual, or works of like merit recognized as a standard, and often he would show them portions of the Bible they had stolen and mutilated and adopted in their Masonic foolery! An M. E. Rev. Mason said if the Masonic ritual had so misconstrued the Bible it must be a mistake of the printer, and was not right, but it did not seem to hurt his feelings, or bring out expressions of contempt for the lodge that would do such work.

The Masonic Temple at Philadelphia is one of the finest Masonic buildings in the country. The various lodge-rooms were named and the dimensions given same as some of King Solomon's Temple chambers. One room was divided by veils into several apartments—it was called the Rennaissance Hall. The fraternity had a memorial volume to sell, giving a history of the temple. I looked over the preface and found where it read thus: "This building is constructed and set apart for the use and display of arts, science and universal charity." The last, I thought, was most too fa fetched, and upon farther reading, it read about the "Grand Holy Royal Arch Chapter" of Philadelphia. Step forward, ye Masons who say the institution is not religious, and those per contra, please arise and explain to us poor deluded individuals outside, which is correct, so we may be led from darkness to light. The said memorial volume also had prayers, delivered at the ceremonies connected with the corner-stone laying, etc., and in them I noticed that Christ's name was not used, the greatness and goodness of the lodge was the offering, and upon its merits they claimed favor of God. I suppose some bright Mason can be found who will deny the above facts; if so, let them buy the book; it is for sale and costs only $5.

Having "done" the Centennial to my satisfaction and viewing the sights of the city of Brotherly Love in like manner, I took a flying trip to the grand old ocean, then through Washington and to Cincinnati, home. I must not forget to relate an incident or two which amused me very much. While in a dry goods house I shook hands with a man and gave him the 3rd degree grip; he returned grip No. 1, and made the remark that I was higher up than he was; and again along the route home, a stranger at one of the way stations, with whom I had been talking, gave me the cut-throat sign as Ronayne gives it, and of course I took note of it, and concluded that our exposes were only too true. Yours in F. L. and T.,

Ben. F. Cole.

Yates City Lodge as Defendant.

Yates City, Ill., Nov. 18, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—I informed you last spring that I had brought a suit against Yates City Lodge, No. 448, as a corporation, for the money paid said lodge for the rights and privileges of Masonry; that I had recovered a judgment of $25; and that Worshipful Master Hensley, and Past Master Langdon had made themselves personally responsible for the same and I presumed I should eventually recover my money. Now I was hoping to soon see the end of my controversy with the lodge, but I have again been disappointed. I now propose to give you the particulars for the purpose of showing the Masonic way of conducting a lawsuit, so that persons who are not Masons may see just what they have to contend with in our courts in case they have any controversy with Masons.

At the trial of my case before a police magistrate, March 15, 1876, there were present perhaps a dozen members of the lodge, but when the Court asked if there was any one present to represent the defendant no reply was made. I was then sworn as a witness in my own behalf, and on my oath that defendant was justly indebted to me to the amount of $25, I procured judgment for that amount and costs. The Master then filed an appeal bond for the purpose of bringing the matter into the circuit court, or, as I think for the purpose of taking it beyond my reach, as this was only a few days after the Master had made affidavit to the effect that I was perfectly bankrupt and not responsible for the costs of a lawsuit. The brethren had considerable discussion as to the propriety of paying up the judgment, and a majority were in favor of doing so. But some of them were foolish enough to undertake to extort from me a promise that in the event of the judgment being paid without any further trouble I would keep my mouth shut on the subject. As that was more than I would promise, the money was not paid. The Worshipful Master assured his brethren that he had an object in contesting the payment of the judgment, and if they would let him alone he would bring the lodge out all right. The result of the trial in the circuit court shows very clearly how the Master proposed to bring the lodge out all right.

The case was not reached at the June term of court but was reached and tried at the October term. Just before the trial of the case, Major Dollard, the defendant's attorney, proposed to me to dispense with a jury, assuring me at the same time that the judge was no Mason. As it would have been considerable trouble to select a perfectly disinterested jury I consented to the Major's proposition. Then as soon as the case was tried Major Dollard informed me that Judge Smith took one degree in Masonry several years ago, but went no further. Now if Judge Smith ever took one degree in Masonry he is a Mason and was known to be a Mason by the Master of Yates City Lodge when he filed his appeal bond for the purpose of bringing the case before Bro. Smith. It might not do for me to assert that there was a private understanding between the Master and Judge Smith, but I can assert that Masonry furnishes facilities for such understandings so secret that it cannot be reached by an outsider.

On the trial I proved that I gave due notice to the Master on the 14th of June, 1873, that I could not be present at the time appointed by him (June 19, 1873) for my trial on charges of un-masonic conduct without interfering with my duties as county surveyor. The court decided that such a notice as I gave the Master was not sufficient to entitle me to a continuance and to the benefits of Secs. 62 and 63 of the Grand Lodge by-laws, which sections provide that a Mason under charges shall have ample time and opportunity to prepare his defense, and shall have the right to be present at all examinations of witnesses either in or out of the lodge, and to propose such relevant questions as he may desire.

While the Judge was rendering his decision I asked him if he allowed that Masonic lodges had the same powers as a circuit court and he replied (in substance) that they had over their own members. I am not well posted in legal forms but after the decision was rendered I asked immediately for a new trial and for time to present my grounds for a new trial, and I also asked for the grounds of the decision in writing. I sent my application for a rehearing to the clerk by mail, and in due time received the following answer: "The Court directs me to say that he will be obliged to overrule your petition for a rehearing and that if you wish to prepare the case for appeal to the Supreme Court you had better see Mr. Dollard and arrange the bill of exceptions and send it up for the Judge's signature.

——, Clerk."

I have not seen the Major but have written the bill of exceptions as well as I could. I do not expect to make any money by carrying the case to the Supreme Court, but if Masonic lodges can interfere with county officers the public ought to know it. W. H. ROBINSON.

OUR MAIL.

Lyman Scovil, Monroe, Wis., writes:

"I read 'Our Mail' with interest, believing it wise to let every subscriber of the Cynosure send in his motto with his money; this may serve to keep him committed to the cause we are engaged in I take the Cynosure out of principle. believing it contains truth which the Bible commands us to buy, and wars against the great powers of darkness that every enlightened Christian abhors."

Rev. H. T. Cheever, Worcester, Mass., writes:

"Your reports of the Moody meetings are cheering. That address of Whittle's on the work of the Holy Spirit is especially valuable. The times demand more than ever such an organ as the Cynosure, bold and independent, having clean hands. May you wax stronger and stronger."

A friend who has long been laboring in this cause, writes:

"I am trying to do what I can, but that is little. I feel deeply the importance of this era, the Centennial and the campaign. In order to work during harvest I make everything yield to that point. I take no paper but the Cynosure, tracts and books, and sell, lend or give as opportunity presents. In order to do this besides devoting much of my time to the work, I have to restrict my expenses; wear old clothes, only keep them whole or mended, and clean; deny myself luxuries, such as sugar in tea, butter, etc. Still I want no good thing, for I am blessed with perfect health and relish plain food, and enjoy sweet sleep; my conscience is at rest. I feel I am owned and blessed of God. And then the Lord is shaking terribly the earth—he is triumphing and the wicked are trembling, and we rejoice. Our conflicts here will make heaven so sweet."

Jane Liggett, Mt. Ayr, Ringgold county, Iowa, writes:

"Secretism prevails here among both men and women, and is undisturbed. I believe our Cynosure is the only one that comes to this office. I wish some one would come this way and give us a lecture on the subject. It seems like presumption in so humble an individual as myself to attempt to do anything against this giant evil, but trusting in Him who can use weak things to accomplish His purposes, I am willing to do what I can"

Elbert Marcy, who takes the only Cynosure at present sent to Delaware, writes:

"I think that there is a better chance here for the anti-secrecy cause than in Virginia. One of the leading lawyers said to me that he was a high Mason, but that aMsonry is all a humbug, and that he will read the Cynosure. He shall have mine to read. Also the leading doctor here says that Masonry is all a cheat, and that the Masons have swindled him out of $1,000. He has taken a demit and will not have anything more to do with them, but he reads with much caution and says he dare not divulge the secrets. I think I can convince him that they have no secrets. He was Master of a lodge."

John McCullough, Pella, Iowa, writes:

"I think Bros. Ronayne and Hodge are doing a good work. We ought to have Ronayne here to stir up the people on this subject."

Elisha McCoy, Union City, Michigan, writes:

"I read Morgan's book when it was first published and soon became a leading Anti-mason with many others in the State of New York. I made myself very soon so fully acquainted with Masonry that strangers took me for a Mason; and now no Mason can make me believe that their secrets are not all known to the outside world. I soon lost friends who were Masons, but made many who were not Masons fast friends by the course I took When the Ethiopian can change his skin and the leopard his spots, then and not till then can the Mason save himself from sin and go to heaven by knocking off the rough corners of fallen nature with his little mallet, square and compass, and by his passwords Boaz and Jachin, and Maha-bone, enter heaven, for Christ says, 'without me ye can do nothing.' Leave Christ out of the plan of human redemption and you are lost, for he alone can save lost sinners."

Lorenzo D. Brown, Montmorenci, Ind., writes:

"Why, just to think, in this free, open, republican government, to have a secret band of men sworn under death penalties to conceal their designs, their works and their obligations to one another! Why God will say to them 'Who hath demanded these oaths and obligations at your hands? Have I ever been ashamed of my works of love and benevolence to man or taught you to swear men by my name to do evil? It is not to me that you swear, but to Satan whom you serve. I command you to repent and break your oath with him and swear not at all.' I maintain here publicly that Ku-Kluxism in the South is simply Southern Freemasonry fully ripe, i. e. gone to seed; and it is the spirit of Masonry the world over. Why, my dear brethren, we have a just right to suspect men of the worst crimes known to men who thus swear each other to conceal their designs and works and devices It is astonishing how intelligent people can be quiet while knowingly surrounded by such a state of things when it is in their power to prevent it so easily as by their votes. But they are not thoroughly waked up here yet; they are only a little disturbed in their slumbers by the tracts and papers distributed and my testimony thrown in. We need a rousing lecture and Masonry turned inside out."

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER furnishes its readers with carefully prepared lessons rich in suggestion and Scripture helps. Rev. E. F. Williams contributes an article on sorcery and sorcerers and Prof. Mathews one on Sabbath-school music worth reading, in the December number. Adams Blackmer and Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

The Hon. James Yates (an Englishman), after protracted inquiry and investigations in the schools and among those best able to judge of the matter, reported that the complete adoption of the decimal, in place of the present English weights and measures, would save two full years in the school-life of every child educated. In our country the saving would be something less, because of our adoption of the decimal currency; but the most conservative teachers acknowledge that something like this amount of time would be saved each child if our present confusion of measures were entirely replaced by he International or Metric System. Regardless of the much greater commercial and international claims of the new system, it is certainly one of the most prominent educational questions now before the people, and there was ample room for the association recently incorporated in Boston as the American Metric Bureau.

LESSON LI.—DEC. 10, 1876.—PETER'S RELEASE.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts xii 1-17. Commit 1-7; Primary verse, 7.

1 Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hand to vex certain of the church.

2 And he killed James the brother of John with the sword.

3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.)

4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quarternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals: and so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee and follow me.

9 And he went out, and followed him; and wist not that it was true that was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision.

10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out and passed through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate a damsel came to hearken named Rhoda.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in and told how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is his angel.

16 But Peter continued knocking; and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren And he departed and went into another place.

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 7, 1876.

Is it consistent with a deep state of spirituality to unite with secret societies and take their oaths?

ANSWER BY MR. MOODY.—Of course every man must do as he pleases. I can't speak for others, but I could not belong to a secret society. Christ said, "In secret have I said nothing;" and Paul says, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." I would not like to be yoked up with unbelievers in anything. I don't see how a Christian man can yoke himself in partnership with an unconverted man. I know a Christian who is in difficulty now. He formed a partnership with two unconverted men, and they have done something which will compromise him—break him—or make him do an infamous thing. Separate yourselves from the world and the things of the world. God wants his people separate. They will have ten thousand times more influence when separate from the world. It is separation, not compromise that we want. The cry ought to be raised all over this Western country, "Separation, SEPARATION!" But people will say, If you take that stand—lift yourselves so high—a great many of these men will leave the church. Never mind. If we should lose some church members we shall gain many that are better men. Hundreds will come in and take their places. There should be no compromise. Some try to control the pulpits on this subject. They say, "He don't preach according to our ideas. We don't want him." May God, in his love, deliver us from the many difficulties we have to contend against.

PROF. PHELPS ON "CHRISTIAN AMUSEMENTS."

"O most lame and impotent conclusion."

I have just read Prof. Phelps' (of Andover) "Christian theory of amusements," and give the Cynosure readers the sum of it.

1. Of card-playing he says: "Are not Christian fathers often sensible in their argument with growing sons, that the traditionary objections to card-playing are not conclusive?" And without giving a hint as to whether he thinks card-playing should be practiced in Christian families, he thus closes: "Either the argument for it (non-card-playing) must be re-enforced, or its claims should be abandoned. Better the surrender than the enforcement by conservative authority alone." And thus, without helping the anxious parent to a single argument for or against "the surrender" of his house to card-playing, he passes to the next proposition.

2. "We must have a theory of amusements, which require no concealments." Under this he proceeds to hint that some clergymen attend theatres when abroad, and preach against them at home. Then comes proposition

3. "We must have a theory of amusements which admits of no suspense of conscience in practice." Under this head he seems to intimate that many practice amusements without consulting their conscience at all, which, he reminds them, Christ did not do.

4. "We must have a theory which, in its practical working, will not alienate from us the sympathies of the great majority of God's people." That is, he argues, one man should not set up his own judgment against that of the great mass of his Christian brethren, and thus exhibit "self-conceit," and alienate "fraternal affection." This savors of majority-made consciences. How is one to know whether more Episcopal and Roman Catholic and Lutheran families play cards and dance, than there are Presbyterians and others who do not.

One thing Prof. Phelps says, however, well and forcibly. He tells us that if men hold a theory of amusements which leads them to practice them in secret, "blunt men of the world will denounce such ethics as the ethics of a sneak."

It seems to us that this sharp rebuke applies to the ethics of Prof. Phelps' article. Why should not a theological professor, teaching ministers how to teach the masses, come out squarely for or against dancing, cards, billiards, etc., in Christian families? Either dancing and praying blend well with and strengthen each other, or they do not. Cards, introduced by Gipsies into Europe as tools of fortune telling, retain a tinge from the complexion of their origin, or they do not. They sinfully consume time or they do not. The whist-table recruits the gambling hell or it does not; and the ethics which shun to take an open, manly, and Christian stand for or against these and cognate practices, in the words of Prof. Phelps, are "the ethics of a sneak."

Mr. Moody, the other day said to five or six thousand people that it was absurd to suppose that Noah and his family were dancing in the Ark, while the outside world was drowning; and that the world outside the Kingdom of Christ is as surely sinking now as in the days of Noah; and the common people hear Mr. Moody as they did Christ, —"gladly." But a generation of ministers, who preach as Prof. Phelps writes, on topics so practical and wide-spread as billiards, theaters, cards, and dancing, will disgust the masses with the pulpit, emasculate preaching, and eventually run down their churches.

We respectfully pray Prof. Phelps, and all theological professors to consider whether these things are not so; whether they are not switching off the pulpit from the popular mind, and surrendering the masses to the earnest advocates of heresy and error, who are always so explicit as to show which side they are on, for Christ or against him; and whether they do or do not believe in retribution after death. May God give to his church an earnest, loving, explicit ministry, who will faithfully apply his word to the ways of men.

IT DON'T INTERFERE WITH YOUR POLITICS.

One of the best arguments for Anti-masonic political action came to us the other day from New England. It seems that Gen. Harland, a gentleman who had seen service for his country in the late war and gave an arm for her, was elected probate judge for the Norwich, Conn., district on his return home, and filled the office for several years to the general satisfaction of all the people irrespective of party. On the expiration of his term he was nominated for re-election, the Democrats nominating a high Mason. The Republican party is largely in the majority in the district, and the entire ticket, with the exception of probate judge, was elected. Both parties were surprised that Gen. Harland should have failed. Again this fall he was nominated and the same Freemason put forward by the opposing party, and with the same result at the polls. Let the following letter from the Norwich Bulletin, Nov. 8th, from the Republican candidate for Governor of Connecticut two years ago, tell the reason:

"I said last night in Breed Hall, 'I am prouder of Norwich to-night than I ever was before.' So I was, and so I am. I never knew the Democratic party in Norwich to make so desperate a struggle before, and I never knew the Republican party in Norwich to fight better or win a more glorious victory, and I was thinking of this when I spoke. But one thing occurred which is a disgrace to the Republican party in Norwich—one hundred and ten Republicans voted against Gen. Harland for judge of probate. They voted against a hero if ever there was one; they voted against a Republican if ever there was one; they voted against an able, honest man if ever there was one; they voted against the man best fitted for the place; and they voted for a staunch Democrat because he was a Mason. I was asked yesterday several times if there was any danger of the General's defeat. I said, 'I will bet a hundred to fifty that he will be elected. There is not a Republican in Norwich mean enough to vote against Gen. Harland to-day,' and so I thought. I say shame upon every Republican who voted against him.

JAMES LLOYD GREENE."

—The General Agent and Secretary spoke last week Monday evening in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Boston, Rev. David McFall pastor. He is attending the New Hampshire State Convention this week and will probably go to Pittsburgh during next week.

—Bro. Hinman is now spending a short time in Indiana. He lectured last week in Winchester.

—Past Master Ronayne started Monday morning for Lorain county, Ohio. He holds expositions in Berea and other points in the vicinity and begins work in Pittsburgh on the 18th inst.

—Friend John Dorcas wishes us to correct the name attached to a protest against the giving up of the "Seventh-day" Sabbath as published three weeks since. The letter was, it seems, from Jesse Dorcas.

—The American Wesleyan tells the following good story—good because true, which will be appreciated by our readers:

A few years ago a one-story frame building for grange and Good Templar purposes was erected in the neighborhood of a Wesleyan church. There were also a number of decided Anti masons in the Methodist church near by. Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, lectured in the neighborhood against secret societies. A Methodist brother who owned the land on which the hall stood, and who contributed largely to its erection remarked, prophetically of course, that these anti-secret lectures would result in an additional story to the secret society hall. Many disbelieved and shook their heads wisely at the wisdom of this new seer's prophetic ken. But time, the great arbiter of many of earth's relations has fulfilled the discredited prophecy to the letter. the occupation of the once flourishing grange hall being like Othello's—"gone"—that good Methodist brother has moved it up near his barn and put "an additional story" under it for stables, using the upper part for hay. MORAL:

1. Wherever the lesser secret orders exist, there is a chance for an "additional story" sometime.

2. The "additional story" is usually a lower story, either of utility like the foregoing, or of sworn secretism which always, like all sin, graduates downward.

—The Independent has struck a new "lead" in the premium business, having given up cheap chromos for cheaper novels. It announces a full line of Dickens' works, one volume with each subscriber. Let us hope for a change in that paper or let it drop the pretense of being a "religious" journal.

—So far as we have observed the denominational papers of Chicago have made no mention of Mr. Moody's testimony against the secret orders in their reports of the Christian Convention two weeks ago. The daily newspapers have fairly put the so-called religious press to shame in this respect.

—A grange master in Iowa magnifies his office in a very characteristic and offensive way by writing to the Tribune a doleful letter about the Inter-ocean's late expose of the grange ritual. He advises the Patrons of Husbandry to drop such a wicked paper as the latter proves to be by that publication; as if the whole silly stuff had not been published for years from several places in the country.

—The revival is not confined to Chicago and the Moody meetings. From Peoria, Fort Wayne and other inland cities where the evangelists have gone we hear of many who have set their faces heavenward. Scores of churches are feeling the power of the work. A most hopeful work of grace has begun in the College church at Wheaton and also among the Wesleyan brethren, and is marked by the reclaiming of Christians long in darkness and men given to strong drink.

Reform News.

Sequel to the Connecticut State Meeting.

The same week we had our State meeting there was a meeting of Methodist Episcopal ministers in this place which at first I was afraid would cause our audiences to be small and also that our meeting would draw some from them that otherwise would attend there; but I am now convinced that it was all right, as several of those ministers who would not have come to Willimantic on purpose to attend, came into our meetings and became enlightened.

Rev. A. L. Dearing, pastor of the M. E. church in East Glastonbury, and who labored in both meetings, delivering an eloquent and convincing address on the last evening at our meeting, endeavored to set the ball in motion among his brother ministers by presenting the subject of secret societies for discussion at their next preacher's meeting, which is to be held in Colchester next March. Bro. Dearing's motion was seconded by a Bro. Thomas, who had just received a little light at our meeting so that he was enabled to present arguments showing why the subject should be discussed. Rev. Geo. E. Fuller, pastor of the church in Colchester, and who, because he was an officer in the Temple of Honor, refused to receive the Cynosure as a gift, last winter, objected to such a discussion in Colchester, as they had lately started a Temple of Honor in that place. How much afraid some are to have the light shine. The motion did not prevail, but Bro. Dearing says he shall try again. So you can see that the leaven is working in Connecticut. J. A. Conant.

Organization in Rice Co., Kans.

Sterling, Rice Co., Kan.,)
Nov. 28th, 1876.)

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Rice county is wide awake on the anti-secrecy question. With the Wesleyan, United Brethren, Congregationalist, Friend Quaker and Presbyterian churches, abounding, and many others in the county which are on the right side of this great question; and with the very efficient and successful labors of Rev. J. T. Kiggins for a week, it has been very warm for those secret orders. Some of their members got so very hot that they seemed ready to explode; partial explosions did actually occur, to the damage of the dark system every time. Bro. Kiggins knows just how to do it, and is as fearless as man need be.

On the 16th of Nov. at a convention held in Sterling, Rice county, Kansas, there was organized an association to be known as the "Central Kansas Anti-secret Association," with the Rev. G. W. Keller as President; Wm. L. Hinshaw, Recording Secretary; H. T. Dunlap, Corresponding Secretary, and a goodly number of Vice-presidents.

It is but justice to this community to say that they appreciated the labors of Bro. Kiggins, to the amount of about fifty dollars in cash. Perhaps some may say that is not much for a good effective speaker to get for standing up before the public every night for a week and risking his scalp. (Eggs you know and brick bats). Well, but you should remember that two years ago we were nearly all beggars, poor as snakes,—"grasshoppers," I mean.

The friends of the cause regard the movement as a great success. We are confident of this one thing, that there are many young men in Rice county who will never be caught in the net of secrecy, but might have been had not the effort been put forth. May God bless and save the young men all over our county.

Yours respectfully,
Wm. L. Hinshaw.

The constitution adopted at this meeting is as follows:

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, We have become fully satisfied, that secret societies, are in their nature and tendency, deleterious to the best interests of society in both church and state, from the consideration that they impose obligations upon their members that forbid their carrying out the ends of justice, impartially, and hence obstruct the due administration of the laws; and in church, as in state, they destroy confidence and spirituality, substituting worldly interests for heavenly, and subvert its real objects. From these considerations, and others, the people of Rice county, Kansas, in connection with other adjoining counties met and organized an anti-secret association, elected its officers, and adopted the following:

CONSTITUTION.

Art. 1. This association shall be known as the Central Kansas Anti-secrecy Association.

Art. 2. The object of this Association shall be to oppose, withstand and to counteract the influence and devices of secret societies by circulating tracts, books, &c., &c., and securing lecturers.

Art. 3. The officers of this Association shall consist of a President, an indefinite number of Vice-presidents, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary and a Treasurer; to be elected annually.

Art. 4. The President shall preside at all the meetings of the Association, when he can be present; and, in connection with the Recording Secretary, shall call special meetings when necessary, and shall sign all orders on the Treasurer, and shall perform all the duties required by his office in such Association.

The Vice presidents shall exert themselves to organize their communities and their counties into auxiliaries, preside in the absence of the President, and use all their influence to promote the objects of the Association.

The Recording Secretary shall keep a correct account of all the proceedings of the Association: record the same in a book provided for that purpose; also take charge of all the books and papers of the Association; sign calls for special meetings, also orders on the Treasurer in conjunction with the President.

The Corresponding Secretary shall conduct the general correspondence of the Association, assist the Vice-presidents in organizing auxiliaries, securing lecturers and otherwise use his influence to promote this good cause.

The Treasurer shall take charge of all the moneys and property of the Association, pay out the same by order of the Association, or of the President and Secretary.

Art. 5. The regular meetings of the Association shall be held semi-annually in the months of February and September.

Art. 6. The members shall consist of all persons, male and female, who shall sympathize with us in this cause and sign the constitution.

Art. 7. This constitution may be amended at any regular meeting of the Association by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

Art. 8. Fifteen members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

The Home Circle.

What Then?

What then? Why, then another pilgrim song;
And then a hush of rest divinely granted:
And then a thirsty stage, (ah me, so long!)
And then a brook just where it most is wanted.

What then? The pitching of the evening tent;
And then, perchance, a pillow rough and thorny
And then some sweet and tender message sent
To cheer the faint one for to-morrow's journey.

What then? The wailing of the midnight wind;
A feverish sleep; a heart oppressed and aching.
And then a little water-cruse to find
Close by my pillow, ready for my waking.

What then? I am not careful to inquire;
I know there will be tears, and fears, and sorrow:
And then a loving Savior drawing nigher,
And saying, "I will answer for the morrow."

What then! For all my sins His pardoning grace;
For all my wants and woes his loving kindness;
For darkest shades the shining of God's face;
And Christ's own hand to lead me in my blindness.

What then? A shadowy valley lone and dark;
And then a deep and darkly rolling river;
And then a flood of light—a seraph hymn—
And God's own smile, forever and forever!

—Rev. T. Whitfield.

A Precious Hymn and its Author.

As the closing hour of the great meetings of the American Board in Hartford lately, arrived, the President, Dr. Hopkins, said, "Let us, as is our custom, sing the hymn,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

The immense assembly sang it with a profound, tearful, joyous interest. How wonderfully appropriate to the occasion, and to hundreds of other occasions, is this precious hymn! What increasing numbers of God's people are singing it every day of the year, and will to the end of time. Its concluding strains may well be succeeded by the New Song.

The author of this hymn — John Fawcett of England — was converted at the age of sixteen, under Whitefield's preaching. Three years later, in 1758, he united with the Baptist church in Bradford. In 1765 he was ordained pastor of the Baptist church at Wainsgate. In a few years he published one or two small volumes of poetic essays and hymns. He wrote a volume on anger that King George III. was so greatly pleased with that he offered to confer any favor upon the author he might desire. Fawcett modestly declined the royal proposal. Afterward, however, when the son of a friend was sentenced to death for forgery, he interceded for him, and the king granted a pardon. The young man subsequently became a devoted Christian.

True hymns are born of some peculiar experience or inspiration. So was it with the ode referred to above. Dr. Fawcett was pastor of a small church; his family increased more than his income; and he felt it his duty to accept the urgent call to London he had received, as the successor of Dr. Gill, the famous commentator. His farewell sermon to his church in Yorkshire was preached, and several wagons were loaded with his furniture and library for departure. But the members of his little flock, men, women and children, gathered around him and his family, in tears and almost broken-hearted agony, praying him not to leave them. The last load was being packed, when Dr. Fawcett and his wife sat down on one of the boxes and wept. The devoted wife amidst streaming tears, looked up into his face and said, "Oh, John, John, I cannot bear this!" "Nor I, either," said the good man, weeping. "Nor will we go. Unload the wagons and put everything in the place where it was before." The people cried with joy. The church in London was notified that he could not come, and the beloved pastor resumed his labors on a salary of about $250 a year.

Then it was he wrote the hymn that has become immortal:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

He labored faithfully with this people until his death, in 1817, in his seventy-seventh year. Does he know in heaven how many are singing his glorious hymn on earth?—Christian Secretary.

Besmirching Scripture.

As Mr. Moody sat, a few days since, in familiar converse with a group of well-known Christian workers, one of the number indulged in a pleasantry which included a play upon the phrasing of an important Scripture truth. A laugh naturally followed the bright saying; but Mr. Moody had no share in the merriment. "Don't say that," he said, earnestly. "I can't bear to hear those things joked over." And then he told how much he used to do and hear in that line of joking, years ago; and how one Bible text after another was in consequence so associated with a joke as to lose much of its best and fullest meaning, and how whenever he now read it, or heard it repeated, the joke came back with it. He urged those with whom he talked to use their influence in putting an end to such an irreverent use of such sacred words. All present agreed that Mr. Moody was right; and one after another who had a similar experience to relate of old habits and their results, declared that he would be careful as to this matter in the future.

Mr. Moody would indeed do a great work if he should be instrumental in correcting this kind of wrong speaking which is so common among Christians—lay and clerical. It is very easy to raise a laugh by perverting Scripture language, or bringing it into ridiculous associations. Many a man who is rarely commended for his witticisms in any other line, gets ample credit for brightness in this direction. Even in ministerial associations and in Sunday-school gatherings, as well as in the ordinary social intercourse of Christians, jokes which depend for their force on the mis-application of Bible texts are, perhaps, more frequently heard than those of any other nature. It takes so little brains to pervert Scripture, and so much grace to resist the temptation to it, that but few men are qualified to cast the first stone at those who are convicted of this misdemeanor. Who indeed can say that he has never thus besmirched a Bible text, nor ever given encouragement by word or smile to those who have done it in his presence? Who, moreover, can say that to his memory the Bible is unspotted by such associations from its beginning to its end?

Not with Christians alone, but with men of the world the habit is common of profaning Scripture by its misuse. In our national Congress, in our State legislatures, in political meetings and in the columns of secular papers this method of reference to the Scriptures is frequent. Many a man who rarely mentions the Bible or quotes from it in seriousness can point a joke with some of its phrases, and is prompt to do so. By this perversion of Bible language the edge of the sword of the Spirit is in a sense blunted, and made ineffective for its legitimate use. The true force and meanings of a text is hidden through its absurd associations, and its misapplications. So the Bible is, to a certain extent, destroyed for its blessed purposes by those who have degraded it only to enhance their credit for wit.

It is a shame that any of us should be guilty of this thing. We who would resent a joke at our mother's expense ought not to approve or countenance such bringing into ridicule the sacred message whereby our Heavenly Father sends the glad news of salvation to the lost. We ought not even to be silent when we have an opportunity to rebuke such a transgression. The story is told of a Christian sailor, who in passing on a street-corner two gentlemen in conversation, heard one of them use his Saviour's name irreverently. Instantly he stopped, and, raising his hat, said respectfully but in unmistakable earnestness, "Please, gentlemen, don't say that. That Jesus is my Saviour. He died for me. I can't bear to hear him spoken of slightingly." At once the answer came, "You are right, my man, and we were wrong. We ought not to to have been so profane." It costs a struggle to be true to the right, and for the right; but duty calls to such a defense of the truth, such a quiet and kindly rebuke of the wrongs as that sailor made—as was made by Mr. Moody in the instance first quoted—and such fidelity will not be unrewarded.

It is, as Mr. Moody suggested, by no means easy to rid one's mind of impure or improper associations once fastened to a Bible text, or indeed to rid the mind of any improper thoughts. The better way is to keep such things out of the mind to begin with.—Ex.

The World's Demand.

Men of the world have a very high standard for men of the church. Whatever license they take for themselves, they allow nothing of the sort to those who are professed disciples of the Lord Jesus. No greater mistake is made by Christians who wish to commend themselves to unbelievers, than in supposing that they will gain something by lowering their standard of personal conduct. The highest standard in morals is insisted upon for Christians by men who scoff at the idea of any such standard for themselves.

A godless merchant who does not hesitate to misrepresent his goods to his customers, or to take advantage of his fellow-men in a bargain, is quick to declare the sin of a Christian merchant in failing to be frank and fair and generous in all his business dealings. The stock speculator who thinks it is praiseworthy sharpness on his part to deceive a buyer into an investment to the latter's ruin, will cry out against a minister or a deacon whose dealings with stocks in a single instance look in the same direction. The man of impure or of profane speech is shocked to hear a coarse story or an irreverent expression from a professed follower of Jesus.

This truth holds good all the way up and down the scale of morals. It stands out with peculiar prominence in connection with habits and customs which are of debatable propriety. Many an irreligious theater-goer would be shocked—is shocked—on seeing a clergyman watching his favorite actor. Many a godless man who plays cards, dances, smokes, drinks, without any compunctions of conscience—who even denounces as Puritanism and bigotry all opposition to such amusements and indulgences—thinks less of any Christian layman who is not wholly withdrawn from all of these practices.

We are not now asserting the reasonableness of this view of the Christian's duty, by men of the world. We are simply declaring the facts in the case. Whether it is right or wrong for Christians to go to the theater, to dance, to play cards, to use tobacco, or to drink, irreligious men are commonly ready to find fault with Christians who do any of these things, and are likely to think less of those Christians who are thus lax in practice according to the highest standards of Christian conduct. Every clergyman who puffs his cigar on the hotel piazza at a fashionable watering-place, in sight of the many careless pleasure-seekers there, lowers himself thereby, in the estimation of every irreligious tobacco-user who observes him, although he may flatter himself that he is gaining power for good over that very class of persons by his indulgence, because, forsooth, he is patted on the back approvingly by other Christian smokers, who are glad to be countenanced by so distinguished a divine in their tobacco-using. Every Sunday-school superintendent or teacher who smokes a cigar, or takes a glass of lager beer, or plays a game of billiards in the sight of his unconverted scholars, thereby lessens the confidence of those scholars in his Christian character, and diminishes their respect for him as a man to be trusted and followed. He may think it a great pity that this should be the case; but it is nevertheless the truth. Men who have most occasion to hear the candid comment by men of the world, and boys of the world, on Christians who are "free and easy" in their habits of living, can have no doubt on this point.

Strictness in conduct, and purity in speech, on the part of those who bear the Christian name, are approved by those who are yet outside of the Christian fold. A disciple of Jesus never loses, in the estimation of the irreligious, by his rigid adherence to the very highest standard of which the world has knowledge. On the other hand, he always endangers his good name with those whom he would fain win to the truth when he occupies a lower plane than the highest in the sphere of Christian morals.—S. S. Times.

Children's Corner.

A Little Prayer.

O Thou who in Jerusalem
Didst little children take,
And laid them in Thy bosom,
And on them blessings spake;
And looked and smiled upon them
So sweet and joyously,
And said to their fond mothers,
"Of such My kingdom be"—

We're told Thy heart's a fountain
Of grace to children dear—
A sea of love, an ocean,
Of which we love to hear,
O dearest Saviour, hear us!
And love on us bestow,
That we in life may serve Thee,
At death unto Thee go.

O, love us, love us, Jesus!
We little children be;
See us bowed at Thy footstool,
Our eyes raised up to Thee.
We would lie in Thy bosom,
And there be blessed by Thee.
Heirs of Thy kingdom make us.
Amen. So let it be!

The Children's Centennial Letter.

My Dear Young Friends:—The great Centennial Exhibition is over and the newspapers have been telling everybody of the wonderful things to be seen there which have been brought from all parts of the world. A great many of the visitors saw names of places and things of which they had never heard before, and it will be for you young people to learn your geography and every thing else you can as you grow older, so that when you have an opportunity to compare the productions and the attainments of different countries in departments of art or of utility you can add greatly to your own knowledge and be the better able to benefit yourselves and others. It was a big school, that Centennial Exhibition, and it gave lessons to old folks as well as young.

Although this country did not and could not show as fine things as some others in painting and carving and nick-nacks, yet in all that was most useful for a new country we could show just what settlers ought to have to help them along and give them comfort. Thus by the time you are as old as your fathers and grandfathers who have been seeing the sights and telling you of them, you will find perhaps as much difference as some of them did between the old wagon and the steam car, or the row boat and the steamer, or the time when it used to take six months to hear news from places where we can now get a telegram in fewer hours! And then again to think of grandma having to stitch and stitch and sew and sew for long hours after her children were in bed in the olden time, but now, whew! put the cloth in the sewing machine and presto! out it comes a dress fixed and flounced! Or washing one hour instead of a day! Hurrah for machinery! If you think of farming there's the steam plow and the reaper and the threshing machine, and thousands of acres cultivated where tens might have been when Squire Old Style regulated the work and had his grain thrashed out by fist and flails.

Now boys and girls, you see what we have been doing, almost within the half century just gone by, and if you will go as far ahead of us as we have done of our fathers where will you have taken the improvements to? We can sail up stream and against wind and weather. Will you navigate the air? We can make splendid portraits, ten for a dollar, in ten minutes. We have made the sun our painter and harnessed the lightning. I don't know how you can get ahead of us there, but you may improve upon us in style and finish. There is plenty of work waiting you and the best men in the world are workers by brain and sinew. It is a merciful law for man that he should work six days and rest on the seventh. The health of body and mind are best served by obedience to this Divine law.

Now we may give a look over our shoulders at the vanishing piles of jewelry and dresses and curiosities and products of the soil and manufactures gathered from all quarters. Good bye, Russia and Turkey; here you are in peace; go home and be good friends. Good bye, France and Germany; do as we have done with our own quarrel—sink it as deep down as you can and don't distress the world again by your terrible contests. Good bye, old John Bull, and thank Providence for you good Queen and your constitutional system of responsible government. Good bye, Chinaman and Brazilian, Australian and Tasmanian and neighbors Kanuck and Mexican—good bye, all. We most sincerely send with you our best wishes and when our boys grow big enough to travel we shall send them to visit you at your own homes in the confident hope that they will meet a welcome and form business connections which will be good for all of us. Hurrah! they are off. Well, it is a comfort to have folks' houses all to themselves after strangers have been awhile with them. So now let us go to work and get ahead of them all.

But we shall continue the Exhibition for our people a while longer and reduce the rate one half. I won't take you through it for many things are gone, but a good many remain that are worth seeing especially by those who have not had much chance of seeing sights in cities. And you know Jack Frost has nipped the flowers and leaves and made the difference between youth and age in the fair face of the finely laid out grounds. So many thanks to the kind Philadelphians for their hospitality and kindness; and we take railway homewards. Come, children, pack up; here we go. Tired, are you? Oh well, it is nearly midnight, and therefore you have a right to be. So prepare for bed and sleep if you can, and wake up to-morrow morning in Washington, where we shall try to see the Capitol. T. H.

Missionary Potatoes.

A little boy named Harry was looking very thoughtful one day, when he suddenly said to his mother:

"Ought I not to be up and doing something, mother, for the poor heathen? Am I not old enough to preach? I do not mean pulpit preaching."

"I should think not," said the mother, smiling; "but what kind of preaching, then, do you mean, my boy?"

"Mine must be spade-preaching, mother."

"Spade preaching!" echoed sister Lottie from the other side of the room.

"Yes," said Harry. "Did not some of the school-boys dig, plant and sell? and can not I dig my missionary money out of the ground?"

"Well, suppose you ask father if he will let you have a bit of garden ground," said the mother.

When father came home his little boy urged his plea for a piece of "missionary ground;" and very cheerfully was it granted, and some potatoes for "seed" were added.

Harry was very diligent in digging, setting, watering and weeding; and by the summer a fine crop of potatoes rewarded his toil. Lottie had the pleasure of helping to gather up the potatoes, and send them off to market.

In the missionary report for the next year the interesting item might be seen of "Missionary Potatoes," with a few shillings attached. May not other little boys and girls "go and do likewise?"

In some parishes of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, where the people are deeply interested in the cause of missions, it is not unusual for parents to encourage their children to raise funds, not only by spade-work, but by means of fruit-trees, cows, sheep and poultry. The best cherry-tree in some orchards is the "missionary-tree;" and the blossoms and fruitage of that tree are watched with special interest by both parents and children. Even in some of the poor parts of Ireland contributions have been raised by means of "missionary hens."—Selected.

Little Moses, a thoughtful boy of six years, often makes quaint remarks. He is very fond of pictures. One day after gazing very intently at one for some time, in which was a representation of angels with their usual wings, he looked up suddenly to his mother and said in slow and measured accents: "Mother, I don't know as I care about going to heaven after all, if I have got to have my arms cut off and wings stuck on."

A little Swedish girl, while walking with her father on a starry night, became absorbed in contemplation of the skies. Being asked of what she was thinking, she replied, "I was thinking if the wrong side of heaven was so glorious, what must the right side be!"

Home and Farm.

How to Breathe.—The mouth has its own functions to perform in connection with eating, drinking and speaking; and the nostrils have theirs, namely, smelling and breathing. In summer time the error in respiring through the mouth is not so evident as in the Winter season, when it is undoubtedly fraught with danger to the person who commits this mistake. If any one breathes through the mucous membrane lining, the various chambers of the nose become warm to the temperature of the body before reaching the lungs; but if he takes in air between the lips and through the mouth, the cold air comes in contact with the delicate lining-membrane of the throat and lungs, and gives rise to a local chill, frequently ending in inflammation. Many persons, without knowing the reason why they are benefited, wear respirators over the mouth in winter, if they happen to go out of doors. By doing this they diminish the amount of air which enters between the lips, and virtually compel themselves to breathe through the nostrils. But they could attain just the same result by keeping the lips closed—a habit which is easily acquired, and conduces to the proper and natural way of breathing. We believe that if people would only adopt this simple habit—in other words, if they would take for their rule in breathing, "Shut your mouth"—there would be an intense diminution in the two classes of affections, namely those of the lungs and throat, which count many thousands of victims in this country in the course of a single year.—Public Health.

A Good Report from Mercer Co., Mo.

Princeton, Mo., Nov. 24, 1876

The Cynosure of the 22nd inst., states that two votes were polled here for the American Reform party. Now the facts as shown by the returns in the clerk's office are as follows: Our National and State ticket received forty-three votes in the county, and our county ticket received one hundred and thirty votes.

The party lines were very closely drawn, and I am confident we did not poll half our strength.

Truly yours, Wm. M. Casteel.

From All along the Line.

J. A. Conant, Willimantic, Conn., writes:

"I received from the Comptroller's office yesterday what I suppose to be the exact American vote in this State which is as follows, viz:

Glastonbury, Hartford Co,	1
Simsbury, " "	3
Windsor, " "	2
Norwich, New London "	1
Windhan, Windham "	3
Woodstock " "	1
No, Canaan, Litchfield "	1
Plymouth, " "	1
Stafford, Tolland "	...2
Union, " "	1
Total,	16

Willimantic is a borough in the town of Windham. I sent a bundle of ballots to Bro. Perry of Thompson who would have voted our ticket as would perhaps one or two others in his town had he received them, but for some reason they did not reach him.

I also sent a bundle to Bro. Calvin Hatch, (the old veteran in the cause) but he writes me that he did not receive them until about a week after the election. There are other towns where I sent ballots, feeling very confident that at least the person to whom I sent them would vote the ticket but have as yet heard nothing from them whether or not they received the ballots. You may think the above a small vote and not very encouraging but I must say that I feel encouraged; very much so. Although I thought I had scattered in different ways and places many of our American party tracts, yet I had quite a bundle left on the morning of election day, and as I could not stay at the polls myself I gave a bundle of tracts and ballots to Bro. Geo. Smith (who is always full of good works) who remained at the polls most of the day distributing tracts and ballots to whomsoever would take one.

Bro. Smith reports that the tracts were taken and earnestly read by many, while many wanted the ticket for a curiosity. Bro. Ellsworth of Windsor, also writes me that he distributed at the polls in his town on election day. I cannot but believe that much good will grow out of the work done in Conn. in the last few weeks.

J. McCleery, Marshalltown, Iowa, writes:

"The good work still goes on at Albion. We have had a meeting every two weeks since we completed our county organization about the beginning of Oct. The secretists have been full of wrath which they did not even attempt to conceal. We have had no speakers here since brother Stoddar ; only home talent until last Monday night; but have had good meetings notwithstanding. The antis nominated a town ticket and carried it by over twenty majority against the combined forces of the Republican and Democratic parties.

This seems to have knocked the fight out of them and they now treat the antis very respectfully. I am sorry to say that through a misunderstanding they failed to have the electoral ticket on hand, so there were no votes for our Presidential candidate. Rev. R. A. McAyeal of Oskaloosa came last Monday evening and gave us some of the reasons why he objected to Freemasonry. The speaker was logical and clear in his views, which were received with marked attention by the audience. Some of the fraternity were present but kept their "jewel" nobly. Monday evening the 27th. Rev. J. H. Vandever of the Iowa Freeman will lecture again. So the work goes on.

One O. F. who heard Mr. Ronayne work the third degree, has concluded to obey the Scripture injunction to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness;" and more than that he refuses to pay a Mason for preaching the Gospel. The conference sent a Freemason to preach to the Methodist church in Albion and some of the members refused to support him. So the cry is raised that we "are breaking up the churches," "creating a disturbance in the community," &c. So long as the fraternities can dictate to outsiders what to do and it is submitted to in peace, so far all right, but let outsiders assert their rights then the shout is raised against the disturbers of the peace. It is but a repetition of the old anti-slavery excitement. Hope we may have more to report hereafter.

Benjamin Borton, West Unity, O., Writes:

G. Crook. Concord, Erie county.

A. J. Loudenback of Glidden, Carroll county, Iowa, writes:

"There was one vote cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in Glidden township, but the judges of election did not count it."

John Ward, Owaneco, Ill., "I was the only man that voted for Walker and Kirkpatrick in Franklin, Fulton county, Ohio, many others are favorable to the cause of the American party, but they thought the party they had voted with would not gain, and the government would have to make the damage that was done in the South in time of the war all good to the rebels. But the Masons will do every thing they can think of to prevent the Anti-masons from voting against the lodge."

Pa., writes:

"When I got the returns stating the official vote from the county, they said one vote from Concord on the Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket. So much for Erie county. Thank the Lord."

writes:

"You can count twelve votes in the three townships of Johnson, Locust and Assumption, that is as far as I have any account of the vote in Christian county. A few good lectures here would do a great amount of good. I am going to try and make arrangements to have friend Hinman here some time this winter. There is a growing interest in the matter here and I want it kept up."

Wm. S. Barnes, Farmer City, Dewitt county, Illinois, writes:

"We only got three votes for Walker in this county. There were several who intended to vote our ticket, but the political fever got too warm for some to stand it, so they had to vote for Hayes this time. We polled four votes four years ago for Adams, but they were not counted. This time we demanded that our votes should be counted and they were."

Lewis Bookwalter, Western College, Linn county, Iowa, writes:

"The number of votes cast for Walker in College township, Linn county Iowa, was sixteen. This is about half the number who were in hearty sympathy with the American party; but the interest in the contest with Democracy held many to the Republican party. I think other townships gave a few American votes, but I have seen no notice of it in the public prints. The vote of our township was correctly given in two or three papers in the county, but in the notice given by our leading paper of the full official returns, the vote for Walker has no notice, while Cooper's vote of nineteen is duly noticed. Evidently the vote of the campaign just closed gives little indication of the anti-secrecy sentiment of the country. It is my opinion that the political phase of our work should not be suspended until another presidential election, but that more thorough organization should be sought in each State, and a State ticket as well as district, county and city tickets be placed in the field one year hence. Then there being no vital national interests involved, men of our views would vote their principles freely. We must make the power of this reform felt at the ballot box; and this can ere long be done as the number is rapidly increasing of those who are done voting for Masons. Some here who did not vote for Walker nevertheless scratched every Mason from their State ticket —Republican—and in doing so left very little of it."

S. C. Kimball, Center Strafford, New Hampshire, writes:

"I beg our brethren in the West not to distrust our fidelity to the anti-secret reform, because we could not see our way clear to support the American National ticket. We all believe in political action, but the question is, how can we best make our strength felt in the political arena? My opinion is, sometimes by supporting anti-secret nominees of the old parties and sometimes by separate nominations according to our strength and the circumstances. The Masonic nominees on the local ticket ran far behind the anti-secret nominees. We have at least accomplished so much, that Masonry is no help but rather a hindrance to a candidate for office."

Leonidas Reeve, Colebrook, Ashtabula, county, Ohio, writes:

"I think our political efforts should be directed to getting our laws so changed that men shall be equal before the law. Why not have a petition to that effect circulated in every town and county? Why not demand this at the hands of our legislators? Is it not our right? Why not call on the State of Ohio especially to do this?"

Our old friend, T. Kingsworth, Battle Creek, Mich., writes:

"I voted one of the American party tickets, and one of my friends promised to vote another, but when counted mine was the only one." He mentions two other instances in which he has been deceived, and then adds: "Do you wonder that I have lost confidence in man? I am for the truth. My trust is in God."

As long as the American party exalts God in Christ as the only being worthy of confidence so long it will have God's approbation. "Put not your trust in princes." "Cursed be man that trusteth in man."

D. C. Dagger, Florid, Ill., writes:

"Our party received one vote in Hennepin township. One good Republican while looking over the ticket, said: 'The principle is right.' He was one of the three who voted the anti-slavery ticket here twenty-five years ago, and had lived to see it triumph."

W. M. Beden, Hadley, Lapeer county, Mich., writes:

"The American party made but a poor showing in this township, last election, polling only seven votes."

The ancients regarded seven as a perfect number. We hope the seed thus sown will fall into good ground and increase an hundred fold.

Isaiah A. Town, Fayette, Ohio, writes:

"There were four votes cast here for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and that in a place where Freemasonry is very strong."

J. P. Richards, Bowensburgh, Hancock county, Illinois, writes.

"Our two votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick were counted and properly returned. Although we were laughed at still many expressed their approval of our platform. I distributed the platform pretty thoroughly and I have no doubt it will do good. Bro. Stratton, of Syracuse, New York, was fearful that we would not make a respectable 'laughing-stock.' I think we have done that much at least, for we received our part in Hancock county. We will continue to vote until every lodge charter be repealed."

P. Hurless, Polo, Ogle county, Illinois, writes:

"The Foreston Herald reports eight Anti-masonic votes for Ogle county. No doubt many were not counted. Our leading reformers thought best to vote for Hayes."

Geo. Mellor, California, Pa., writes:

"This place has lodge upon lodge. * * * One Odd-fellow likes our platform, if the fourth plank does cut off his head."

Peter C. Hansel, Ossian, Wells county, Indiana, writes:

"I guess I am the only one who voted the American ticket in this county."

We have reported to us two votes from Wells county.

—The New York Square says of secretism in Poland:

"Numerous secret societies are springing up, most of which receive the closest watching on the part of the government, on account of the facility which they offer to revolutionists. The Masons are disorganized, as a body, and take very little interest in other fraternities. During the invasion by Napoleon the First, various societies and clubs were introduced by the French as a means of agitating the masses against Russia. In 1852 Russia forbade societies of all kinds, including the Freemasons in the interdiction."

Another confirmation of Disraeli's remarkable language. The apathy of Americans toward this fretting leprosy of lodgeism in our country is truly wonderful, when the evidence of its ill-used power is so manifest among the older nations.

Religious Intelligence.

—The German Minister of Public Worship has issued an order directing that all orphanages at present under the exclusive control of Roman Catholic communities are to be placed under lay direction.

—A new religions sect, the doctrines of which remain secret, is spreading in the Central Provinces near Kesto. The new faith is said to resemble neither Christianity, Mohammedanism, nor any form of Japanese religion. The sect is reported to number 30,000 persons.

—The Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, has declined the pastorship of the Dutch Reformed Church, at Madison avenue and Fifty-seventh street, of which the Rev. Mr. Ganse formerly had charge. He will continue to deliver his Monday lectures in Boston. The last lecture upon "Life or Mechanism: which?" was listened to by a very large audience.

—A Congregational mission is now maintained on the coast of Labrador for the benefit of the shoremen and visiting American fishermen. The Rev. S. R. Butler, of Northampton, Mass., is the missionary.

—Eleven Methodist Protestant conferences have voted in favor of the convention which will meet next year to consummtae the union of the Methodist and Methodist Protestant churches. These two churches, originally one, were divided by the late war.

—The Methodist Episcopal missionary debt is about $200.000.

—The 2d of November was Thanksgiving Day in the Province of New Brunswick.

—Rev. John W. Reddy, a prominent minister among the Free Methodist churches of the East, died Nov. 20th, at his home in Brockport, N. Y. He was counted among the founders of the denomination. Rev. Joseph Travis, of Albion, preached the funeral discourse.

—The United Presbyterian Church of this city, Rev. J. W. Bain, pastor, has a heavy incumbrance which would undoubtedly have been removed long ago but for the great fire. The Presbytery of Illinois, recognizing the importance of the church in this commercial center is making an effort to assist the congregation and remove the debt. In its reform position this church demands the prayers and sympathy of other churches than those of its own denomination that it may be established pecuniarily as well as spiritually.

—The meetings of the Evangelist Hammond in Philadelphia in the Emanuel Reformed Episcopal Church are crowded day after day; the building holds 3,000. Many conversions are reported. A convert of Mr. Hammond's meetings in Washington, a Jewish doctor, assists in the meetings. His experience in leaving Judaism is one of great interest.

—Rev. T. W. Goodspeed, who left the pulpit of the Second Baptist Church of Chicago to secure an endowment fund for the Baptist Theological Seminary here has succeeded in getting $150,000, and is confident that he will secure $100,000 more.

—Special meetings have been begun for young men in connection with the revival work in this city; the first sermon to them by Mr. Moody appearing on another page. At the close of this discourse from 2,000 to 3,000 arose to express their desire to take a stand for Christ. The meetings will be held daily from nine to ten in the evening, and probably at other hours also. There is a great desire on the part of many employers for the salvation of their clerks and workmen.

—Prof. Gillette, of the State Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Jacksonville, Illinois, lately attended the revival meetings here with twenty pupils of the institution and translated to them by signs the sermon, hymns, etc.

—A very interesting communion service was held at the Chinese church, corner of Sacramento and Stockton streets, San Francisco, Cal., on Sabbath evening, Oct. 22d. Five young men, Chinese, received the ordinance of baptism. Several of the teachers remained to witness the ceremony; with this exception every seat was filled with Chinese, a good number of whom partook of the communion, and also a few Chinese women.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.

BY JEREMY L. CROSS, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.
12mo. Cloth..... $1 50

MOORE'S MASONIC TRESTLE BOARD.

THIS work was originally prepared by order of the National Masonic Convention held at Baltimore, Md., in 1843. It is known among Masons everywhere as the "BLUE BOOK," and has long been considered a standard work.
Price, $1.75.

MACKEY'S MANUAL OF THE LODGE.

Or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason, with Ceremonies Relating to Installations, Dedications, Consecrations, Laying of Corner Stones, etc. Price, $2.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry.

A PRACTICAL Guide to the Ceremonies in the Degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25: paper, 75 Cts.

Although this Monitor is extensively used in the Lodge, especially in Conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an "exposition," and not allowed as authority.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry.

ILLUSTRATED by a large number of Engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies.
Price, $5.00.

DUNCAN'S MASONIC RITUAL AND MONITOR,

PROFUSELY Illustrated with Explanitory Engravings, and containing the entire Ritual and work of the Order for the Seven Degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a Standard Text-Book in the Lodge, and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though almost every officer of the Lodge makes use of it. Price in cloth, $2.50.

FEMALE MASONRY.

MANNUAL OF THE ORDER OF THE EASTERN STAR.

Containing the Ritual, Symbols, Lectures etc., of the five Degrees of "Adoptive Masonry:" Jeptha's Daughter; Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely Illustrated and handsomely bound.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited nunmber of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

FREEMASONRY EXPOSED,
by CAP'T. WILLIAM MORGAN.

THE GENUINE OLD MORGAN BOOK:—republished with engravings showing the Lodge Room, Dress of candidates, Signs, Due Guards, Grips, Etc.

This revelation is so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. Thousands have testified to the correctness of the revelation and this book therefore sells very rapidly.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT FOR THE WINTER TERM, BEGINNING JANUARY 4th, 1877.

Book-Keeping, Free Hand Drawing, Penmanship, Vocal Music and Lectures on Physiology, Hygiene and ON COMMERCIAL LAW, WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

The Faculty have decided to make instruction, during the Winter Term, in the above named branches FREE to all who pay regular tuition, which is only $11.10 in the College Department and $9.25 in the Preparatory Department.

BOOK-KEEPING

will be taught under the supervision of PROF. H. A. FISCHER, a graduate of Bryant and Stratton's Commercial College, Chicago, and a practical Book-keeper for ten years. He will be assisted by MR. W. W. WARNER, a graduate of a Business College who is also a practical accountant.

BUSINESS PENMANSHIP

will be taught under the supervision of PROF. C. A. BLANCHARD, a graduate of the Department of Business Penmanship in Bryant and Stratton's Chicago Business College. The classes instructed by Prof. Blanchard now number over seven-hundred pupils. He will be assisted by MR. G. R. SIMPSON, a good penman and experienced teacher.

Blackboard or Free Hand Drawing will be taught by MRS. S. H. NUTTING, formerly of the State Normal School Vermont. She is an experienced, able and enthusiastic teacher. One of her pupils is now teaching in Westfield College, Ill., another in Colorado and another took the first premium for Paintings at the Illinois State Fair held at Ottawa. 1876.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

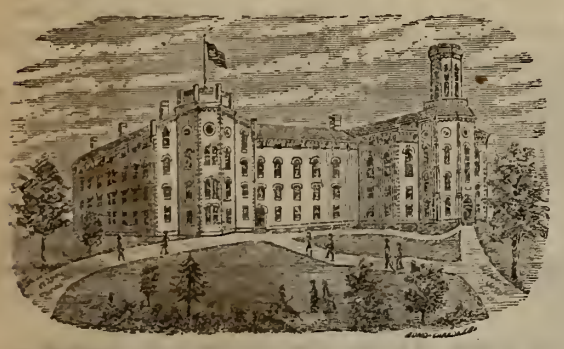
There will be during the term a course of five lectures on Commercial Law, delivered by NOAH E. GARY, Esq. of Chicago. These lectures will be for the especial benefit of the Students in Book-keeping, but will be open to all members of the Institution.

VOCAL MUSIC

will be taught by PROF. F. G. BAKER, an Instructor of much experience and great success. He has been engaged in teaching this branch for many years and always with good result. The class will meet four days per week and as above stated will be free to all Students paying tuition for the winter term, begining January 4th, 1877.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE

will be taught by text book and lectures, by PROF. A. H. HIATT, M. D. Parents who know how many thousands of Students die from ignorance of the laws of health will be glad to have their children at an Institution where at no expense except that of a book they may learn them. Dr. Hiatt has been the Instructor in this branch for years and all who have been under his tuition will bear testimony to its worth.



How much will it cost me to attend Wheaton College?

A young lady can board in the College Building and have in the College as many studies as she can profitably pursue, including those mentioned above, together with board and room for fifty one dollars. The rooms are large and pleasant, fuel and lights are furnished at cost. Young ladies bring their own bedding, towels, carpets etc. Definite information will be found in the Catalogue which will be sent to any one sending a stamp and address.

Young men can rent rooms outside and get board in the College for $2.50 per week.

Ladies or Gentlemen can reduce their expenses to $30.00 for the term by boarding themselves. By engaging board in private families their expenses will vary from $45.00 to $60.00.

HOW CAN I FIND WHEATON?

It is located twenty-five miles west from Chicago, on the Galena Division of the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. When you get in town ask for the house of PRESIDENT BLANCHARD, leave your trunk at the Depot and hold your checks until you have seen the President and found a boarding place. The term opens January 4th, 1877, and every Student should be on hand promptly on the morning of that day. For further and more definite information write for a Catalogue, enclosing stamp to J. BLANCHARD, President.

IN all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

Notices.

Mr. Ronayne has been invited to Litchfield, Mich., and proposes to go there immediately after New Year's. Can other friends in adjacent counties or other parts of the State so arrange that they could be visited at the same time? If so write to this office

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE INDIANA STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

Will (D. V.) hold its fourth annual meeting at West Newtown, Marion county, Indiana, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December A. D, 1876, to commence at 7 o'clock P. M. Arrangements have been made to secure the attendance of competent speakers, and Edmond Ronayne, late Past Master of Keystone Lodge, 639, of Chicago, is expected to publicly work the degrees of Masonry.

The great political contest is now ended; and never within the last forty years has there been so favorable a time for a calm and free discussion of the relation of the secret orders to Christianity and civil equality as now. Let all the anti-secret organizations in the State and all churches in sympathy with this reform send delegates without fail; and let all friends of the reform and all who wish to know the truth consider themselves personally invited.

Delegates will stop off at Valley Mills, eight miles southwest of Indianapolis, on the I. and V. R. R., where they will find conveyances to the place of meeting.

On behalf of Executive Committee.
PETER RICH, Chairman.

TO CONNECTICUT REFORMERS.

A friend of the reform in that State writes:

"I wish to say to the friends of reform in Connecticut that there should be a very earnest effort made this winter to enlighten the people in regard to the great dangers which threaten us. Can we not arrange to have a lecturer spend a month or more in our State this winter? Who has money that they will contribute for this purpose? All such please write at once to the President of our State Association, J. A. Conant, Willimantic; and all who would be glad to have lectures in their town or village, write us above.

TO FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN CEDAR CO., IOWA.

Wm. Lee and myself have been talking about the importance of having a convention some time in January in Tipton to choose delegates to the State Association, and transact other business that may seem important. Will Moses Varney, Asa Staples, Lawrie Tatum and other friends west of the river have that territory properly represented? Also that other friends on the east side work in the same direction, each one doing what he can to make the convention a success. When the time is fixed due notice will be given Be ready. JOHN DORCAS.

Topics of the Time.

The great revival meetings in Chicago, so far as they are conducted by Moody and Sankey, will close on next Sabbath, the 17th inst. After a short rest from their twelve weeks' labor they will begin the proclamation of the good news of Zion in Boston on the first day of the new year, unless the providence of God prevents. One of the Chicago ministers in the noon meeting last week indeed argued that the Christians might properly ask the Lord to interpose and keep the evangelists in their present field for another month. But having started the fire in this part of the stubble field of sin Mr. Moody is anxious, no doubt, to carry the blaze to another quarter. This is his mission, and not to settle down into anything like a pastoral work. The work so well began need not be hindered but made more effectual by bringing the churches into the work with all their zeal and faith. The city ministers have unanimously invited Messrs. Whittle and Bliss to begin daily meetings January 1st at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and also take charge of the regular noon meeting. This will give the revival work a headquarters, while it spreads from household to household through the city.

The Electoral vote was cast last week, and if that could certainly put an end to the suspense the country might be satisfied. Hayes got his 185 votes, but there is yet a question or two undecided. One of the Oregon Republican electors was a post-master, but resigned when elected. The Governor gave the certificate of election to his Democratic opponent. That gave Tilden the needed vote. The Republicans however, protested, declared a vacancy, filled it according to law and cast the State solid for Hayes. Their action is probably correct both in law and justice. Then the Democrats want to throw out the three votes of Colorado on the ground that she is not legally a State; this will not hold, however. In Florida the canvassing board disagree, one member giving certificates to the Tilden, the rest issuing them to the Hayes electors. Under these circumstances, the rumored defection in Massachusetts proving untrue, Mr. Hayes is the choice of a majority of one in the Electoral College. But what will Congress do with the House largely Democratic? Under the Federal statutes Congress can only count the vote of the electors, with no power to reject any. Under a joint rule of Congress No. 22, formerly in effect, either house may reject the votes of any State. Under this rule the election would go into the House of Representatives. But the Senate did not adopt it last year, and the President of that body has ruled that it is not in force. These questions settled all is settled. From all that can be learned they will not prevent the inauguration of a Republican President in March.

Though the Democrats have not given up the fight, the gamblers have. It is reported that John Morrissy, with whom vast sums were deposited by parties betting on the election has returned the money (after keeping a good per cent. as stake-holder) to its owners. The gambling mania was seldom stronger than at this last election. It seized upon hundreds in the common walks of life whose general conduct is against the practice. There should be a louder warning from press and pulpit against this evil.

Cremation has begun with us, but not in a way to be attractive to people making their wills. The funeral rites of Baron De Palm, the late "Grand Cross Commander of the Sovereign Order of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem, Prince of the Roman Empire, Knight of St. John of Malta" were last summer performed by the infidel Thosophical Society in the Masonic Temple in New York, and last week Wednesday his embalmed body was burned to ashes in a furnace built especially for the purpose by Dr. Le Moyne at Washington, Pa. The sickening details of the performance are told by the daily papers. The next day the bones and ashes were shoveled from the furnace and wrapped in parcels for preservation. Dr. Zink, health officer for Washington county, thinks cremation brutalizing; and no one in the vicinity but the owner is anxious to make any further use of the furnace.

Seldom has there been offered to the Goddess of Pleasure such a hecatomb of victims as on the night of Dec. 5th, at the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre. No disaster of the kind since the burning of the Richmond Theatre in 1821, has sent such a thrill of horror throughout the land, for from the smoking ruins nearly three hundred charred bodies have been taken. The fire broke out about 11:30 o'clock, just as the play was closing, by the falling of some canvass into a gaslight, and spread quickly through the stage fixtures and into the body of the building. A panic seized the crowd and the stairways were soon stopped by a struggling mass of prostrate bodies, which prevented the escape of hundreds in the rear and all in a comparatively few minutes were stifled by smoke and burned to a cinder. For three days the awful work of exhuming the dead went on until the coroner's books showed 276, of whom over 100 were absolutely unrecognizable. These were buried in a huge circular grave in Greenwood cemetery on Saturday. As in the case of the lamented Lincoln, every one regrets that these hundreds have been called to their last account from such surroundings, and for a few days the theatres will be deserted, only to be crowded again when the whirl of business or of pleasure has worn off the sharpness of this calamity.

Oaths Lawful and Unlawful.

BY PRES. D. A. WALLACE, D. D.

Jeremiah explains very clearly what lawful swearing is in the second verse of the fourth chapter of his prophecies: "Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness."

When men take an oath they should swear in truth; sincerely, not falsely, or hypocritically. The thing affirmed should be true, as affirmed; the thing promised should be intended.

Men should swear in judgment. The thing to which they swear should be known and understood, fully and completely, and the oath taken should be thoughtful and deliberate.

Men should also swear in righteousness. The thing promised or affirmed should be a right thing; not right in the judgment of some one else, but in their own judgment; the end intended should be a righteous end; and the oath should be taken in a righteous manner, reverently, thoughtfully, seriously, sincerely, and in faith.

Men should swear only by the living God, and not by any creature, and of course the matter of the oath should be something worthy of an appeal to the most high God.

Such according to Jeremiah is lawful swearing. The views of the Prophet are eminently just and will commend themselves to the reason and conscience of every thoughtful reader. In the light of these principles we can see clearly what are unlawful oaths.

1. All swearing in any other name than that of the living God is unlawful. It is expressly forbidden. It is idolatry. If men swear honestly in his name, they must believe in his existence. The oath of an atheist is a mockery.

2. All swearing about trifles is unlawful. It is trifling with God's name and ordinances. No one pretends to justify the profanity of common conversation; all confess it to be utterly inexcusable; but, are there not many oaths required by law which are absolutely trifling? It is needful that every official should be sworn before he enters on the duties of his office? Must every statement necessarily be confirmed by a solemn appeal to God? Might not much of this be dispensed with, without hurt to any interest?

3. Swearing falsely is unlawful. Under this head is included, swearing to the truth of that which we know to be false, or, which we do not know to be true; equivocally, with intent to deceive, without intention of performing that which we promise on oath, according to its true intent and meaning; or, swearing, and then straightway forgetting, and performing not as we have sworn, but as we afterwards find it to be convenient and pleasant. Are not many officials guilty of unlawful swearing of this sort.

4. Swearing without judgment is unlawful. By this I mean swearing without considering, ignorantly; not knowing to what the oath binds and consequently without having intelligently determined it to be lawful and right. Men who swear to keep secret that of which they are ignorant, until after the oath is taken do not swear in judgment. To be justifiable in swearing to keep anything secret they must know just what it is and be sure that it is right to keep it. Men who swear to obey unknown laws do not swear in judgment. To be justifiable in swearing to keep any law we must know just what it is and know it to be right to keep it. Men who swear to obey unknown orders, to be issued by some person also unknown, do not swear in judgment. I do not see how any man can, of his own free will, swear to obey any order, to be issued by any creature. Freemen should not bring themselves into subjection to a fellow man in such a way; no, not for an hour. All societies that require such oaths or conditions of admission, require, it seems to me, what no God-fearing man, can consistently give. They who can swear only in judgment are excluded from all such fraternities. They may contemplate ends the most worthy, but their fellowship is impossible to him who properly regards his oath. The substitution of a solemn promise does not help the matter much, for no conscientious man will care to promise that to which he cannot swear.

5. Swearing unrighteously is unlawful. By this I mean swearing with a wrong end, to a wrong thing, or in a wrong manner, irreverently, thoughtlessly, with levity, insincerely, or without faith.

Let us avoid all unlawful oaths. Reader, study Zech. v. 1-4, and beware, lest the curse enter and consume thy house.

Is a Violation of Masonic Obligations Perjury?—No. II.

BY EDMOND RONAYNE.

There is more importance attached to and more stress laid upon the Masonic obligations than on any of the other various ceremonials of the different degrees. The obligation is the principal ingredient in the entire system. In the ritual of the first or Entered Apprentice degree the question is asked, "What makes you a Mason?" and the answer is emphatic and positive, "My obligation." So also in the second, or Fellow Craft degree, "What makes you a Fellow Craft?" "My obligation;" and likewise in the third or Sublime degree of Master Mason, "What makes you a Master Mason?" "My obligation." Hence it will be readily observed that the obligation is the great motive power, the great main-spring, as it were, which gives vitality and force to every part of the Masonic system. Without the obligation no man ever was or ever can be made a Mason, and the obligations, being a fundamental landmark in Masonry, have remained unchanged and unchangeable in every essential particular, since their first adoption, from 1717 to 1738. Every candidate, be he king or plebian, minister or layman, judge or constable, rich or poor, must take all these Masonic obligations in the same manner, and under identically the same circumstances, and therefore, in instituting a critical inquiry into the nature and binding force of any one of them, it will be easily understood that the question, for instance, of whether a judge on the circuit or supreme bench, or a bishop in his cathedral can either logically, religiously or morally consider himself as bound to live in strict obedience to the requirements of the obligations of Masonry, can admit of only one solution, namely, that being a distinct violation of the law of God and being administered without any sanction or authority whatever from the civil magistrate, the first duty we owe to our God and to our country is to break through and trample upon these obligations as worthless and sinful in the extreme.

In investigating the claims put forward for these Masonic obligations, it may not be inappropriate to go back in the initiatory ceremonies and begin with the candidate in the preparation room into which he finds himself ushered previous to his being divested of his clothing as a necessary preliminary to initiation. Here we find him answering the following questions to the secretary and in presence of witnesses, "Do you seriously declare upon your honor before these gentlemen, that, unbiased by the improper solicitation of friends and uninfluenced by mercenary motives, you freely and voluntarily offer yourself a candidate for the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry?" Answer, "I do."

Now, can any person, Freemason or otherwise, be so devoid of sense as to endeavor to persuade himself for a single instant, that every candidate for the mysteries and privileges of Masonry seeks initiation from these pure motives? Does every Worshipful Master and every lodge even pretend to believe in the honesty and sincerity of the "I do" of the candidate on this occasion? Is it not perfectly understood by every intelligent Mason that every aspirant for the Masonic degrees is actuated by some sinister motive or has some ulterior object in view in seeking admission into the Masonic order? Money has got to be procured to keep up the aristocratic style of our silk-stocking lodges and hence the real design of the candidate is winked at, and the brethren calmly and complacently absolve themselves from any participation in the deceitful transaction by the innocent remark "that is his own business," while the poorer lodges eagerly grasp at anybody and everybody who has sound limbs, a well-filled purse, and is of lawful age. To black-ball a man for the Masonic degrees is the exception; to admit every white man is the general rule.

Having then a selfish object in joining the institution, his ready assent to the following question will be more easily understood. "Do you seriously declare upon your honor before these gentlemen that you will cheerfully conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the fraternity?" Answer, "I do." Now here is something directly at variance with the commonly accepted theory to be found in the government of all human action. A man is entirely ignorant—has not the most remote conceptions of the "ancient usages and established customs" of a certain society or organization, and yet he unreservedly and unhesitatingly pledges his sacred honor to "cheerfully conform" to every one of them and that without a single inquiry as to their character or their ultimate object. Does any one suppose for a single moment that any intelligent man could be caught in such an abominable trap as this, unless he were impelled thereto by some selfish motive? Is there a banker, a merchant, a farmer, a mechanic, or even a common day-laborer to be found in the whole country who would make such a blind promise in any of the ordinary transactions of business? Not one. Would a minister of the Gospel do it? Would any of our circuit, county, or probate judges do it? Would a sharp, keen, astute lawyer do it? Not one of them would be guilty of such consummate folly in any ordinary business transaction. And yet every man seeking admission within the portals of Freemasonry must answer "I do" to the above question. These constitutional questions are always, in fact must always be propounded, and this being well understood by the candidate, and knowing that if he answered differently, or if he demanded to have some of these "ancient usages and established customs" explained to him, he would be summarily rejected, he blindly makes the promise and thus commences a life-course of deception upon the very threshold of this truthful and eminently moral (?) institution, and as a further aid in carrying on and perpetuating this deception the obligation is administered which binds him for life (according to Masonic law) to this abominable system of duplicity and fraud.

But what are these "ancient usages and established customs" to which our worthy D. D., or banker, or judge, or merchant promises such unconditional and unqualified obed i ence? Let us enumerate a few of them. The first "ancient usage and established custom" which Freemasonry presents us with comes down all the way from King Solomon himself, "who was our first Most Excellent Grand Master." It prescribes death in a most barbarous and inhuman manner, as is witnessed by the death senteuce of Jubela Jubulo and Jubulum, rehearsed in the "legend of the temple-builder" in the Master Mason's degree, and literally recorded in page 117 of my Hand Book.

Another of the "ancient usages and established customs" is assassination in its worst and most hideous form as evidenced by the murder of Samuel Pritchard and Priest of London, for the publication of "Masonry Dissected;" of M. C. Miller of Belfast, Ireland, in the lodge-room over Lime-kiln dock, for bearing testimony that "Jachin and Boaz" was a correct revelation of the Masonic secrets of Smith of Vermont; of Murdoch of Rensselaerville; of Brownlee of Illinois; of Forgie of Canada; of Simmonds of Boston; of "Whispering Charlie" of Michigan; and of innumerable other victims of Masonic vengeance whose names and the "deep damnation of their taking off" will never be known until that great final gathering before the judgment seat, when the countless generations of earth shall be summoned by the angel's trump and all secrets and all crimes shall be exposed to the gaze of angels and of men.

Another of these "usages and es tablished customs" is abduction and murder most foul, as in the notable case of the unfortunate Captain William Morgan, who sealed his testimony of the silly secrets of Masonry and its hellish obligations with his life. The account of this fearful crime has become a part of our national history, and is too well known to need any more than a passing notice here—the manner of his untimely death was an "ancient usage and an established custom."

Some more of these "usages and established customs" may be briefly stated to consist in defiance of all legal authority, false swearing, aiding and abetting crime, calumny, slander, lying, selfishness, covetousness, boasting, pride, blasphemy, disobedience to parents, untruthfulness, ungodliness, covenant breaking, bearing false witness, incontinence, fierceness, despising those that are good, rebellion, high-mindedness, loving and pursuing pleasure more than loving God, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." Such are but a few of the many "ancient usages and established customs" of Freemasonry, and to this monstrous catalogne of abominations the candidate in the preparation room unreservedly pledges his most sacred honor to conform.

"O my soul, come not thou into their secret, unto their assembly, mine honor be not thou united; for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall."

Christmas.

A discussion of the claims of the day commonly called "Christmas," to be regarded either as a holyday or as a holiday, seems to me not unseasonable. When the venerable Dr. Jonas King returned, a few years ago, to his native New England from a protracted residence in Greece, he was so struck and grieved by the increased heed which his fellow-countrymen gave to the 25th of December, that he felt impelled to exposulate with them through the public prints. The children in our Sabbath schools are to a considerable extent becoming familiarized with "Christmas" entertainments, and are, in consequence, acquiring a fondness for "Christmas day" far exceeding that which most of them show for the Lord's day. I believe the spirit thus engendered and fostered to be evil, and to be fraught with danger, and will, therefore, use plain speech in combating it.

The question before us has different aspects, and needs for each a different treatment. First, I shall suppose myself to be discussing with Romanists, and Episcopalians, or any others, who contend for the sacredness of this day, and for the religious observance of it in commemoration of the birth of Christ. Second, I shall address myself to those Protestants who, while professing to attach no peculiar sacredness to the day, yet render it some special recognition in practice, by making it a holiday, and connecting with it festivities which stamp it with distinction.

When we demand the authority for observing the 25th day of December as a holy festival, the advocates of that mode of observing it reply, that this day is the anniversary of the Savior's birth, and that the church has authority to decree rites and ceremonies, inclusive of sacred days and seasons. To both of these positions we demur, contending, on the contrary, that no satisfactory proof can be given that Jesus was born on this day, and that, even if such proof could be furnished, there is no authority for constituting the day one of special sanctity.

1. God has given us in his word no definite information as to the day on which the auspicious event of the nativity occurred. We are not aware that any one is bold enough to affirm that he has. But, if the word of life affords no clue to this historical question, is it not a very significant circumstance? Does it not seem as if God purposely withheld the knowledge of the precise day, or even of the season of the year in which Christ was born, that there might be no semblance of authority given to the observance of any particular day as a memorial of his birth?

2. Such slender grounds as the Bible incidentally affords forgnessing the season of the Savior's birth are nfavorab le to the common notion hat this occurred in the month of December. There are only two facts mentioned in the sacred narrative which seem to have any bearing on the question at issue; and these yield aid not so much in determining precisely in what season he was born, as in showing at what season the birth did not take place.

The first of these is the fact that the shepherds were abiding in the open field near Bethlehem, keeping watch over their flocks, when the angelic host announced to them the birth of the Messiah. Now, from all that is known of the climate of the region around Bethlehem, and of the habits of pastoral life, it is, to say the least, highly improbable that shepherds were abiding with their flocks in the open fields around Bethlehem in the month of December. In Judea, at present, the rainy reason begins about the 1st of November, and extends till about March. Robinson, in his "Researches in Palestine," a work of standard authority, says, (vol. 1, p. 429), "During the months of November and December the rains continue to fall heavily: afterwards they return only at long intervals, and are less heavy; but at no period during the winter do they entirely cease to occur." Others, among whom may be mentioned Barclay, allege that in Southern Palestine there are in the latter part of December, and during January, occasional intermissions in the fall of rain, when shepherds avail themselves of the pasturage; and hence it is argued that owing to such a favorable turn in the weather the shepherds m.y have resorted with their flocks to the open fields at the time of the Savior's birth. I will not venture to affirm the impossibility of this; but, from all we know of the customs of the past or of the present time, I do not risk much in calling it improbable. It does not appear to be the habit of the shepherds in Palestine now to conduct their flocks to the open fields in December, and there is reason to think it never has been. The fact that at the time of the Savior's birth the shepherds were abroad with their flocks around Bethlehem, militates against the opinion that he was born in December. I do not say that it is conclusive against it; but that it raises a strong presumption against it.

The second suggestive fact as to the season of the Redeemer's birth is, that it occcured at a time of the year when the people of Palestine were required to repair to their original homes to be enrolled for taxation. But it is very improbable that the winter season, when the state of the roads is exceedingly unfavorable to traveling, would have been selected as the time of this enrolment. Robinson remarks, "During the whole winter, the roads, or rather tracks in Palestine, are muddy, deep, and slippery; so that the traveller at this season is subjected to the utmost discomfort and inconvenien e." I may add, that in the time of our Lord's sojourn among men, matters in this respect seem to have been no better than at present; for he said, "Pray that your flight be not in the winter." In appointing the feasts of the Israelitish people, God had respect to the conditions of climate in which he placed them: and, accordingly, none of the three great annual feasts, which demanded the assembling of the people from all parts of the land, occurred in the winter. The feast of the dedication, referred to in John x. 22, was held in the winter season; but there is no evidence that it was a properly religious festival, and at all events that any gathering of the people to one place was required on the occasion.

The facts now mentioned tend to show how improbable it is that winter was the season fixed by the Roman authorities for enrolment: and therefore how unlikely it is that Jesus was born in that season. But even if it could be shown that winter was the season and December the particular month of the year in which Christ was born, what evidence is there to prove that the 25th, rather than any other day of December, was the day of his birth? Certainly there is none in the Bible; which is rather singular, if God designed the day of the nativity to be a sacred festival. Let it, moreover, be duly noted, that in this instance the burden of proof lies on those who advocate the sacred observance of "Christmas," or who would have us believe that the birth of Christ took place on the 25th of December.

3. Even if the very day of the Redeemer's birth had been expressly revealed to us in the Bible, we would not therefore have warrant to set it apart as a sacred anniversary. Unless God had signified that it should be so recognized, it would be mere "will-worship" to attach any special sacredness to the day. To do so would be to teach for a doctrine "a commandment of men." It might savor of humility; but the humility is of that kind which undertakes to legislate in God's room, and involves intolerable presumption. Every religious observance destitute of divine appointment is unwarranted. In matters of religion, non-appointment is equivalent to prohibition. * * * Because the regulations of the New Testament church are less minute and numerous, it is not therefore to be inferred that they are less authoritative than those of the ancient church; nor can it be shown that the Bible sanctions the notion that men may now legislate for themselves in the matters of worship. It will hardly be contended that any express license to that effect is found in Scripture; I deny that there is any implied license given to it in the word of God, and hold, on the contrary, that the tone even of the New Testament is utterly at variance with the opinion now controverted. There is not the slightest ground for thinking that, in the times of the apostles, the churches were left free to indulge their own notions of the fitness of things in respect to forms of worship, of church government and order.

4. There is no evidence to warrant the belief that a day commemorative distinctively of the birth of Christ was observed in the days of the apostles, or for a long time thereafter. So far is it from being clear that the 25th of December was honored in the early church as the anniversary of the Savior's birth, it cannot be shown that any day of the year was so recognized. There is sufficient evidence that in the age alluded to the first day of the week was observed in honor peculiarly of Christ; but this day points especially to his resurrection. At the same time, for aught we can say, he may have been born, as well as raised from the dead, on that day of the week; and if so, we should have, what is better than an annual, a weekly commemoratiou of his birth. Indeed, the first day of the week, while suggestive more directly of the resurrection of Christ, commemorates this not as an isolated fact, but as the consummation of that mighty series of facts beginning with the birth of Christ and extending to his triumph over death. As, at the beginning, God appointed a day to commemorate the completion, rather than the commencement of his creative work, so we feel prepared to believe that, if any day should be set apart to signalize the work of redemption, it would be one suggestive of its completion rather than of its inception; that is, of the resurrection rather than the birth of the Redeemer. There is assuredly no hint given in the New Testament that the primitive disciples kept the 25th of December, or any other day, as the anniversary of the Savior's birth. Here we might rest, holding, as we do, that the canon of Scripture is the rule of faith; but, for sake of argument, we may go farther, and allege that there is no evidence outside of the Scripture to prove that in apostolic times an annual festival was held in memory of the birth of Christ. History seems to teach this, that the 25th of December was at an early date regarded, at least in the West, as the day of the nativity; but that this day was not observed by any peculiar solemnity even by those who counted it the Savior's birth-day. Kurtz, an author of ample erudition, a Lutheran, moreover, and therefore not liable to suspicion of prejudice in favor of our side, says in his Text-book of Church History, "The first mention of Christmas observance occurs in the Western Church about 360. Twenty or thirty years afterwards, it was also introduced in the East. We account for the late introduction of this festival by the circumstance that the ancient church failed to set value on the day of Christ's birth. and placed it rather in the background as compared with the day of his death." Kurtz adds, however, that "from the first the 25th of December was commonly regarded as the day on which Christ was born." In a somewhat similar strain writes Guericke, another Lutheran historian of great distinction. "A feast of the nativity, a Christmas festival," says he, "is only to be obscurely hinted at before the 4th century, namely, in Clemens Alexandrinus. About the middle of the 4th century, we meet with an allusion to it in Ambrosius, and soon after in the Romish church we have regular festum natalis dominici, and that too fixed for the 25th of December; for in Rome from the very first, and in the whole of the West also at a very early period, this day was looked upon as the Savior's actual birth-day." One fact may suffice to prove that for more than three centuries after the death of Christ no particular notice had been taken of the Savior's birth-day. In a discourse delivered by Chrysostom at Antioch, in the year 386, he expressly states that the observance of the 25th of December had been known among them within the previous ten years only, and had been introduced from the West. Anxiety to be brief causes me here also to abstain from presenting the fulness of evidence at command; but enough has been advanced to make it sufficiently sure that in apostolic times, and for centuries after, there was no "Christmas" festival.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman, now in Indiana, is now speaking in Boone Co., and vicinity, north-west of Indianapolis. He began at Thorntown, Dec., 6th, and also spoke at Eagletown and preached in the revival meetings at Westfield. He will remain to the State Convention at West Newton, Marion Co., on the 27th, 28th, and 29th, returning to Illinois Jan. 1st. He has appointments in Marshalltown, Iowa, in the first week of the new year.

Reform News.

Constitution of the Indiana Christian Anti-Secrecy Association.

[As the Indiana Association holds its annual convention soon we print for the benefit of friends in that State the amended constitution and by-laws.]

Art. 1. This Association shall be known as the Indiana Christian Anti-secrecy Association of Christians opposed to secret societies.

2nd. Its object will be to expose the workings of secret societies; to show the anti-Christian and anti-republican character of these societies; and to free the pulpit, the press, the legislative halls, and the court-room from the controlling influence of lodge-men and secret rings.

3rd. The officers of this Association shall be a President, a Vice-President for each county as far as practicable, a Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of five members, three of whom shall be a quorum. All of whom shall be elected annually.

4th. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at the meeting of the Association, and to attend to such other duties as usually belong to presidents of associations. The Vice-presidents shall preside (in order) in the absence of the President, and organize associations in their respective counties. The Secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of the Association in a book provided for that purpose. The Corresponding Secretary shall attend to the correspondence of the Association: The Treasurer shall hold the funds of the Association, and pay out the same on the order of the Association, or the President.

5th. The regular meeting of the Association shall be held at the call of the Executive Committee, or by a vote of the Association.

6th. Any person of good moral character, not connected with any secret order, and who sympathizes with the objects of this Association, may become a member by signing the constitution, and contributing to its expenses. And any member of this society who contributes $2 to its funds shall be entitled to a certificate of life membership. Belonging to a secret society, denying Christ, or immoral conduct shall forfeit membership in this Association.

7th. Any ecclesiastical organization within the State of Indiana shall be entitled to representation in the meetings of this Association, and all associations auxiliary to the State Association, shall be represented by one or more delegates in this body.

8th. The constitution may be amended at any regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

BY-LAWS.

1st. In addition to its annual conventions, this Association shall, through its President and Corresponding Secretary, appoint and hold quarterly conventions every three months, in such part of the State as in the judgment of those officers shall be deemed best. It shall be the duty of the Corresponding Secretary to see that these quarterly meetings are duly published, that speakers be provided, and in every way practicable to make these meetings a means of furthering the work of organization, securing life membership, and circulating our literature.

2nd. It shall be the duty of the Corresponding Secretary to send a circular letter of inquiry to parties wherever he has reason to believe there are those who are in sympathy with our reform; the object to be; 1st, to learn how much probable strength we possess in each locality so far as practical; 2nd, to open up the agitation, and keep it open, by lectures and otherwise. He shall secure work for the lecturers of the Association, as far as he can; and give his attention to the extension of our principles. He shall publish a quarterly report of the results of his efforts and the work performed by the lecturers of the Association. The expenses actually incurred by him for printing, postage and other necessary expenses, shall be met by the Association.

3rd. There shall be two or more lecturers appointed by this Association (or in the interim between its meetings the Corresponding Secretary is authorized to appoint), whose duty it shall be to make appointments and lecture, circulate the Christian Cynosure and by every reasonable means diffuse light upon the subject of secret societies. Each lecturer shall be authorized to organize societies auxiliary to this Association, and to collect funds for his own support, and shall make monthly reports to the Corresponding Secretary.

4th. Certificates of life membership and all other blanks necessary to carry forward the work of this society shall be furnished by the Corresponding Secretary.

5th. The Corresponding Secretary shall enroll the names of all life members of this society in a suitable book provided for the purpose.

"Separation" in the Indiana Eldership.

Silver Lake, Ind., Nov. 29, 1876.

Dear Brother K:—Will you allow me to repeat the watchward, "Onward, brethren, onward." You will remember the work that Bro. Stoddard did in our vicinity two years ago last September. The fruits of his labors are still plainly visible, and eternity alone will reveal the great good done. The secret society men say the more we agitate, the more members for them, but correct reports show the very opposite. To find samples of the despotism and unchristian spirit of the lodge, you need only attend meetings where God's children will stand for the true principles of Christ. Your attention might be called to one such meeting at Eel River Bethel, known as the Indiana eldership of the Church of God, where "three Masonic elders, by their domineering and dishonesty so controlled that body that they drove away five of its best ministers because they would not fellowship them with the image of the beast upon them." A stranger living about seventy-five miles away, who attended the meeting for a time, says: "To relate all that transpired in that body would be to relate a scene of shame which has shocked the Christian sense of the whole church."

Dr. S. L. Cook of Albion, Ind., gave a lecture on secret societies the evening after the close of the eldership. It was highly approved by the friends of reform. Dr. Cook should be financially sustained, and kept busy, by the friends of the cause working up points, then inviting him to come and enlighten the people; which he is fully able to do, using as he does the best Masonic authority and Grand Lodge reports, together with his own experience and observation which he gives with telling effect.

The anti-secret convention at Yellow Lake Bethel, agreed to meet at Lake Bethel east of Syracuse in the same county for the purpose of considering the propriety of organizing an eldership. This eldership was organized the 25th inst., and God's children are still marching on to victory, but not without heavy opposition, as the secret society men were there, perhaps in obedience to a summons of the lodge brethren in order to kill or destroy the influence and labor of God's faithful ones. But God's overruling power was plainly manifested and the march of God's servants was still onward.

On Sunday evening the preacher took for his text one word, "Religion"—James i. 27. This text he divided as follows: the pagan religion, the papal, the Mohammedan, the Christian, and the religion of secret societies. This gave him a large field, and in speaking of Christian duties he showed plainly the necessity of Christians living in obedience to Christ's law. In the same way the laws of Masonry require strict obedience. He even supposed "that if there was a Mason in that vicinity and that Mason should have given, handed, sent, or thrown a summons to a Mason in Michigan city, that Mason in obedience to that summons, would have to attend that meeting, provided it be within the length of his cable-tow." But the distance would be more than forty miles. Well, did Paul not go farther than he had authority, persecuting the church even in "strange cities," and may not a Freemason go more then the length of his cabletow, "being exceeding mad," and persecute the church of Jesus Christ. But the watchword is "Onward, brethren, onward"; and God's children kept marching onward in the discharge of duty till victory perched on their banners, for the only living and true God did most powerfully bless his children, till the shout of praise to God for victory were loudly proclaimed. It was then we could sing, "'Tis the old kind religion, and it's good enough for me"; and "The way is so delightful in the service of the Lord."

Yours in the onward march of truth and final victory through Christ our only Savior.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Instead of the usual discourse from Mr. Moody we give our readers a pen and ink sketch of the great meetings, and some of the choice things that are continually coming from one and another of the speakers at the different meetings.

Dr. T. H. Cleland sends a vivid account of one of the Tabernacle meetings to the Herald and Presbyter. He says:

The Tabernacle is situated near the business heart of the city. It is two lower stories of a very large business house, roofed over for the present, to be completed when these services close. The main audience room is the basement, entered by a dozen flights of stairs. Galleries running around on three sides, with the choir in the rear of the stand, holding three hundred singers, the whole room capable of seating 8,000. Mr. Moody preached three times yesterday (Sabbath)—once at 8 A. M. at 4 and 8 P. M. The two afternoon services were crowded to overflowing, with two overflow meetings. To obtain seats we started more than an hour in advance, and then were compelled to sit very far back. In a short time the whole building was filled to its utmost capacity, and waited in solemn silence until the appointed arrived. Mr. Sankey was then the first to come in. He is a man of fine person and presence. I had heard him before, in the morning, and thought him not quite equal to Mr. Bliss in sweetness of expression and articulation. But his voice was a little roughened with cold, and now and then cracked and splintered when touching the higher notes. But at 4 P. M., he opened the services with a solo—"Ninety and nine," with a kind of Æolian harp accompaniment on the organ. He paused until there was not a cough or a rustle in all that mighty crowd. Then, with a voice rich, full, sonorous, and tremulous with deep, subdued passion, he sang, "There were ninety and nine," the whole audience holding their breath, the stilness seeming to grow deeper and more solemn and awful. Now the tears begin to moisten every eye, and flow unconsciously down the cheek. I felt a strange sensation creeping all over me, as though every drop of blood in me was tingling in my veins. I found myself nearly drawn off my seat, and my face wet with tears, with this consolation, that there was no one about that could criticise my weakness.

Then came Mr. Moody. He is rather a low thick-set man, with wonderful chest, very short neck and small, round head, with nothing very striking or remarkable in his presence. His voice is neither remarkable for its clearness, compass, or melody. His enunciation is clear, rapid, distinct, with now and then a little catch in his words, as if they were contending within for outward utterance. Bating all this, he holds that vast audience spellbound. He seldom preaches over thirty or forty minutes. Like Mark Antony, he speaks right on, and right at the people—full of incident and anecdote, so that the attention never flags. Then there is another element in him peculiar to all effective orators, of which he seems to be wholly unconscious—a deep, broad vein of humor. At times his audience is moved by it, like the sea by some great ground-swell. All our tears, of laughing and crying, lie in the same tear cells. To be able to open the vent for the one seems but to prepare the way for the other. If the pan of milk is tilted to one side it is most sure to slop over on the other. Mr. Moody's hits are often so graphic, so incisive, so true to life, and keen, as often to provoke a broad smile, and sometimes an audible laugh. Perhaps the next moment you will see a perfect banner of white handkerchiefs wiping away the falling tears. But he always preaches the Gospel, with a keen edge and point upon it. He does it with the most convincing earnestness of manner and spiritual unction. So that Mr. Moody is hid completely behind the Cross. He preaches not so much about Christ as Christ himself, a personal and present Saviour to the lost sinner

HOW TO TALK WITH SINNERS UNDER CONVICTION.

In speaking of the inquiry meeting Major Whittle, in the Christian Convention, spoke very practically as follows:

It seems to me that wherever the Gospel is preached, and not only in evangelistic services, we ought to look for an inquiry meeting in connection therewith; and if we have faith in preaching the Gospel, as we ought to have, we always will have those meetings. A minister told me of a lesson that was taught in reference to this matter of teaching with faith. One Sunday evening he preached very acceptably, and urged with great power sinners to reach out for Christ. He had no idea that any one would be an inquirer, but, to his astonishment, at the close a man came forward and knelt down in front of his pulpit. He thought the man was probably a drunkard, and that he was going to have trouble, and he thought he should have to call in the assistance of an officer to remove the man. However, he went down and found a man under deep conviction of sin. That incident shows how well an inquiry meeting comes in at the end of a service. If, after proclaiming the Gospel, a minister was just to give notice that at the close he would be in his study to meet any one in the congregation that desired to speak about his soul, I believe God would bless and use those after meetings to his glory. It would make it a personal matter to the unconverted; it would impress them with the thought that they had heard the message, and had been invited to renounce their sins and seek salvation, and had refused it In those small meetings a minister can talk with the inquirers personally. In a large meeting the ministers can gather in others to help talk. It is the custom at evangelistic services to invite persons into an adjoining room. I would always have it that way, and invite those impressed with the truth to meet there, and have enough Christian workers to talk to the inquirers individually, and present truths to them out of the Word of God, instead of talking of their experience. It is best not to talk at all about ourselves, but simpl to take our Bibles and sit with them, and present to them the grand old truths of the Gospel. When we do this, the Holy Spirit uses the Word to give light, and if we are faithful in using God's Word he will be faithful in performing his promises. It would be a great help if we could only educate Christians to have faith to use the Bible. How simple Christian work becomes it we just realize we are behind the Word of God. It is like a man behind an eighty-ton gun; he may be weak himself, but he has got a tremendous power before him. If we do this the work will become delightful, and of great service to men. I see from the papers that the great trouble with the inquiry-meetings here is an insufficiency of workers to come with their Bibles and point sinners to the Lord Jesus Christ. It is sad that it is so—that there is not that love of souls to encourage men in this blessed work. I hope that to-night it won't be so, I hope that God will so inspire Christians that in future there will be no lack of workers. Another thing: we want to get the sinner's attention away from his own defects. A good many think that if they get enough bad feeling about their sins that is conversion, and, after they have passed through the revival, they find themselves without the saving faith in Christ. We want to keep the attention of the sinner away from self. We must first bring them to that point of God's Word about their being guilty; second, we should impress them with what the Bible says about Christ as a Savior; and third, convince them of the individual appropriation to themselves of Christ as a Savior. We must make them see Jesus Christ the object of our faith. Christ revealed through the Scripture, and that the Scripture is the ground of our faith in him. It is awful to talk about our experience to an anxious sinner. You may influence him by your sympathy and work upon him by your magnetic power as it were, but you cannot save him in that way. You ought to drop all that, and use this blessed Bible in the inquiry-room, and God will use his own Word, and those who accept it will be brought into the light. I have conducted inquiry-meetings, and have always sought to present the Gospel through the Bible. I would ask first, "Do you believe what it says—that you are a condemned sinner?" After I have got them to assent to that, I would next point out that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and ask, "Do you believe that?" "Yes," they would say. Then, thirdly, I would ask, "Do you individually appropriate him as your Savior as revealed in Scripture?" I would get them to accept that and then pray for them in faith. One-half the work in inquiry-meetings is lost because we don't have faith; every one should be carefnl in this work that they have faith. By not having it we often discourage sinners in presenting the Gospel. When we present the Gospel as Jesus gave it, and when a man earnestly and intelligently says he accepts it, pray in faith to Almighty God to seal that man by the Spirit as his child. I have heard prayers in the inquiry-room that have been dreadful to me. After the Gospel has been presented to sinners and they have intelligently accepted it, I have heard them pray in agony for the Lord to have mercy upon them. I present such prayers to God with thanksgiving, and pray that they may be accepted of the Spirit. How many are thrown back into the darkness because we lack faith!

NOTES FROM NOON-MEETING.

On Wednesday last Mr. Moody spoke with great feeling and sweetness on the seventeenth chapter of John, Christ's last prayer for his disciples. On verse 17th, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth," he said:

That is one trouble with many who pray to be sanctified, they reject the Word. Christ says we are to be sanctified through the "truth," and the truth is the Word. Now, a great many don't get so far as the Word; their sanctification stops with themselves. It is very hard to get along with them. They are all the while talking about themselves—talking about their feelings. But they want to get beyond that, into the Word; forget their feelings in Christ. When we are sanctified by the Word we are full of Christ and talk only of him."

At the same meeting Rev. Mr. Ravlin said:

"I was converted in a union meeting where people of all denominations were all mixed up, and their prayers were so mingled together that I don't know whose prayers were answered in my conversion. At first I knew just enough not to know any difference between Christians, but after I joined the Baptist Church and began to study dogmatic theology with a large percentage of sectarian phase in it, I began to love the Baptist folks more than I did the others, and to get bound up in sectarian notions. But now, thank God! I have got back to the place where I was when I was first converted; the fetters are all off, and I love all my brethren as Christians. The Savior predicates the belief of the world in his divinity in the visible unity of his church. Some people say that means a spiritual unity; but, my friends, a spiritual unity can't be seen by the world, and therefore it must be something more than a mere spiritual unity of God's children that is to convince the world that Jesus is the Son of God. There is no sectarian rancor between God the Father and God the Son, and the unity of the Trinity is the illustration Christ uses to show that he means by his prayer that his church may be one. I want to live to see the day when all Christians shall be one in Christ, and then the world will believe that God sent him. I thank God for that clause in the last will and testament of Jesus Christ: "I will—that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." That is going to be fulfilled unless you can break the will. The will of Jesus Christ secures us this grand inheritance. Adam mortgaged it in Eden to the devil, and the devil foreclosed on him, and, under his cut-throat mortgage, sold him out; but in the Book of Hebrews we have an abstract of our title, a clear title, in spite of all old incumbrances, to a share of the glory of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

—From the Free Methodist we learn that Bro. M. L. Vorheis, pastor of the Free Methodist church in this city propounded the question on secret societies, answered by Mr. Moody. Another question of the same kind and perhaps more than one, was sent up, but were not reached before the hour was up. At the close of the Christian Convention on that day several thousand tracts were handed out to the people as they came away, which would serve us a continual reminder of Mr. Moody's noble testimony. Among those who received them were Messrs. Parkhurst, Tiffany and Goodfellow, all of whom are Freemasons occupying prominent positions in the Methodist Episcopal church.

A True Story with a Moral.

Hollister, Cal., Nov. 1876.

About two years ago the California State Legislature passed an act entitled "The Local Option Law." It gave to each legal precinct the privilege of deciding by vote on a certain day whether alcohol should be sold within its limits or not, and the wish so expressed should become a State law. A terrible struggle ensued, and our little town of Hollister with its precinct entered into the work heartily, and the temperance side prevailed. Soon after an arrest was made for selling, but a trial was never reached. Finally the Supreme Court declared the law unconstitutional; that ended the law, but not my story.

At that time we had in the center of our town a brewery, making and selling beer at wholesale and retail, manufacturing drunkards at home and abroad. After some months had elapsed from the date of the local option, the brewery took fire and burned up. Soon after I saw one of the executive committee of the temperance society circulating a petition for the poor unfortunate man who had lost his brewery, to reinstate him in his business. He was a rich man, and I presume gave liberally. Another of our temperance committee gave thirty dollars and another fifty dollars. I was familiar with all these men in their temperance movements, being well acquainted with them, and also president of the society for which they acted as committee.

On meeting the man who gave the fifty dollars, I accosted him thus: "How is it that you, a temperance man, have taken stock in that liquor-making establishment in our midst?" He denied the charge, but acknowledged the gift, saying he gave it to the man. "Then," said I, "why did you not put him under bonds not to use it for the injury of others?" He seemed a little puzzled, then replied, "Somebody will make beer here, and I would as lives he would do it as any body." I replied, "You are too old a temperance man to use that argument. You know it will justify every saloon in the country."

He seemed perplexed for a moment, then replied, "He is an Odd-fellow. We had to." I replied, if Odd-fellowship draws temperance men into such work there is something wrong in it.

Now the fact is that these other temperance committee-men were all Odd-fellows; and more, our orator and hero of the local option fight, and since candidate for Governor on the temperance ticket, undoubtedly gave five dollars for the brewery. I am so informed on good authority. The officers who held the arrest for months until the Supreme Court set the whole aside are, I believe, Odd-fellows. How much that relation affected the legal workings against alcohol I cannot say, but I believe it had its bearing. We also have a law closing saloons on Sunday, which is not enforced. How much secretism works against temperance and other reforms I leave each to judge for themselves. One thing is sure, the liquor men are largely represented in the Odd-fellows' ranks in Hollister, and the head man in their lodge is ahead in the liquor trafic here. There is a poor show for sustaining temperance or any other reform in our midst, while secret orders act on the government like wheels in wheels, and the inside movement controlling the outer.

A Case of Odd-Fellow Charity.

Calvin A. Campbell, now a resident of Belmont, Belmont Co., Ohio, says that he joined the Sciota Odd-fellow lodge No. 31 of that place some years before the war, paid up his four dollars a year in advance, and all other demands, up to the time he went into the army, and during his stay there he was taken with inflamed eyes and was sent off to the State of Mississippi, and all communication cut off so that he could not pay up his dues. As soon as he could be sent four dollars to the lodge. After he got home he applied to the lodge for his benefit. They claim that he was in arrears a few days and has forfeited his right and will not give him his weekly benefits. So he quits them now and forever, and says they are a lie and a cheat, one and all, and he has renounced them forever. He says that the Odd-fellows saw that his case was a permanent one, and they took that way to get clear of him The above Calvin Campbell tells me the following story about a prominent Odd-fellow, and a most skillful doctor. By accident he was crippled for life. He applied for aid to the lodge and they gave it for some time. He was sent to for a prescription for a sick man, a more dangerous case than common, that other doctors had given up, and he wrote it out and asked no pay and was not willing to take it, but at last, after urging he took it, and for that they (the Odd-fellows) turned him out and deprived him of his benefits forever. Such is Odd-fellowship.

Libertines, Religious and Irreligious.

Those who have read Bernard's book have seen that in the Masonic world an irreligious libertine is put on a level with a Mason's own mother, or any other person who is so unfortunate as to be of the female sex. But if an irreligious libertine is objectionable in the Masonic estimation, it must not be inferred that Masons reject all libertines. On the contrary, it is a well-known fact that religious libertines make the very best Freemasons. Freemasonry could not be improved as a religion for religious libertines. It suits Brigham Young to a dot. Any man who desires to be a religious man and a human devil, all at the same time should join a Masonic lodge at once, and eat his bread in secret.

It is true that Masons run our courts, and send irreligious libertines to the jails and other places of confinement. And perhaps it is as well that all criminals are not able to make a sign of distress in the courts, when our religious libertines are trying them for law-breaking. A man who seduces, or steals horses without first learning the grips and winks from a Worshipful Master, deserves to pick oakum for a Masonic sheriff "for the good of the order," or rather the Masonic office-holder. It is very strange indeed that all criminals do not see the advantages to be gained by joining the "ancient and honorable" gang of banditti, who manage the courts, jails, etc. But it is a fact that some criminals are smarter than others. Those counterfeiters pardoned by the great Masonic President. Andy Johnson, knew the value of Freemasonry as well as Andy did, when he himself was on trial at the bar of the Senate of the United States.

The truth is, Freemasonry rejects all the great moral principles; but it requires all its libertines to wear a religious cloak while doing the devil's work.

Are they Aliens?

Raymonds, Pa.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I am so far advanced in age, being in my 83rd year, that people seem to think I had better let these questions rest, but I would refer them to Stephen Hopkins; he did not expect to reap much benefit himself, but worked for the rising generations.

1st. Did our forefathers, in the Declaration of Rights ever design to nurture institutions more despotic in their nature (in the shape of oath bound secret societies), than the government from which they struggled so hard to be free?

2nd. Has anyone, after binding themselves by oath to obey the dictates of those societies or governments, a right to a citizenship in our government at the same time?

3d. Did they intend that our legislators should have the right to charter such institutions in our midst, and if not, they are aliens to our government and have no right to make laws binding us as citizens?

Ever yours for right and truth,

Stephen Cranston.

Our Mail.

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wis, writes:

"A few days ago a Royal Arch Mason and member of the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, was inquiring for some of those tracts and papers on Masonry, and I gave him the best I had; shall lend him more of them as he seemed to be glad of the light from outer sources. He said they had one of the illustrated Cynosures at their Grand Lodge session and it was an object of much attention. * * * On the evening of the 4th inst. I took three pockets full of the Cynosure and the cutting leaflets and tracts sent me last, and distributed them freely, returning empty with a wish for more of the same. I presume over a hundred were read and pondered the next day, Sabbath, and I feel sure both ministers and members of several of the churches here (not Masons but Christians) are glad of the approaching unfettering era; and truly the preaching at this place takes on largely the true ring of reform. We look for a lecture Saturday evening by Mr. Tilton of Whitewater, on the true theory of reform. I may give his opinions on that subject to you at another time."

W. I. Dallas, Salineville, O, writes:

"I would like to have some lectures in this place and then I feel satisfied that there could be something done for the N. C. A., and a good number of subscribers secured."

Peter Rich, Westfield, Ind., writes:

"I can say amen to the remarks made by G. A. Brown, published in Cynosure the 2d of this month. May God hasten the day when we will not be so inconsistent as to support by our action the very thing that we condemn in our hearts."

If any of our readers do not remember this article it will be worth their while to review it. It is found on the fourteenth page, near the bottom.

N. Bingham, Oneonta, N. Y., writes:

"I think Ronayne is doing good; hope he may be spared may years to oppose the institution."

B. J. Hunt, Waitsburg, Walla Walla county, Washington Ter., writes:

"Secrecy is rampant here, but by the help of the Lord right will prevail."

L. A. Wickey, Franklintown, Pa., writes:

"On my circuit, York Springs, Pa. Con. U. B, different classes have voted for delegates to the General Conference, which convenes in May 1877, and so far have voted unanimously for anti-secret men. The issue in the East is secrecy and anti-secrecy."

Enoch Honeywell, Altay, N. Y., writes:

"The object of the Honeywell tracts is to show our young men that Mason and Ku-Klux clans are tyrants, traitors, murderers, and a nuisance in our nation, and that he who joins either assumes all their crimes and is no longer a free man."

N. Ames, Rushford, N. Y., writes:

"Oh how my heart has ached to have some good lecturer here to open the blind eyes, and then have Ronayne come and work the degrees. I give away my papers when I can find any one to read them."

Cannot L. N. Stratton, D. P. Rathbun, Woodruff Post, A. F. Curry, New York lecturers, make arrangements to supply this want?

John Milner, Greenfield, Highland Co., O., writes:

"Rev. D Brice is posted to lecture to the people of this place on the 5th of December on the goodness of Odd-fellowship, as he is an Odd-fellow and knows how good it is. We want some one who has been an Odd-fellow to tell the people how bad it is."

Cannot some of our readers in Ohio noticing this letter, correspond with Mr. Milner and make arrangements to have lectures on the evils of secretism in Greenfield?

A. O. Howell, Champaign City, Illinois, writes:

"One man said: 'Sir, do you know what a power you are opposing?' Yes, sir, I do. A power only equalled by the 'powers of darkness,' and only excelled by the Divine power. This alone is our only available hope. 'One is a majority with God.' 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.' May we, the few who are walking in the 'straight and narrow way,' so cling to the Divine arm as to be ever found co-operating with God, and the result in the end will be sure, safe, triumphant and glorious, whether we live to see it or not. Ours is duty and obedience. Results are with God. May these motives and promises ever cheer and sustain us amid the dark and bitter persecutions that ever have and ever will attend a true life of consecration."

L. D. Ambrose, Avalon, Mo., writes:

"I have been much strengthened in the cause by the labors of brethren Ronayne and Stoddard with us at Chillicothe. They did a good work which was seed sown in good ground. We as a church have a wonderful fight here with secrecy, both in the church and our school."

E. G. Paine, Wasioja, Dodge Co., Minn., writes:

"I shall send report of Ronayne's work in this county soon."

T. K. Lufkin, Lynnville, Iowa, writes:

"I am still aiding in the good cause of Christ by distributing about one thousand tracts per month to men, women and children. Sometimes I get thanks for them and sometimes curses; but thank God the ball is rolling, and I expect to keep pushing as long as the Lord blesses me in it."

J. B. Nessel, Ellington, N. Y., writes:

"After an illness of nearly seven weeks, and a part of the time helpless, it taking three or four men and one or two women to get me from one place to another, caused by a fall from an apple tree, I am so far recovered by the blessing of God and the help rendered by kind friends as to be able to report the vote of our town. Three besides myself cast their votes on the side of God and our country. This was three-fourths more than were cast four years ago, and therefore it inspires us with fresh zeal and courage to re-enter the field of conflict, by the help of the Lord, with more than mortal energy, because our principles are immortal and must prevail. George W. Patterson, is elected to Congress from this, the 33d district. He is a dyed-in-the-wool Anti-mason. It will be well to bear it in mind. Theodore A Case of Ellington, goes to our State Legislature pledged to present Anti-masonic petitions, if sent to him. * * * Our much beloved Cynosure is doing good work and the number published should be increased during the coming winter to ten thousand. When we take into consideration the power of the press to expose the hidden things of dishonesty and the scoundrelism practiced by the dark orders, it should beget within us a determination to scatter such publications into every nook and corner throughout this whole land. We might despair by looking at the foothold Satan has obtained in this country by means of Romanism, the dram-shop and secret societies, and we might add a demoralized church. We mean the largest, influential ones, that have become so to a great extent by mixing up with the secret orders that are anti-Christ, heathenish, devilish. We hope our friends will look deeper into the matter of the church being so much implicated. There should be a coming out and turning out commenced at once, as herein lies the grand difficulty; for so long as they are endorsed by the church, just so long will it be a hard matter to get men to forsake or renounce the lodges. I hope ere long if the Lord continues to raise me up to be on the war-path again. It has been suggested to my mind, and I believe it came from the Lord, that I change my tactics somewhat. I now propose to canvass from village to village, in each township in Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties, for the Cynosure and other papers that have espoused our cause, and sell our publications and distribute tracts; something after the fashion of Bros Freeman and Hodge at the Centennial, only on a much smaller scale and a great deal less ability. I shall endeavor to obtain the most favorable place, where the townsmen mostly resort and commence operations; then change to some other place in the town or move on to the next town, and so on. I have great faith in this method and hope others of like faith may enter into this kind of labor, select their fields and go to work. I have in my mind a few who would be very suitable persons and could leave home just as well as not. You who enter into this kind of work need not fear the consequences. God will take care of that; only be wise as a serpent but loving and kind as a dove, and try to impress it upon the minds of the poor, deluded oath-bound slaves to any of the secret clans that it is for their especial benefit that we are thus engaged."

Mr. Nessel mentions those whom he has in his mind but we do not publish the names. We hope all our friends may profit by his suggestions.

S. Ranks, Algona, Kossuth county Ia., writes:

"Secretism reigns almost triumphant in this county. But I will not despise the day of small things. Victory is ahead! One vote beside my own was cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in this place. I distributed the most tickets among the Free Methodists, supposing them to be all right on this question of course. But they fell into the old snare of voting wrong (as I look at it) to defeat a wrong."

B. Barto, Alton, Michigan, writes:

"I would like to ask if it would not be well to have our lecturers who can do so organize Anti masonic lodges. Then we will know how to run our own lodges, and every school boy will be informed regarding the character of Freemasonry"

We think once in a lifetime often enough to see the blasphemous foolishness of lodge initiations; but in some localities it may be well to have an open lodge.

M. J. Duryea, South Jefferson, Mich, writes:

"Masonry is going like 'feathers before a gale,' as well as the grange."

J. B. Steinspring, Newton's Retreat, Ind., writes:

"I had a very pleasant trip to the Centennial; met an old friend whom I had not seen for eight years. He gave me the Odd-fellow's sign, which I answered according to your book, and had quite a talk with him. You can imagine his feelings when I showed him where I got my Odd-fellowship. He then said, 'Well, you don't know much when you know all. You got what you know for twenty five cents, and I have paid about fifteen dollars.' I gave him some tracts and a paper which he thanked me for, and said he did not think he would pay any more money to his lodge for secrets he could get so cheap. You may hear from him."

A box 24 by 16 inches, 22 deep, contains 1 barrel. A box 16 by 16½ inches, 8 deep, contains one bushel. A box 8 by 8¼ inches, 8 deep, contains 1 peck. A box 4 by 4 inches, 4½ deep, contains one-half peck. A box 4 by 4 inches, 4-10 deep, contains one quart.

The standard bushel of the United States contains 2,150.4 cubic inches. Any box or measure, the contents of which are equal to 2,150.4 cubic inches, will hold a bushel of grain. In measuring fruit, vegetables, coal and other substances, one-fifth must be added. In other words, a peck measure five times even full makes one bushel. The usual practice is to heap the measure.

Whenever I go into a stable and see the horses all attention, suspiciously watchful, ears in uneasy motion, legs lifted in constant change of position, I know that one of the most tractable, sensitive, and grateful animals in creation is being sworn at, bullied by the man who is paid to treat it well. A man may feed a horse well, and yet be a very bad groom, inasmuch as he spoils the animal's temper, to say nothing of the misery and cruelty that he inflicts on his charge.

EGGS—HOW INCREASED.—If an increase of eggs be desired in the poultry yard, before large sums of money are expended in the purchase of everlasting layers, we would recommend the system of keeping no hens after the first, or, at the most, their second year. Early pullets give the increase, and the only wonder is that people persist as they do in keeping up a stock of old hens, which lay one day and stop three, instead of laying three days and stopping one; in some parts of England it is the invariable rule to keep the pullets only one year. Feeding will do a great deal—a surprising work indeed—in the production of eggs, but not when the old hens are concerned; they put on fat, but they cannot put down eggs. Their tale is told, their work is over; nothing remains to be done with them but give them a smell of the kitchen fire, and the sooner they get that the better. Of course there are some old favorites whose lives ought to be spared as long as they can send forth their representatives. Judicious mating, by which we mean the advantage of a comparatively youthful cockerel, may be the means of even exhibition poultry making their appearance from the eggs of the good old hen, and here we have the exception to the rule upon which we insist.—London Agricultural Gazette.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 14, 1876.

THE ANNUAL MESSAGE will increase the popularity of President Grant, and endear his memory to the American people.

The following allusion must make some cheeks redden unless they have lost the power to blush, or unless they blush perpetually by grog:

"My civil career commenced, too, at a most critical and difficult time, less than four years after the country had emerged from a conflict such as no other nation had ever survived. Nearly one-half the States had revolted against the government; and of those remaining faithful to the Union a large precentage of the population sympathized with the rebellion, and made an enemy in the rear almost as dangerous as the more honorable enemy in the front. The latter committed errors of judgment, but they maintained them openly and courageously; the former received the protection of the government they would see destroyed and reaped all the pecuniary advantages to be gained out of the then existing state of affairs, many of them by obtaining contracts, and by swindling the government in the delivery of their goods."

The close of the message, considering his past career, is simple almost to sublimity:

"With the present Congress my official life terminates. It is not probable that public affairs will ever again receive attention from me further than as a citizen of the Republic, always taking a deep interest in the honor, integrity and prosperity of the whole land."

WHEATON COLLEGE. We trust our readers will have noticed the great reduction in the expenses of instruction in this institution. Blackboard, or free hand drawing, book-keeping, business penmanship, and lectures on Commercial Law, with vocal music, all which have been heretofore extras, are next term to be made FREE OF CHARGE to all who have paid the regular tuition. That is to say, the College hires outright the very first class teachers in the above useful and beautiful branches, and gives the students free access to their instructions without charge. It is the hope and desire of the College to make this arrangement permanent. Meantime, let as many as can secure these advantages in the coming term which opens Jan. 4, 1877.

THE TRUE DOCTRINE.

Our New England readers are now looking with interest to the coming of the Evangelists Moody and Sankey to their capital city, Boston, where a tabernacle is provided for, and a great upheaval of society is sure to come.

Our friends will do well to remember that Mr. Moody's speciality is bringing souls to Christ. He is not a pastor, but an evangelist. He advises his converts to go into the established churches, and takes leave of them at the door, so far as any discipline or control over them is concerned inside. Neither does he question those who crowd to his platform, whether they are Freemasons or not. If Dr. Manning, of the old South Church, or A. H. Quint, late Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and now secretary and only permanent officer of the National Congregational Council, come to his platform, as they doubtless will, Mr. Moody will not attempt to eject them, but recognize them as in good standing in Congregational churches. So also Fisher and Knight, of South Hadley Falls; Currier of Lynn; Stratton, late of Worcester, and other Congregational ministers who have gone into the organized deism of the lodge.

In Philadelphia Mr. Moody alluded to the lodge once as a yoking together of Christians and unbelievers. In the Hippodrome at New York he gave the same interpretation of that text, and told how a Philadelphia minister objected, and his own reply to him. In Chicago he went further. He quoted Christ's example in addition to Paul's precept, and on another occasion referred to a secret college order as "one of those miserable secret societies," which must have thrilled the thousands of his auditors by his terribly earnest emphasis.

But it is evident that Mr. Moody does not understand the true doctrine of secret societies, but looks on them as a sort of worldliness in which Christians are forbidden to be "yoked." If he saw clearly that the lodge prayers and altars are pagan, by the omission of Christ, he would say so. If he saw clearly that all worships which omit Christ are Gentile, and that the things which the Gentiles worship are devils or demons, he would say so, and warn his converts to leave the lodges as if they were dens of vipers.

It is, perhaps, a mercy that Mr. Moody's eyes are but partially opened to the true nature of the lodge, as organized deism and Gentile devil-worship. He is not the man to flinch from uttering his convictions, if he believed the simple, horrible truth on this subject; though, even then, he would not consider it quite fair to pronounce to his multitudes the truth as he holds it, and give them no chance to reply.

But this he could, and it is to be hoped, will do. He could state it as his opinion that lodge oaths disqualify the citizen, as it is an oath of foreign allegiance; and its man-contrived religious ceremonies are an insult and a blasphemy. If this is not the real nature of the lodge religion, it is the only false religion of which this is not true. It is too plain to need argument that a religion which excludes Christ, is an anti-Christian religion.

DON'T NEGLECT TO RENEW IN TIME.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S LAST MESSAGE.

The annual message to Congress is short this year compared with the seven that have preceded it from President Grant. It is a plainly written, straightforward document, the composition of a soldier, not a rhetorician. As it is a sort of farewell message the President gives us a little of his personal history as an apology for some of the mistakes of his administration. From the age of seventeen he had witnessed but twice the excitement of a general election and was but once eligible as a voter until he was nominated for the Presidency. That was his practical political schooling. His civil career began too at a critical time, when Johnson had been fighting "my policy" of reconstruction into legislation, against the judgment of the loyal part of the nation. He arraigns the disloyal element in the North, then and now the most unbearable of all men in politics, with the words of a man who has borne arms against his country's foes: Political opponents will hardly relish his stern rebuke. The national taxes have been reduced in the last seven years nearly $300,000,000, the debt $450,000,000, and the annual interest $30,000,000. With the balance of trade largely in our favor he thinks specie resumption can easily be made in 1879. The violation of the Indian treaty respecting the Black Hills is thus excused: the first settlers there were removed by troops; but fresh discoveries of gold brought increased numbers, the effort to remove whom would have resulted in the desertion of the troops. This trouble is now removed by treaty. Our foreign relations are satisfactory, though the reduction of the foreign service by last Congress is an injury to national interests.

The subject of naturalization is reviewed and reforms in the process of recording recommended. The state of the army is reviewed and the appropriation of an additional $6,000,000 recommended. The prosperity of the postal department is noticed in a reduction of its annual deficiency. The International Exhibition is reviewed and a resolution of thanks recommended to the foreign nations which participated and donated their exhibits to the United States. These donations and the Government exhibit should be placed in a permanent building.

Our electoral system the President believes should be revised in a thorough manner, and says: "The compulsory support of free schools, and the disfranchisement of all who cannot read or write the English language, after a fixed probation, would meet my hearty approval." Foreigners who do not take enough interest to learn the language and study our institutions and laws should not be allowed the right of voting. This is a reform worth effecting. The San Domingo annexation is still a favorite theme, and the President labors to impress his views for the last time upon the people and their representatives The paramount question of the situation of the South is not brought forward, it being understood that a supplemental message will take it up.

MR. MOODY ON CHURCH FAIRS AND DANCING.

Are not church fairs, festivals, lotteries, etc., wrong?

"I am opposed to them entirely. I believe that they bring contention into our churches. I never knew of one in my life but lost spiritually by it. Some people say to me, 'You used to have them in your own church.' Well, friends I have got my eyes open. Money can be raised a great deal easier. It is a good deal better to go to a man squarely and tell him you want money than to sell him for $1.50 something that is worth only 50 cents. And the idea of holding out to young men the inducement to come because there are some pretty women there! It is degenerating this Western country to an alarming extent. The idea of allowing the prettiest girl to be kissed for twenty-five cents, and of having our daughters sell cigars to young men! Money got in that way I don't believe will do us any good.

When a congregation believe in and practice dancing, what would you do?

I would give them something better. A great many ministers scold the young people about card-playing and dancing, but if you get them really interested in the Lord's work they won't have any taste or desire for them. Don't lay down rules, but great principles. If you only show them something better they will take the better thing. If you can't give them something better of course they will dance. If there is a dancing Christian in the house, and his conscience troubles him, just give Christ the benefit of the doubt. I have gone on that rule for years, and he has always blessed me. A man down in Northfield was troubled about tobacco; he gave Christ the benefit of the doubt, and never planted any more. We could not conceive of such a thing as St. Paul dancing or playing cards.

The above are the Chicago Tribune's reports of Mr. Moody's answers to questions in the great Tabernacle. They evince, we need not say, great practical judgment and good sense, as well as insight into the spirit of the Christian religion as contra-distinguished from the spirit of the world.

CYNOSURE SUPPLEMENT.

We call the attention of our readers to the Cynosure Supplement which accompanies this number. Besides valuable information about the progress of this reform it contains the popular representation of "Masonic secrets" termed "Freemasonry at a Glance." We think it a good campaign document and print 10,000 extra copies. Price $5.00 per 1,000; 50 cents per 100 by express and 75 cents per 100 postpaid.

We also have a supply of October

26th Cynosures containing "Freemasonry at a Glance," at $2.00 per 100 by express and $3.00 per 100 by mail.

See the offer to Clubs.

—The Michigan State Convention at Hastings last week was a very successful meeting. The attendance of working delegates was large and full of hope. A subscription to carry on the State work for the year was taken, amounting to $450, a considerable sum being paid on the spot. Elder Barlow's work as State lecturer has received high commendation, and he will begin another year with new consecration to it and a new inspiration, caught from the hopeful spirit of this meeting. Prof. C. A. Blanchard attended and spoke in one or two evening sessions. His efforts were invaluable in helping the Convention to a successful issue.

The Secretary and General Agent expected to reach Pittsburgh this week to arrange for a full course of expositions by Past Master Ronayne in that city, beginning on Monday next, Dec. 18th. He has been with the New Hampshire friends at their State meeting, of which we expect a report next week.

—Past Master Ronayne began a course of lectures and expositions in Lorain County, O., about two weeks ago. He was expecting to be fully occupied until the Indiana State Convention, Dec. 27th.

—Have you sent your CENTENNIAL RENEWAL? The opportunity will soon be past.

—In a London paper we have lately marked how the secret orders are regarded in England from one or two instances. In an exhibition of "models" or figures representing the royal family and numerous celebrities the enterprising manager advertises the Prince of Wales as the "M. W. G. M. of Freemasons of England." In the next column is a reported speech of Hon. W. E. Forster on Turkish affairs, on returning from the East. He had met two or three Bulgarian chiefs who had admitted him into their confidence. He says: "I suppose they would be men composing what Lord Beaconsfield would call the secret societies. Well, for members of secret societies they were exceedingly frank in telling their secrets to a stranger." A remark that sounds like pettifogging for the orders, and to break the force of Disraeli's wonderful statement.

—The first of a series of two or three articles on Christmas, which is reprinted from the Evangelical Repository, appears on the third page. They will be found to fairly cover the whole ground of this question and are a valuable addition to the literature of true reform—for Christ and his Gospel in its simplicity and truth and power as opposed to the formality and folly of human religious inventions.

—Bro. Cressinger of Ohio, whose name appears in the list of lecturers, had a rather unusual experience in his Centennial trip. Always ready for work in the good cause, he circulated anti-lodge publications on the train, without counting on such a Masonic attack as was experienced. It seems that a Masonic editor from Michigan marked the work with evil eye, but instead of meeting Bro. C. and rebuking him in a manly way, if he believed him doing an evil work, he sneaked away to his newspaper den and published for his readers a paragraph full of untruth told in a very mean way The only effect on the honest-minded of his readers, doubtless, was to pity an editor of so small a soul, and to believe in the goodness of Bro. Cressinger's work which could draw upon it such abuse.

—One of our friends a while since expressed his alarm at our advocating the election of Charles Francis Adams for Governor of Massachusetts, and in an insulting way. We felt justified in remaining indifferent to such an objector, but Isaac Stearns, an aged friend, and an Anti-masonic editor in the "elder day" writes of his doubts of Mr. Adams. We do not withdraw what has been heretofore said in his favor. When he consented to be voted for, of course every one knew that he became liable to the abuse and scurrilities busily banded about in election times. Of all these the attack of Blaine was the only one worth notice. This, according to Blaine's interpretation, was a sympathy for Southern slavery shown by Mr. Adams in Congress in 1860. We have not seen the record, but from several circumstances have little faith in Mr. Blaine's account; because: It was based on important statements which should have been known years ago, and not kept to poison the weapons of a personal attack like Blaine's; Mr. Adams was immediately after that time given a post of the highest responsibility in England, which showed Pres. Lincoln's confidence in him; Blaine as a Knight Templar and an unscrupulous man would use any effort to destroy the political prospects of such an opponent as Mr. Adams. In the recent election troubles leading Republican journals have asked that he and Wm. M. Everts go to New Orleans as a committee of arbitration; which does not look like a loss of confidence in him, even by Mr. Blaine's party.

—A few weeks since the declaration of Dr. Taylor, the new editor of the Christian at Work, that he should be "unsparing in his opposition" to everything opposed to the Gospel of Christ, was noticed in connection with an editorial which it would be difficult to read as anything but an exaltation of the lodge in contrast with the church. That editorial was published last week in an article by Bro. Mattoon. We have since learned directly from the office of the Christian at Work that both its editors stand by the sentiments of that editorial. We hope they will not have anything more, good or bad, to say about secret societies till they are better informed.

Religious Intelligence

—The testimony of many of the converted drunkards at the revival meetings here is that they were great users of tobacco, and that the grace of God in cleansing them of sins took away also the craving for the nauseous weed. It is interesting in this connection to know that there is an English Anti-Tobacco Society which propose a Parliamentary inquiry into the correctness of the opinion expressed by physicians that the increasing smoking and chewing of tobacco is one of the sources of physical deterioration of the factory population, and also into the practical operation of the Swiss law which prohibits the use of tobacco by boys.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, reports in his last paper that he is still away from the office engaged in the revival work at Varick, N. Y., where a great turning to God has been manifested, and thirty to forty had found Christ when he wrote.

—The latest official statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church show 11 bishops, 83 annual conferences, 11,361 itinerant preachers, 12,509 local preachers, 1,613,560 lay members, 15,634 church edifices, 5,077 parsonages; value of church property, $78,637,015. The increase of members during the last year was 36,000, and for the last ten years 581,376. The General Missionary Committee of the Methodist church have made their annual appropriations for foreign missions. They have made a general reduction of from $1,000 to $3,000 in each district. The whole sum appropriated was $525,000.

—Rev. Brooke Herford, a Unitarian preacher lately from England has been trying to preach down what Moody preaches up. He began with the sermon on the Blood of the Atonement, and has announced other topics such as "Perseverance of Sinners as well as of Saints," "Original Goodness as True as Original Sin," etc. On a recent Sabbath Rev. J. W. Bain preached, in the United Presbyterian church of which he is pastor, a sound discourse which might be entitled, "Hear Christ, not Herford, on the Blood."

—Dr. R. S. Storrs, Jr. of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, lately preached a sermon commemorating the 30th anniversary of his pastorate. During these thirty years 1,600 persons have united with the church. There are now 800 members, only twenty of whom were in the church when Dr. Storrs took charge of it. The contributions for missionary and church purposes amount to $300,000.

News of the Week

—A collision occurred on the N. Y. Central road near Buffalo Saturday night, in which several were injured and the express agent burned to death. Several cars were burned with their contents at a loss of about $1,000,000.—By a collision on the Erie road the same day a passenger was burned to death.—At Petrolia, Pa., a wagon-load of nitroglycerine exploded, killing two men.

—The President sent to Congress last week, without comment, the report of Senator Sherman and other Republicans who visited New Orleans to look after election reports. The report contained a vast amount of evidence of the outrages upon the colored people of Louisiana, and as it was of necessity read and referred, the Democrats were enraged, and even threatened impeachment. —The Senate is engaged with propositions to amend our election laws. The one most urged is to give the counting of electoral votes to the Supreme Court instead of Congress.

—Dec. 1st, on the Centennial Grounds, the 24 buildings belonging to the Board of Finance, and the dozen structures of varying dimensions belonging to individuals or firms, were exposed at public auction. The total-cost value of the property offered was estimated in round figures at two and one-half millions of dollars, and the actual figures realized from the sales were $296,160. Machinery Hall, Memorial Hall and and Horticultural Hall not being in the list of properties owned by the Finance Board, were not included in the list. The sale began with the Main Building. The building cost about $1,600,000. The only bids made for it were one of $200,000, by R. J. Dobbins, and one of $250,000, by John S. Morton, who made the bid on behalf of the Permanent Exhibition Company. It was knocked down to Mr. Morton amid the general applause of the audience. The Permanent Exhibition Company also purchased Judges' Hall for $1,500. It originally cost $30,000. The other buildings were sold at a remarkably low figure.

TIME.

"Ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."—James iv. 14.

Mi-sh pen Time, copesmate of ugly Night,
S...ft, subtle post, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of Youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, Sin's packhorse, Virtue's snare;
Thou nurseet all, and murderest all that are.
Why worknest thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age,
Would purchase thee a thousand, thousand friends;
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends.

—Shakespeare.

Youth is not rich in Time: it may be poor;
Part with it as with money, sparing; pay
No moment, but in purchase of its worth;
And what it's worth ask Death-beds; they can tell.

—Young.

There is given
Unto the things of Earth, which Time hath bent,
A spirit's feeling, and where he hath leant
His hand but broke his Scythe, there is a power
And magic.

—Byron.

Still on it creeps,
Each little moment at another's heels,
Till hours, days, years, and ages are made up
Of such small parts as these, and men look back,
Worn and bewildered, wond'ring how it is.
Thou trav'lest like a ship in the wide ocean,
Which hath no bounding shore to mark its progress.

—Joanna Baillie.

Time hurries on
With a resistless, unremitting stream,
Yet treads more softly than e'er did midnight thief,
That slides his hand under the miser's pillow,
And carries off his prize.

—Blair.

Time, as he passes us, has a dove's wing,
Unsoiled and swift, and of a silken sound.

—Cooper.

Transient is the smile of fate!
A little rule, a little sway,
A sunbeam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have Between the cradle and the grave.

—Dyer.

"IF THE LORD WILL."

Nothing earthly that we trust in is certain—everything is full of change. Trouble breaks upon us like a tempest. Snares beset our wayward feet. Arrows are shot at us from secrecy and darkness. Temptations pursue us on every hand. Plans fail; promises are broken; friends prove treacherous; death riots; graves yawn; sorrows surge around us;—and all things speak to us of transient pleasures, uncertain possessions, fleeting moments and vanishing lives.

What, then, is our consolation, our refuge, our trust? What is our security in days of trouble, our comfort in the dark and evil time? Upon what rock can we build our hopes? Into what harbor can we fly for refuge from the storms? How can we stay our souls, when pressed by present troubles and harassed by the fears of coming ills?

"If the Lord will!" Here is our security. In his supreme control we find confidence and strength. His will is done, and his will is "good will to men." No losses, crosses, troubles, nor cares can come upon us without his notice or his will. The very winds are in his fists, and the hearts of kings are in his hand. His will prolongs our lives, or cuts short our brief and bitter day. His will directs our way. His eyes are in every place, and his eyelids try the children of men. He chooses our work; he directs our way; he determines our habitations, and our times are in his hands. Nothing can harm while he protects, nothing surprise us while he keeps watch.

Under the shadow of his wings we repose. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to his purpose. We bow to his appointments, and accept the arrangements of his providence without a doubt or fear. Whatever God wills is right, and just, and good, and gracious; and our hearts take comfort in this thought.

"If the Lord will," is our constant proviso. In sorrow or joy, in trial or tribulation, we refer all things to his will. And in the midst of the wreck of blighted hopes; amid withered joys, and new-made graves, and sore and bitter trials, we bow to all the rulings of God's hand, and say; "The will of the Lord be done." What to-morrow shall bring us we know not; we have our own plans and purposes, but all, "If the Lord will." We cannot unveil the future, nor plan a life which God his planned before us, and for us. God hangs over our eyes that veil which shuts us up with Him and with the present hour. He asks of us present obedience, present devotion, present trust. He will not talk with us of to-morrow, nor make bargains with us for the years to come. To-day he calls us, invites us, helps us, loves us, saves us. To-day we yield ourselves to him for present service, and look to him for present help. We have no promises or vows to make.—enough of these have been broken already,—but now, this moment, let us devote ourselves in present consecration, present obedience, present submission to the will of Him who bought us with his own blood, and whose will, accomplished in us, shall forever sanctify and save the souls which he hath redeemed.

If our present be but right, our future need not concern us nor alarm us. The God of to-day is the God of eternity. The Christ who loves us now will love us to the end. The hand that uplifts us now is strong to uphold, mighty to save forevermore. The rock of our foundation shall never totter beneath the assaults of death or hell. Years may roll on, all things earthly may change, and fleet, and fade, but the eternal God is our refuge, and underneath us are the everlasting arms.

"If the Lord will." We rest in that will, expecting the fulness of its unfolding, and accepting all that it shall bring to us. And, scattered, tried, afflicted, and cast down, we look forward to those scenes of rest which await the redeemed of God, when his WILL shall be done in earth as it is in heaven, We know what is before his people then, for he hath said: "Father, I WILL that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovest me before the foundation of the world."—The Christian.

INDIANS OF ALASKA.

The Indians about here, and most of those in the far Northwest, exhibit, if not more intelligence, at least a greater tendency towards civilization than in many other parts of North America. Their skill in various kinds of work is astonishing. The gentleman in whose house I am lodging has a large spoon—or, from its size, it might be termed a dipper—made of the horn of the mountain sheep, adorned with quaint and grotesque carving, and beautifully inlaid with mother-of-pearl of different colors. I was prepared to pay a very liberal price for it; but the owner said he would not part with it on any consideration. I have made a sketch of its beautiful form and designs. The Indians seem very willing, or even glad to work, when they can get anything to do that will bring them in a little money, such as assisting to load or unload the steamers. Most of them here dress like white people; and many of the women dress very neatly and modestly, although not a few of them show a rather excessive fondness for bright colors. The Aleoots (or Aleuts), occupying the Aleutian Islands, belonging to Alaska, are remarkable for their gentleness; and the religious sentiment in them is said to be very strongly developed. Great crimes, such as murder, are almost unknown among them. A gentleman who has been on this coast for many years, told me he had never heard of a case of murder among the Aleoots for twenty or thirty years, except one, where a man out of jealousy killed a girl he was in love with. An attempt was made to send him to San Francisco to be tried. He was quite willing to go, and did not deny his guilt; but something happened to the vessel on which he was to be conveyed, so that he went back among his own people. They refused to have any intercourse with him. At length, in despair, he put an end to his own life.

There has been lately a remarkable religious movement among the Indians near Fort Simpson, in British Columbia. Some of them have come up to Wrangel, and begun meetings here. I have attended some of the meetings, and have never been more impressed or affected in any religious assemblies than in these. The preaching is chiefly in the Indian language; the simple uneffected earnestness of the speaker might have served as a model for any Christian minister. The whole conduct of the congregation was in accordance, every countenance denoting a deep interest in the words of the preacher. Some of the Indians shed tears as they listened to the wonderful story of God's love to mankind. The minister took for his text (the first time that I heard him). "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," (John iii. 16). Everything was simple and natural; there was no attempt to work themselves or one another up into an artificial excitement. The conduct even of the children was most appropriate, beautiful and touching, and I confess it was almost impossible for me to repress my tears, especially when I considered how wonderfully Christianity is adapted to men in every condition—to the lowest as well as to the highest. It is a religion that appeals chiefly to the heart; and in this respect there is little difference between the various classes of men, however much they may differ in intellectual culture. It is, indeed, a melancholy truth that very often while the intellect is assiduously cultivated, the heart becomes withered and cold.

I ought to state that although the preaching was usually in Indian, the text was given first in English, and then explained in Indian. Portions of hymns in English were sung by nearly all the congregation. Some of the Indian voices were very rich and sweet; and it was impossible for me not to believe that music in this way is capable of accomplishing a great deal in softening and elevating the character.
